Now is Salomon the ſecond time crowned King of Iſrael, and now in his owne right (as formerly in his fathers) ſits peaceably vpon the Throne of the Lord; His awe and power come on faſter then his yeeres; Enuie and ambition where it is once kindled, may ſooner be hid in the aſhes, then quite put out; Adonijah yet hangs after his old hopes; He remembers how ſweet he found the name of a King; and now hath laid a new plot for the ſetting vp of his crackt title: He would make the bed a ſtep to the throne: His old complices are ſure enough: His part would gather much ſtrength, if he might inioy Abiſhag the relect of his father, to wife; If it were not the Iewiſh faſhion (as is pretended) that a Kings widow ſhould mary none but a King; yet certainly the power both of the alliance, and friendſhip of a Queene muſt needes not a little aduance his purpoſe: The crafty riuall dare not either moue the ſuit to Salomon, or effect the mariage without him; but would cunningly vndermine the ſonne by the ſuit of that mother, whoſe ſuit had vndermined him. The weaker veſſells are commonly vſed in the moſt dangerous ſuggeſtions of euill.

Bathſheba was ſo wiſe a woman that ſome of her counſels are canonized for diuine, yet ſhe ſaw not the depth of this drift of Adonijah; therefore ſhe both entertaines the ſuit, and moues it: But what euer were the intent of the ſuitor, could ſhe chooſe but ſee the vnlawfulneſſe of ſo inceſtuous a match? It is not long ſince ſhee ſaw her late husband Dauid abominating the bed of thoſe his Concubines, that had beene touched by his ſonne Abſalom; and can ſhe hold it lawfull that his ſonne Adonijah ſhould climb vp to the bed of his fathers wife? Sometimes euen the beſt eyes are dimme and diſcerne not thoſe things which are obuious to weaker ſights: Or whether did not Bathſheba well ſee the fouleneſſe of the ſuit, and yet in compaſſion of Adonijahs late repulſe (wherein ſhe was the chiefe agent) and in a deſire to make him amends for the leſſe of the Kingdome, ſhe yeelds euen thus to gratifie him. It is an iniurious weakeneſſe to bee drawne vpon any by-reſpects to the furtherance of faulty ſuits, of vnlawfull actions.

No ſooner doth Bathſheba come in place, then Salomon her ſoone riſes from his chaire of State and meets her and bowes to her, and ſets her on his right hand; as not ſo remembring himſelfe to be a King, that he ſhould forget he was a ſonne. No outward dignity can take away the rights and obligations of nature; Had Bathſheba beene as meane as Salomon was mighty, ſhe had caried away this honor from a gracious ſonne: Yet for all theſe due complements Bathſheba goes away with a deniall; Reuerence ſhe ſhall haue, ſhe ſhall not haue a condeſcent.

In the acts of Magiſtracie, all regards of naturall relations muſt giue way; That which ſhe propounded as a ſmall requeſt, is now, after a generall and confuſed ingagement reiected as vnreaſonable. It were pity wee ſhould bee heard in all our ſuits. Bathſheba makes a petition againſt herſelfe, and knowes it not; her ſafetie and life depends vpon Salomons raign, yet ſhe vnwittingly moues for the aduancement of Adonijah.

Salomon

Salomon was too dutifull to checke his mother, and too wiſe to yeeld to her: In vnfit ſupplications wee are moſt heard when we are repelled. Thus doth our God many times anſwer our prayers with mercifull denialls: and moſt bleſſeth vs in croſſing our deſires.

Wiſe Salomon doth not find himſelfe perplexed with the ſcruple of his promiſe; he that had ſaid Aske on, for I will not ſay thee nay, can now ſware, God doe ſo to mee, and more alſo, if Adonijah haue not ſpoken this word againſt his owne life. His promiſe was according to his ſuppoſition; his ſuppoſition was of no other then of a ſuit, honeſt, reaſonable, expedient; now he holds himſelfe free from that grant, wherein there was at once both ſin and danger. No man can be intangled with generall words againſt his owne iuſt and honeſt intentions.

The policies of wicked men befoole them at laſt; this interceſſion hath vndone Adonijah, and in ſtead of the Throne haſtens his graue: The ſword of Benaiah puts an end to that dangerous riuality. Ioab and Abiathar ſtill held Champerty with Adonijah, Their hand was both in his claime of the Kingdome, and in the ſuit of Abiſhag; There are crimes wherein there are no acceſſories, ſuch is this of treaſon. Abiathar may thanke his burden that he liues; Had he not borne the Arke of the Lord before Dauid, he had not now caried his head vpon his ſhoulders; Had he not been afflicted with Dauid, he had periſhed with Adonijah; now though he were, in his owne merit, a man of death, yet he ſhall ſuruiue his partners, Get thee to Anathoth vnto thine owne fields. The Prieſthood of Abiathar, as it aggrauated his crime, ſo it ſhall preſerue his life: Such honor haue good Princes giuen to the Miniſters of the Sanctuarie, that their very coat hath beene defence enough againſt the ſword of iuſtice, how much more ſhould it be of proofe againſt the contempt of baſe perſons?

Beſides his function, reſpect is had to his ſufferings, The father and brethren of Abiathar where ſlaine for Danids ſake, therefore for Dauids ſake Abiathar (though worthy of death) ſhall liue; He had beene now a dead man, if he had not beene formerly afflicted; Thus doth our good God deale with vs; by the rod he preuents the ſword, and therefore will not condemne vs for our ſins, becauſe we haue ſuffered. If Abiathar doe not forfeit his life, yet his office he ſhall, he muſt change Ieruſalem for Anathoth, and the Prieſthood for a retired priuacie. It was fourſcore yeares agoe ſince the ſentence of iudgement was denounced againſt the houſe of Eli; now doth it come to execution; This iuſt quarrell againſt Abiathar (the laſt of that line) ſhall make good the threatned iudgement: The wickedneſſe of Elies houſe was neither purged by ſacrifice, nor obliterated by time: If God pay ſlowly, yet he prayes ſure: Delay of moſt certaine puniſhment is neither any hindrance to his iuſtice, nor any comfort to our miſeries.

The Execution of IOAB, and SHIMEI.

ABiathar ſhall liue though he ſerue not; It is in the power of Princes to remit (at leaſt) thoſe puniſhments which attend the breach of humane Lawes; good reaſon they ſhould haue power to diſpence with the wrongs done to their owne perſons. The newes of Adonijahs death, and Abiathars remouall cannot but affright Ioab; who now runnes to Gibeon, and takes ſanctuary in the Tabernacle of God; all his hope of defence is in the hornes of the Altar. Fond Ioab, hadſt thou formerly ſought for counſell from the Tabernacle, thou hadſt not now needed to ſeeke to it for refuge; if thy deuotions had not beene wanting to that Altar, thou hadſt not needed it for a ſhelter: It is the faſhion of our fooliſh preſumption to looke for protection, where wee haue not cared to yeeld obedience.

Euen a Ioab clings faſt to Gods Altar in his extremity, which in his ruffe and welfare he

he regarded not; The worſt men would be glad to make vſe of Gods ordinances, for their aduantage; Neceſſity will driue the moſt profane and lawleſſe man to God; But what doe theſe bloody hands touching the holy Altar of God? Miſerable Ioab, what helpe canſt thou expect from that ſacred pile: Thoſe hornes that were ſprinkled with the blood of beaſts, abhorre to be touched by the blood of men, that Altar was for the expiation of ſin by blood; not for the protection of the ſin of blood. If Adonijah fled thither and eſcaped, it is murder that perſues thee more then conſpiracie; God hath no ſanctuary for a wilfull Homicide.

Yet ſuch reſpect doth Benaiah giue to that holy place, that his ſword is vnwilling to touch him that touches the Altar: Thoſe hornes ſhall put off death from the time; and giue protraction of the execution though not preſeruation of life; How ſweet is life euen to thoſe who haue been prodigall of the blood of others, that Ioab ſhifts thus to hold it but ſome few houres? Benaiah returnes with Ioabs anſwer, in ſtead of his head; Nay, but I will dy here; as not daring to vnſheath his ſword againſt a man ſheltered in Gods tabernacle, without a new commiſſion. Yong Salomon is ſo well acquainted with the Law of God, in ſuch a caſe, that he ſticks not at the ſentence: he knew that God had enacted, If a man came preſumptuouſly vpon his neighbour, to ſlay him with guile, thou ſhalt take him from mine Altar, that he may die: He knew Ioabs murders had not been more preſumptuous, the guiltfull, and therefore he ſends Benaiah to take away the offender, both from God, and men, from the Altar, and the world.

No ſubiect had merited more then Ioab; When proclamation was made in Iſrael, that who euer ſhould ſmite the Iebuſites firſt, he ſhould be the Chiefe and Captaine; Ioab was the man; When Dauid built ſome part of Ieruſalem, Ioab built the reſt; ſo as Ieruſalem owes it ſelfe to Ioab, both for recouery, and reparation; No man held ſo cloſe to Dauid; no man was more intent to the weale of Iſrael, none ſo ſucceſſefull in victories; yet now is he cald to reckon for his old ſinnes, and muſt repay blood to Amaſa, and Abner: It is not in the power of all our deſerts to buy off one ſinne, either with God or man: where life is ſo deepely forfaited, it admits of no redemption.

The honeſt ſimplicity of thoſe times knew not of any infamy in the execution of iuſtice. Benaiah, who was the great Marſhall vnder Salomon, thinkes not his fingers defiled with that fatall ſtroke. It is a fooliſh niceneſſe to put more ſhame in the doing of iuſtice, then in the violating of it.

In one act Salomon hath approued himſelfe both a good Magiſtrate, and a good ſonne, fulfilling at once the will of a father and the charge of God; concluding vpon this iuſt execution, that, vpon Dauid, and vpon his ſeed, and vpon his houſe, and vpon his Throne, there ſhall be peace for euer from the Lord; and inferring, that without this there could haue beene no peace.

Blood is a reſtleſſe ſuitor, and will not leaue clamoring for iudgement, till the mouth bee ſtopped with reuenge. In this caſe fauour to the offender is cruelty to the fauourer.

Now hath Ioab paid all his arerages by the ſword of Benaiah; there is no ſuit againſt his corps; that hath the honor of a buriall fit for a Peere of Iſrael, for the neere cozen to the King. Death puts an end to all quarrells; Salomon ſtrikes off the skore, when God is ſatisfied; The reuenge that ſuruiues death and will not be ſhut vp in the Coffin, is barbarous, and vnbeſeeming true Iſraelites.

Onely Shimei remaines vpon the file; his courſe is next, yet ſo, as that it ſhall be in his owne liberty to haſten his end; Vpon Dauids remiſſion, Shimei dwels ſecurely in Bahurim, a town of the Tribe of Beniamin; Doubtleſſe, when he ſaw ſo round iuſtice done vpon Adonijah, and Ioab, his guilty heart could not think Salomons meſſage portended ought but his execution; and now he cannot but be well pleaſed with ſo eaſie conditions, of dwelling at Ieruſalem, and not paſſing ouer the brooke Kidron; What more delightful place could he chooſe to liue in, thē that city, which was the glory to the whole earth? What more pleaſing bounds could he wiſh then the ſweet bankes of Kidron? Ieruſalem could be no priſon to him, whiles it was a Paradiſe to his betters;

and if he had a desire to take fresh ayre, hee had the space of six furlongs to walke from the city to the brooke, Hee could not complaine to bee so delectably confined; And besides, thrice euery yeere he might bee sure to see all his friends without stirring his foot.

Wise Salomon whiles he cared to seeme not too seuere an exactor of that, which his father had remitted; prudently laies insensible twigs for so foule an offender; Besides the old grudge, no doubt Salomon saw cause to suspect the fidelitie of Shimei; as a man who was euer knowne to be hollow to the house of Dauid; the obscuritie of a Country life would easily afford him more safe opportunities of secret mischiefe; Many eyes shall watch him in the citie; he cannot looke out vnseene, he cannot whisper vnheard: Vpon no other termes shall hee enioy his life, which the least straying shall forfait.

Shimei feeles no paine in this restraint; How many Nobles of Israel doe that for pleasure, which he doth vpon command? Three yeers hath he liued within compasse; limited both by Salomons charge and his owne oath: It was still in his power (notwithstanding Dauids Caueat) to haue laid downe his hoare-head in the graue, without blood: The iust God infatuates those whom he meanes to plague: Two of Shimeies seruants are fled to Gath; and now hee saddles his Asse and is gone to fetch them backe; Either (he thinkes) this word of Salomon is forgotten, or in the multitude of greater affayres, not heeded; or this so small an occurrence will not come to his eare: Couetousnesse and presumption of impunitie are the destruction of many a soule; Shimei seekes his seruants, and loses himselfe; How many are there who crie out of this folly, and yet imitate it: These earthly things either are our seruants or should be; how commonly doe we see men run out of the bounds, set by Gods Law, to hunt after them, till their soules incurre a fearefull iudgment?

Princes haue thousands of eies & eares: If Shimei will for more secresie saddle his own Asse, and take (as is like) the benefit of night, for his passage; his iourney cannot be hid from Salomon; How warie had those men need to be which are obnoxious? Without delay is Shimei complained of, conuented, charged with violation both of the oath of God, and the iniunction of Salomon; and that all these might appeare to be but an occasion of that punishment, whose cause was more remote, now is all that old venome laid before him, which his malice had long since spit at God annointed: Thou knowest all the wickednesse, whereto thine heart is priuie, that thou didst to Dauid my father.

Had this old tallie beene stricken off; yet could not Shimei haue pleaded ought for his life: For, had he sayd, Let not my Lord the King be thus mortally displeased for so small an offence: Who euer died for passing ouer Kidron? What man is the worse for my harmelesse iourney? It had soone been returned; If the act be small, yet the circumstances are deadly: The Commands of Soueraigne authoritie make the sleightest duties weighty; If the iourney be harmelesse, yet not the disobedience: It is not for subiects to poyse the Princes charge in the scales of their weake constructions; but they must suppose it euer to be of such importance, as is pretended by the Commander: Besides the precept, here was a mutuall adiuration; Shimei swore not to goe; Salomon swore his death if he went; the one oath must be reuenged, the other must be kept: If Shimei were false in offending, Salomon will be iust in punishing. Now therefore, that which Abishai the sonne of Zeruiah wished to haue done in the greeneneſse of the wound, and was repelled; after long festering Benaiah is commanded to doe: The stones that Shimei threw at Dauid strucke not so deepe, as Benaiahs sword; The tongue that cursed the Lords anointed hath paid the head to boot. Vengeance against rebels may sleepe, it cannot die: A sure, if late, iudgement attends those that dare lift vp either the hand or tongue against the sacred persons of Gods Vice-gerents. How much lesse will the God of heauen suffer vnreuenged the insolencies, and blasphemies against his owne diuine Maiestie? It is a fearefull word, hee should not be iust, if hee should hold these guiltlesse.

Salomons

After ſo many meſſages and proofes of grace, Salomon begins doubtfully both for his match, and for his deuotion: If Pharaohs daughter were not a Proſelyte, his earely choyce was (beſides vnwarrantable) dangerous: The high places not onely ſtood, but were frequented, both by the people, and King; I doe not finde Dauid climbing vp thoſe miſ-hallowed hills, in an affection of the varietie of Altars; Salomon doth ſo, and yet loues the Lord, and is loued of God againe: Such is the mercy of our God, that he will not ſuffer our well-meant weakneſſes to bereaue vs of his fauours: he rather pities, then plagues vs for the infirmities of vpright hearts.

Gibeon was well worthy to be the chiefe, yea the onely high place; There was the allowed Altar of God, there was the Tabernacle, though (as then) ſeuered from the Arke, thither did yong Salomon goe vp; and, as deſiring to begin his raigne with God, there he offers no leſſe then a thouſand ſacrifices.

Salomon worſhips God by day; God appeares to Salomon by night; Well may we looke to enioy God, when we haue ſerued him; The night cannot but bee happie whoſe day hath beene holy.

It was no vnuſuall courſe with God to reueale himſelfe vnto his ſeruants by dreams; So did he here to Salomon; who ſaw more with his eyes ſhut, then euer they could ſee open, euen him that was inuiſible: The good King had offred vnto God a thouſand burnt ſacrifices, and now God offered him his option, Aske what I ſhall giue thee: He whoſe the beaſts are on a thouſand mountaines graciouſly accepts a ſmall returne of his owne. It ſtands not with the munificence of a bountifull God to bee indebted to his creature, we cannot giue him ought vnrecompenſed: There is no way wherein we can be ſo liberall to our ſelues, as by giuing to the poſſeſſor of all things. And art thou ſtill, O God, leſſe free vnto vs thy meaner ſeruants vnder the Goſpell? Haſt thou not ſaid, Whatſoeuer ye ſhall aske the Father in my name, it ſhall bee giuen you? Onely giue vs grace not to be wanting vnto thee, and we know thou canſt not ſuffer any thing to be wanting vnto vs.

The night followes the temper of the day; and the heart ſo vſeth to ſleepe, as it wakes: Had not the thoughts of Salomon beene intent vpon wiſdome by day, he had not made it his ſuit in his dreame: There needs no leiſure of deliberation: The heart was ſo fore-ſtalled with the loue, and admiration of wiſdome, that not abiding the leaſt motion of a competition, it faſtens on that grace it had longed for: Giue vnto thy ſeruant an vnderſtanding heart, to iudge thy people. Had not Salomon beene wiſe before, he had not knowne the worth of wiſdome, he had not preferred it in his deſires; The dung-hill cockes of the World cannot know the price of this pearle; thoſe that haue it, know that all other excellencies are but traſh, and rubbiſh vnto it. Salomon was a great King, and ſaw that he had power enough, but withall, hee found that royaltie, without wiſdome, was no other then eminent diſhonour; There is no trade of life whereto there belongs not a peculiar wiſdome; without which there is nothing but a tedious vnprofitableneſſe; much more to the higheſt, and buſieſt vocation, the regiment of men: As God hath no reaſon to giue his beſt fauours vnasked; ſo hath hee no will to with-hold them where they are asked.

He that in his cradle had the title of Beloued of God, is now beloued more in the throne for the loue & deſire of wiſdom; this ſoile could neuer haue borne this fruit alone; Salomon

mon could not ſo much as haue dreamed of wiſdome, if God had not put it into him; and now God takes the ſuit ſo well, as if he were beholden to his creature for wiſhing the beſt to it ſelfe: and becauſe Salomon hath asked what he ſhould, hee ſhall now receiue both what he asked, and what he asked not: Riches and honour ſhall bee giuen him into the match. So doth God loue a good choyce, that he recompences it with ouer-giuing: Could we but firſt ſeeke the Kingdome of God and his righteouſneſſe, all theſe earthly things ſhould bee ſuper-added to vs; Had Salomon made wealth his boone, he had failed both of riches and wiſdome; now he askes the beſt, and ſpeeds of all; They are in a faire way of happineſſe that can pray well; It was no diſ-comfort to Salomon, that he awaked and found it a dreame; for he knew this dreame was diuine, and oracular; and he already found in his firſt waking, the reall performance of what was promiſed him ſleeping: Such illumination did he ſenſibly finde in all the roomes of his heart, as if God had now giuen him a new ſoule: No maruell if Salomon now returning from the Tabernacle to the Arke, teſtified his ioy and thankfulneſſe by burnt-offerings, and peace offerings, and publique feaſtings; The heart that hath found in it ſelfe the liuely teſtimonies of Gods preſence, and fauour, cannot conteyne it ſelfe from outward expreſſions.

God likes not to haue his gifts lie dead where hee hath conferred them; Iſrael ſhall ſoone witneſſe they haue a King enlightened from heauen; in whom wiſdome did not ſtay for heires, did not admit of any parallel in his predeceſſors. The all-wiſe God will finde occaſions to draw forth thoſe graces to vſe, and light, which he hath beſtowed on man; Two Harlots come before young Salomon with a difficult plea; It is not like the Princes eare was the firſt that heard this complaint; there was a ſubordinate courſe of iuſtice for the determination of theſe meaner incidences: the hardneſſe of this deciſion brought the matter, through all the benches of inferior iudicature, to the Tribunall of Salomon; The very Iſraelitiſh Harlots were not ſo vnnaturall as ſome now adayes that counterfait honeſty; Theſe ſtriue for the fruit of their wombe, ours to put thē off; One ſon is yet aliue, two mothers contend for him. The children were alike for feature, for age; the mothers were alike for reputation: here can be no euidence from others eyes; Whether's now is the liuing Child, and whether's is the dead? Had Salomon gone about to wring forth the truth by tortures, he had perhaps plagued the innocent, and added paine to the miſery of her loſſe; the weaker had been guilty, and the more able to beare, had carried away both the child and the victorie: The countenance of either of the mothers bewrayed an equalitie of paſſion; Sorrow poſſeſſed the one, for the ſonne ſhe had loſt; and the other, for the ſonne ſhee was in danger to leeſe: Both were equally peremptory, and importunate in their claime; It is in vaine to thinke that the true part can bee diſcerned by the vehemence of their challenge: Falſhood is oft-times more clamorous then truth; No witneſſes can bee produced; They two dwelt apart vnder one roofe: and if ſome neighbours haue ſeene the children at their birth, and circumciſion, yet how little difference, how much change is there in the fauour of infants? how doth death alter more confirmed lines?

The impoſſibilitie of proofe makes the guiltie more confident, more impudent; the true mother pleads that her child was taken away at midnight by the other; but in her ſleepe; ſhe ſaw it not, ſhee felt it not; and if all her ſenſes could haue witneſſed it, yet, here was but the affirmation of the one, againſt the deniall of the other, which in perſons alike credible doe but counterpoiſe. What is there now to leade the Iudge, ſince there is nothing either in the act, or circumſtances, or perſons, or plea, or euidence that might ſway the ſentence? Salomon well ſaw that when all outward proofes failed, there was an inward affection, which if it could be fetcht out, would certainely bewray the true mother; hee knew ſorrow might more eaſily bee diſſembled then naturall loue; both ſorrowed for their owne; both could not loue, one, as theirs: To draw forth then this true proofe of motherhood, Salomon calls for a ſword: Doubtleſſe, ſome of the wiſer hearers ſmiled vpon each other; and thought in themſelues, What, will the young King cut theſe knottie cauſes in peeces? Will he diuide iuſtice with edge tooles? will hee ſmite at hazard before conuiction? The actions of wiſe Princes are ridles to vulgar conſtructions; neither is it for the ſhallow capacities of the multitude to fadome the deepe proiects of Soueraigne authoritie: That ſword which had ſerued of execution, ſhall now ſerue for triall; Diuide yee the liuing child in twaine, and giue the one halfe to the one, and the other halfe to the other; O diuine oracle of iuſtice, commanding that which it would not haue done, that it might find out that which could not be diſcouered; Neither God, nor his Deputies may bee ſo taken at their words, as if they alwayes intended their commands for action, and not ſometimes for probation.

This ſword hath already pierced the breſt of the true mother; and diuided her heart with feare, and griefe at ſo killing a ſentence: There needes no other racke to diſcouer nature; and now ſhe thinks, woe is me that came for iuſtice, and am anſwered with cruelty; Diuide ye the liuing child? Alas, what hath that poore infant offended that it ſuruiues, and is ſued for? How much leſſe miſerable had I beene, that my childe had beene ſmothered in my ſleepe, then mangled before mine eyes? If a dead carkaſſe could haue ſatisfied me, I needed not to haue complained: What a wofull condition am I falne into, who am accuſed to haue beene the death of my ſuppoſed childe already, and now ſhall be the death of my owne? If there were no loſſe of my childe, yet how can I endure this torment of mine owne bowels? How can I liue to ſee this part of my ſelfe ſprawling vnder that bloody ſword? And whiles ſhe thinkes thus, ſhe ſues to that ſuſpected mercy of her iuſt Iudge, Oh my Lord, giue her the liuing childe, and ſlay him not: as thinking, if he liue, he ſhall but change a mother; if he die, his mother loſeth a ſon; Whiles he liues, it ſhall be my comfort that I haue a ſon, though I may not call him ſo dying, he periſheth to both; it is better he ſhould liue to a wrong mother, then to neither: Contrarily her enuious competitor, as holding her ſelfe well ſatisfied that her neighbour ſhould be as childleſſe, as her ſelfe, can ſay, Let it be neither mine, nor thine, but diuide it; Well might Salomon, and euery hearer conclude, that either ſhe was no mother, or a monſter, that could be content with the murder of her childe; and that if ſhe could haue been the true mother, and yet haue deſired the blood of her infant, ſhee had beene as worthy to be ſtript of her childe for ſo foule vnnaturalneſſe, as the other had beene worthy to enioy him for her honeſt compaſſion. Not more iuſtly then wiſely therefore doth Salomon trace the true mother by the footeſteps of loue, and pity; and adiudgeth the child to thoſe bowels that had yearned at his danger.

Euen in morality it is thus alſo: Truth as it is one, ſo it loues intireneſſe; falſhood, diuiſion: Satan that hath no right to the heart, would be content with a peece of it: God that made it all, will haue either the whole, or none: The erroneous Church ſtriues with the true, for the liuing childe of ſauing doctrine; each claimes it for her owne: Hereſie conſcious of her owne iniuſtice, could be content to goe away with a leg, or an arme of ſound principles, as hoping to make vp the reſt with her owne mixtures: Truth cannot abide to part with a ioynt and will rather endure to leeſe all by violence, then a peece through a willing conniuency.

The Temple.

IT is a weake and iniurious cenſure that taxeth Salomons ſlackneſſe in founding the houſe of God: Great bodies muſt haue but ſlow motions; Hee was wiſe that ſaid, the matters muſt be all prepared without, ere we build within: And if Dauid haue laid ready a great part of the materials and timber, yet many a tree muſt be felled and ſquared, and many a ſtone hewed and

and poliſhed, ere this foundation could be laid; neither could thoſe large Cedars be cut, ſawne, ſeaſoned in one yeare; Foure yeares are ſoone gone in ſo vaſt a preparation: Dauid had not beene ſo intire a friend to Hiram, if Hiram had not beene a friend to God; Salomons wiſdome hath taught him to make vſe of ſo good a neighbour, of a fathers friend; he knew that the Tyrians skill was not giuen them for nothing; Not Iewes onely, but Gentiles muſt haue their hand in building the Temple of God; Onely Iewes medled with the Tabernacle, but the Temple is not built without the aide of Gentiles; They, together with vs, make vp the Church of God.

Euen Pagans haue their Arts from heauen; how iuſtly may we improue their graces to the ſeruice of the God of Heauen; if there be a Tyrian that can worke more curiouſly in gold, in ſiluer, in braſſe, in iron, in purple, and blew ſilke, then an Iſraelite, why ſhould not hee be imployed about the Temple? Their heatheniſme is their own; their skill is their Makers: Many a one workes for the Church of God, that yet hath no part in it.

Salomon raiſes a tribute for the worke; not of mony, but of men: Thirty thouſand Iſraelites are leauied for the ſeruice; yet not continuedly, but with intermiſſion, their labour is more generous, and leſſe preſſing: it is enough if they keep their courſes one moneth in Lebanon, two at home; ſo as euer ten thouſand worke, whiles twentie thouſand breathe. So fauourable is God to his creature, that he requires vs not to be ouer toyled in the workes of his owne ſeruice. Due reſpirations are requiſite in the holieſt acts. The maine ſtreſſe of the worke lyes vpon Proſelytes; whoſe both number, and paines was herein more then the Natiues: An hundred and fifty thouſand of them are imployed in bearing burthens, in hewing ſtones; beſides their three thouſand, thre hundred ouer-ſeers: Now were the deſpiſed Gibeonites of good vſe, and in vaine doth Iſrael wiſh that the zeale of Saul had now robbed them of ſo ſeruiceable druges.

There is no man ſo meane but may bee ſome way vſefull to the Houſe of God; Thoſe that cannot worke in gold, and ſiluer, and ſilke, yet may cut and hew; and thoſe that can doe neither, yet may cary burdens: Euen the ſeruices that are more homely, are not leſſe neceſſarie: Who can diſ-hearten himſelfe in the conſcience of his owne inſufficiency, when he ſees God can as well ſerue himſelfe of his labour, as of his skill.

The Temple is framed in Lebanon, and ſet vp in Sion; Neither hammer nor axe was heard in that holy ſtructure; There was nothing but noiſe in Lebanon, nothing in Sion but ſilence and peace. What euer tumults are abroad, it is fit there ſhould bee all quietneſſe and ſweet concord in the Church; Oh God, that the axes of ſchiſme, or the hammers of furious contentions ſhould bee heard within thy Sanctuary! Thine houſe is not built with blowes, with blowes it is beaten downe: Oh knit the hearts of thy ſeruants together in the vnity of the ſpirit, and the bond of peace; that we may minde and ſpeake the ſame things, that thou who art the God of peace, maiſt take pleaſure to dwell vnder the quite roofe of our hearts.

Now is the foundation laid, and the wals riſing of that glorious fabricke, which all Nations admired, and all times haue celebrated; Euen thoſe ſtones which were laid in the Baſe of the building were not ragged and rude, but hewne and coſtly: the part that lyes couered with earth from the eyes of all beholders, is no leſſe precious, then thoſe that are moſt conſpicuous: God is not all for the eye, he pleaſeth himſelfe with the hidden value of the liuing ſtones of his ſpirituall Temple; How many noble graces of his ſeruants haue beene buried in obſcuritie; not deſcerned ſo much as by their owne eyes? which yet as hee gaue, ſo hee crowneth: Hypocrites regard nothing but ſhew; God nothing but truth.

The matter of ſo goodly a frame ſtriues with the proportion, whether ſhall more excell: Here was nothing but white Marble without; nothing but Cedar and Gold within: vpon the Hill of Sion ſtands that glittering and ſnowy pile, which both inuiteth and dazeleth the eyes of paſſengers a farre off; ſo much more precious within, as Cedar is better then ſtone, gold then Cedar; No baſe thing goes to the making vp of Gods Houſe: If Satan may haue a dwelling, he cares not though he patch it vp of the rubbiſh of ſtone, or rotten ſticks, or droſſe of metals: God will admit of nothing that is not pure and exquiſite; His Church conſiſts of none but the faithfull, his habitation is in no heart but the gratious.

The faſhion was no other then that of the Tabernacle; onely this was more coſtly, more large, more fixed; God was the ſame that dwelt in both, hee varied not; the ſame myſterie was in both; Onely it was fit there ſhould be a proportion betwixt the worke and the builder: The Tabernacle was erected in a popular eſtate, the Temple in a Monarchy; it was fit this ſhould ſauour of the munificence of a King, as that of the zeale of a multitude; That was erected in the flitting condition of Iſrael in the deſert: this, in their ſetled reſidence in the promiſed Land: it was fit therefore that ſhould bee framed for motion, this for reſt. Both of them were diſtinguiſhed into three remarkable diuiſions, whereof each was more noble, more reſerued then other.

But what doe we bend our eyes vpon ſtone, and wood, and metals? God would neuer haue taken pleaſure in theſe dead materials for their owne ſakes, if they had not had a further intendment: Me thinkes I ſee foure Temples in this one. It is but one in matter, as the God that dwels in it is but one: three yet more in reſemblance: according to the diuiſion of them in whom it pleaſes God to inhabite: For where euer God dwels, there is his Temple; Oh God, thou vouchſafeſt to dwell in the beleeuing heart; as we thy ſilly creatures haue our being in thee, ſo thou the Creator of heauen & earth haſt thy dwelling in vs. The heauen of heauens is not able to containe thee and yet thou diſdaineſt not to dwel in the ſtrait lodgings of our renewed ſoule. So then, becauſe Gods children are many, and thoſe many diuided in reſpect of themſelues, though vnited in their head, therefore this Temple which is but one in collection as God is one, is manifold in the diſtribution, as the Saints are many; each man bearing about him a little ſhrine of this infinite Maieſtie: And for that the moſt generall diuiſion of the Saints is in their place and eſtate; ſome ſtrugling, and toyling in this earthly warfare, others triumphing in heauenly glory, therefore hath God two other, more vniuerſall Temples; One the Church of his Saints on earth; the other, the higheſt heauen of his Saints glorified. In all theſe, O God, thou dwelleſt for euer, and this materiall houſe of thine is a cleare repreſentation of theſe three ſpirituall; Elſe what were a temple made with hands vnto the Gods of ſpirits? And though one of theſe was a true type of all, yet how are they all exceeded each by other? This of ſtone, though moſt rich and coſtly, yet what is it to the liuing Temple of the holy Ghoſt, which is our body? What is the Temple of this body of ours, to the Temple of Chriſts body which is his Church? And what is the Temple of Gods Church on earth, to that which triumpheth glorioufly in heauen?

How eaſily doe wee ſee all theſe in this one viſible Temple: which as it had three diſtinctions of roomes; the Porch, the Holy-place, the Holy of Holies, ſo is each of them anſwered ſpiritually: In the Porch wee finde the regenerate ſoule entring into the bleſſed ſociety of the Church: In the holy place, the Communion of the true viſible Church on earth, ſelected from the world: In the Holy of Holies (whereinto the high-Prieſt entred once a yeare) the glorious heauen, into which our true high-Prieſt, Chriſt Ieſus, entred once for all to make an atonement betwixt God, and man. In all theſe what a meet correſpondence there is both in proportion, matter, ſituation?

In proportion; The ſame rule that skilfull caruers obſerue in the cutting out of the perfect ſtatue of a man, that the height bee thrice the breadth, and the breadth one third of the hight, was likewiſe duely obſerued in the fabricke of the Temple: whoſe length was double to the height, and treble to the breadth, as being ſixty cubits long, thirty high, and twenty broad; How exquiſite a ſymmetry haſt thou ordained (O God) betwixt the faithfull heart, and thy Church on earth, with that in heauen: how accurate in each of these, in all their powers and parts compared with other; So hath God ordered the beleeuing soule that it hath neither too much shortnesse of grace, nor too much height of conceit, nor too much breadth of passion; So hath he ordered his visible Church, that there is a necessarie inequalitie, without any disproportion; an height of gouernment, a length of extent, a breadth of iurisdiction duely answerable to each other; So hath he ordered his triumphant Church aboue, that it hath a length of eternitie, answered with an height of perfection, and a breadth of incomprehensible glory.

In matter; All was here of the best; The wood was precious, sweet, lasting: The stone beautifull, costly, insensible of age; The gold pure and glittering: So are the graces of Gods children, excellent in their nature, deare in their acceptation, eternall in their vse: So are the ordinances of God in his Church, holy, comfortable, irrefragable. So is the perfection of his glorified Saints incomparable, vnconceiuable.

In situation; the outer parts were here more common, the inner more holy, and peculiarly reserued: I finde one Court of the Temple open to the vncleane, to the vncircumcised: Within that, another, open onely to the Israelites; and of them, to the cleane; within that, yet another, proper onely to the Priests and Leuites; where was the Brazen Altar for sacrifice, and the Brazen sea for washings: The eyes of the Laitie might follow their oblations in hither, their feet might not.

Yet more, in the couered roomes of the Temple, there is, whither the Priests onely may enter, not the Leuites; there is, whither the high Priest onely may enter, not his brethren.

It is thus in euery renewed man, the indiuiduall temple of God; the outward parts are allowed common to God and the world; the inwardest and secretest, which is the heart, is reserued onely for the God that made it. It is thus in the Church visible, the false and foule-hearted hypocrite hath accesse to the holy ordinances of God, and treads in his Courts; onely the true Christian hath intire and priuate conuersation with the holy One of Israel: He only is admitted into the Holy of Holies, and enters within the glorious vaile of heauen.

If from the wals we looke vnto the furniture: What is the Altar whereon our sacrifices of prayer and praises are offered to the Almightie but a contrite heart? What the golden Candlesticks, but the illumined vnderstanding, wherein the light of the knowledge of God, and his diuine will shineth for euer? What the Tables of Shew-bread, but the sanctified memory, which keepeth the bread of life continually? Yea, if we shall presume so farre as to enter into the very closet of Gods Oracle; Euen there, O God, doe we finde our vnworthy hearts so honoured by thee, that they are made thy very Arke, wherein thy Royall law, and the pot of thy heauenly Manna is kept for euer; and from whose propitiatorie, shaded with the wings of thy glorious Angels, thou giuest thy gracious Testimonies of thy good spirit, witnessing with ours, that we are the children of thee the liuing God.

Behold, if Salomon built a Temple vnto thee, thou hast built a Temple vnto thy selfe in vs? We are not onely through thy grace liuing stones in thy Temple, but liuing Temples in thy Sion: Oh! doe thou euer dwell in this thine house; and in this thy house let vs euer serue thee: Wherefore else hast thou a Temple, but for thy presence with vs, and for our worshipping of thee? The time was, when, as thy people, so thy selfe, didst lodge in flitting Tents, euer shifting, euer mouing; thence thou thoughtest best to sojourne both in Shilo, and the roofe of Obed Edom; After that, thou condescendedst to settle thine abode with men; and wouldest dwell in an house of thine owne, at thy Ierusalem. So didst thou in the beginning lodge with our first Parents in a Tent; So iourne with Israel vnder the lawe; and now makest a constant residence vnder the Gospell, in the hearts of thy chosen children; from whence thou wilt remoue no more; they shall remoue from the world, from themselues, thou shalt not remoue from them.

Whersoeuer thou art, O God, thou art worthy of adoration; Since thou euer wilt dwell in vs, be thou euer worshipped in vs: Let the Altars of our cleane hearts send vp euer to thee the sweetly perfumed smoakes of our holy meditations and faithfull prayers, and cheerefull thanks-giuings: Let the pure lights of our faith, and godly conuersation shine euer before thee, and men, and neuer be put out: let the bread of life stand euer ready vpon the pure, and precious tables of our hearts. Locke vp thy Law, and thy Manna within vs; and speake comfortably to vs from thy Mercy-seat. Suffer nothing to enter in hither that is vncleane: Sanctifie vs vnto thy selfe, and be thou sanctified in vs.

God hath no vse of the darke lanternes of secret, and reserued perfections; Wee our selues doe not light vp Candles to put them vnder bushels. The great lights whether of heauen or earth, are not intended to obscuritie; but as to giue light vnto others, so to bee seene themselues; Dan and Beersheba were too strait bounds for the fame of Salomon; which now hath flowne ouer all lands and seas, and raised the world to an admiration of his more then humane wisdome. Euen so, O thou euerlasting King of Peace, thy Name is great among the Gentiles; There is no speech nor language where the report of thee is not heard; The sound of thee is gone forth through all the earth; Thy name is an ointment powred out, therefore the virgins loue thee.

No doubt many from all coasts came to learne and wonder; none with so much note as this noble daughter of Cham: Who her selfe deserues the next wonder to him whom she came to heare, and admire; That a woman, a Princesse, a rich and great Queene, should trauell from the remotest South, from Saba, a region famous for the greatest delicacies of nature, to learne wisdome, is a matchlesse example. Wee know Merchants that venture to either Indies for wealth; Others wee know daily to crosse the seas for wanton curiositie: Some few Philosophers we haue knowne to haue gone farre from learning, and amongst Princes it is no vnusuall thing to send their Embassadors to farre distant kingdomes, for transaction of businesses either of State, or commerce; but that a royall Lady should in person vndertake and ouercome so tedious a iourney, onely to obserue, and inquire into the mysteries of nature, art, religion, is a thing past both parallel, and imitation; Why doe we thinke any labour great, or any way long, to heare a greater then Salomon? How iustly shall the Queene of the South rise vp in iudgement, and condemne vs, who may heare wisdome crying in our streets, and neglect her?

Certainly so wealthy a Queene, and so great a louer of wisdome could not want great schollers at home; them she had first opposed with her enigmaticall demands; and now finding her selfe vnsatisfied, she takes her selfe to this Oracle of God; It is a good thing to doubt, better to be resolued: The minde that neuer doubts shall learne nothing; the minde that euer doubts shall neuer profit by learning: Our doubts onely serue to stirre vs vp to seeke truth; Our resolutions settle vs in the truth wee haue found. There were no pleasure in resolutions if we had not beene formerly troubled with doubts; There were nothing but discomfort and disquietnesse in doubts, if it were not for the hope of resolution: It is not safe to suffer doubts to dwell too long vpon the heart; there may be good vse of them as passengers, dangerous as inmates: Happy are we if we can finde a Salomon to remoue them.

Fame as it is alwayes a blab, so oft-times a lyer. The wise Princesse found cause to distrust so vncertaine an informer: whose reports are still either doubtfull, or fabulous; and and like winds, or ſtreames, increaſe in paſſing: If very great things were not ſpoken of Salomon, fame ſhould haue wronged him; and if but iuſt rumours were ſpread of his wiſedome, there needed much credulitie to beleeue them. This great Queene would not ſuffer her ſelfe to be lead by the eares; but comes in perſon to examine the truth of forraine relations. How much more vnſafe is it in the moſt important buſineſſes of our ſoules, to truſt the opinions and reports of others? Thoſe eares and eyes are ill beſtowed that doe not ſerue to chooſe and iudge for their owners.

When we come to a rich treaſure, we need not bee bidden to carry away what wee are able. This wiſe Lady as ſhe came farre for knowledge, ſo finding the plenty of this veine, ſhe would not depart without her full lode: there was nothing wherein ſhee would leaue her ſelfe vnſatisfied: ſhee knew that ſhe could not euery day meet with a Salomon; and therefore ſhe makes her beſt vſe of ſo learned a Maſter: Now ſhee empties her heart of all her doubts, and fils it with inſtruction. It is not good neglecting the opportunities of furniſhing our ſoules with profitable, with ſauing knowledge. There is much wiſedome in mouing a queſtion well, though there bee more in aſſoiling it: What vſe doe we make of Salomons Teacher, if ſitting at the feet of Chriſt we leaue our hearts either ignorant, or perplexed?

As if the errand of this wealthy Queene had beene to buy wiſedome, ſhee came with her Camels laden with gold, and precious ſtones, and rich odours: Though to a mighty King ſhe will not come to ſchoole empty-handed: If ſhe came to ſeech an inualuable treaſure, ſhe finds it reaſon to giue thankes vnto him that kept it. As hee is a foole that hath a price in his hand to get wiſedome, and wants an heart: So is hee vnthankfull that hath an heart to get wiſedome, and hath no price in his hand; A price, not counteruailable to what hee ſeekes, but retributorie to him of whom hee ſeekes. How ſhamefull is it to come alwayes with cloſe hands to them that teach vs the great myſteries of ſaluation.

Expectation is no better then a kinde enemy to good deſerts: Wee leeſe thoſe obiects which we ouer-looke. Many had beene admired if they had not beene ouer-much befriended by fame; who now in our iudgement are caſt as much below their ranke, as they were fore-imagined aboue it. This diſaduantage had wiſe Salomon with this ſtranger; whom rumour had bid to looke for incredible excellencies; yet ſo wonderfull were the graces of Salomon, that they ouercame the higheſt expectation, and the liberalleſt beliefe: So as when ſhe ſaw the architecture of his buildings, the prouiſions of his tables, the order of his attendants, the religion of his ſacrifices, ſhe confeſſed both her vniuſt incredulitie in not beleeuing the report of his wiſedome, and the iniurie of report, in vnderſtanding it. I beleeued not the words till I came, and mine eyes had ſeene it, and loe the one halfe was not told mee. Her eyes were more ſure informers then her eares. She did not ſo much heare as ſee Salomons wiſedome in theſe reall effects. His anſwers did not ſo much demonſtrate it, as his prudent gouernment. There are ſome whoſe ſpeeches are witty, whiles their cariage is weake, whoſe deeds are incongruities, whiles their words are Apothegms. It is not worth the name of wiſedome that may bee heard onely, and not ſeene: Good diſcourſe is but the froth of wiſedome; the pure and ſolid ſubſtance of it is in well-framed actions; if wee know theſe things, happy are we if we doe them.

And if this great perſon admired the wiſedome, and buildings, the domeſticke order of Salomon, and chiefly his ſtately aſcent into the Houſe of the Lord; how ſhould our ſoules be taken vp with wonder at thee, O thou true ſonne of Dauid, and Prince of euerlaſting peace, who receiuedſt the ſpirit not by meaſure? who haſt built this glorious houſe, not made with hands, euen the heauen of heauens? whoſe infinite prouidence hath ſweetly diſpoſed of all the family of thy creatures, both in heauen and earth; and who laſtly didſt aſcend vp on high, and ledſt captiuity captiue, and gaueſt gifts to men?

So well had this ſtudious Ladie profited by the Lectures of that exquiſite Maſter, that now ſhee enuies, ſhee magnifies none but them who may liue within the ayre of Salomons wisedome: Happy are thy men, and happy are thy seruants, which stand continually before thee, and that heare thy wisedome. As if shee could haue beene content to haue changed her Throne for the footstoole of Salomon. It is not easie to conceiue how great a blessing it is to liue vnder those lips, which doe both preserue knowledge, and vtter it: If we were not glutted with good counsell, wee should finde no relish in any worldly contentment in comparison thereof: But, hee that is full despiseth an hony-combe.

She, whom her owne experience had taught how happy a thing it is to haue a skilfull Pilote sitting at the sterne of the State, blesseth Israel for Salomon, blesseth GOD for Israel, blesseth Salomon and Israel mutually in each other; Blessed bee the Lord thy God which delighted in thee, to set thee on the Throne of Israel. Because the Lord loued Israel for euer, therefore made hee thee King to doe iudgment and iustice. It was not more Salomons aduancement to be King of Israel, then it was the aduancement of Israel to be gouerned by a Salomon. There is no earthly proofe of Gods loue to any Nation comparable to the substitution of a wise and pious gouernour: to him wee owe our peace, our life, and which is deseruedly dearer, the life of our soules, the Gospell. But, oh God how much hast thou loued thine Israel for euer, in that thou hast set ouer it that righteous Branch of Iesse, whose name is Wonderfull, Counsellor, the mighty God, the euerlasting Father, the Prince of Peace: In whose dayes Iudah shall be saued, and Israel shall dwell safely? Sing O heauen, and reioyce O earth, and breake forth into singing, O mountaines, for God hath comforted his people, and will haue euerlasting mercy vpon his afflicted.

The Queene of Sheba did not bring her gold and precious stones to looke on, or to re-carie, but to giue to a wealthier then her selfe. She giues therefore to Salomon an hundred and twenty talents of gold, besides costly stones and odours. Hee that made siluer in Hierusalem as stones, is yet richly presented on all hands. The riuers still runne into the Sea; To him that hath shall bee giuen: How should wee bring vnto thee, O thou King of Heauen, the purest gold of thine owne graces, the sweetest odours of our obediences? Was not this withall a type of that homage which should be done vnto thee, O Sauiour, by the heads of the Nations? The Kings of Tarshish and the Iles bring presents; the Kings of Sheba and Saba bring gifts; yea all Kings shall worship thee, all Nations shall serue thee. They cannot enrich themselues but by giuing vnto thee.

It could not stand with Salomons magnificence to receiue rich courtesies without a returne: The greater the person was, the greater was the obligation of requitall; The gifts of meane persons are taken but as tributes of duty; it is dishonourable to take from equals, and not to retribute: there was not therefore more freedome in her gift, then in her receit: Her owne will was the measure of both; She gaue what she would, shee receiued whatsoeuer shee would aske; And shee had little profited by Salomons schoole, if she had not learned to aske the best: Shee returnes therefore more richly laden then she came: she gaue to Salomon as a thankfull Client of wisedome; Salomon returnes to her as a munificent Patrone, according to the liberalitie of a King: We shall be sure to be gainers by whatsoeuer we giue vnto thee, O thou God of wisedome and peace: Oh that we could come from the remote regions of our infidelitie, and worldlinesse, to learne wisedome of thee, who both teachest and giuest it abundantly, without vpbraiding, without grudging, and could bring with vs the poore presents of our faithfull desires, and sincere seruices: how wouldest thou receiue vs with a gracious acceptation, and send vs away laden with present comfort, with eternall glory?

SInce the first man Adam, the world hath not yeelded either so great an example of wisedome, or so fearefull an example of apostasie as Salomon: What humane knowledge Adam had in the perfection of nature by creation, Salomon had by infusion; both fully, both from one fountaine: If Adam called all creatures by their names, Salomon spake from the Cedars or Lebanon, to the mosse that springs out of the wall; and besides these vegetables, there was no Beast, nor Fowle, nor Fish, nor creeping thing that escaped his discourse. Both fell, both fell by one meanes; as Adam, so might Salomon haue said; The woman deceiued me: It is true indeed, that Adam fell as all; Salomon as one; yet so as that this one is the patterne of the frailtie of all. If knowledge could haue giuen an immunity from sinne, both had stood: Affections are those feet of the soule, on which it either stands, or tals; Salomon loued many out-landish women: I wonder not if the wise King mis-caried; Euery word hath bane enough for a man: Women, many women, outlandish, idolatrous, and those not onely had, but doted on; Sexe, multitude, nation, condition, all conspired to the ruine of a Salomon: If one woman vndid all mankind, what maruell is it if many women vndid one? yet had those many beene the daughters of Israel, they had tempted him onely to lust; not to misdeuotion; now they were of those Nations, whereof the Lord had said to the Children of Israel, Goe not ye in to them, nor let them come in to you, for surely they will turne your hearts after their gods; to them did Salomon ioyne in loue; who can maruell if they disioyned his heart from God? Satan hath found this bait to take so well, that he neuer changed it since he crept into Paradise. How many haue we knowne whose heads haue beene broken with their owne rib?

In the first world the sonnes of God saw the daughters of men, and tooke them wiues of all they liked; they multiplied not children, but iniquities: Balaam knew well if the dames of Moab could make the Israelites wantons, they should soone make them Idolaters: All lyes open where the couenant is not both made with the eye, and kept.

It was the charge of God to the Kings of Israel before they were, that they should not multiply Wiues. Salomon hath gone beyond the stakes of the law, and now is readie to leese himselfe amongst a thousand bedfellowes: Who so layes the reines in the necke of his carnall appetite, cannot promise where he will rest. Oh Salomon, where was thy wisedome, whiles thine affections runne away with thee into so wilde a voluptuousnesse? What bootes it thee to discourse of all things; whiles thou mis-knowest thy selfe? The perfections of speculation doe not argue the inward powers of selfe-gouernment; The eye may be cleare whiles the hand is palsied. It is not so much to be heeded how the soule is informed, as how it is disciplined; The light of knowledge doth well, but the due order of the affections doth better: Neuer any meere man since the first, knew so much as Salomon, many that haue knowne lesse haue had more command of themselues: A competent estate well husbanded, is better then a vast patrimony neglected.

There can be no safety to that soule where is not a strait curbe vpon our desires: If our lusts be not held vnder as slaues, they will rule as tyrants. Nothing can preuent the extremitie of our mis-cariage but early and strong denials of our concupiscence: Had Salomon done thus, delicacie and lawlesse greatnesse had not led him into these bogs of intemperance.

The wayes of youth are steepe and slipperie, wherein as it is easie to fall, so it is com-commonly relieued with pitie; but the wanton inordinations of age are not more vnſeaſonable then odious; yet behold Salomons yonger yeares were ſtudious, and innocent, his ouer-haſtened age was licencious and miſgouerned; For, when Salomon was old, his wiues turned away his heart after other gods: If any age can ſecure vs from the danger of a ſpirituall fall, it is our laſt; and if any mans old-age might ſecure him, it was Salomons; the beloued of God, the Oracle, the miracle of wiſedome, who would haue looked but that the bloſſomes of ſo hopefull a ſpring, ſhould haue yeelded a goodly and pleaſant fruit, in the Autumne of age? yet behold euen Salomons old age vicious. There is no time wherein we can be ſafe, whiles we carie this body of ſin about vs: Youth is impetuous, mid-age ſtubborne, old age weake, all dangerous: Say not now; The fury of my youthfull flaſhes is ouer, I ſhall henceforth finde my heart calme and impregnable; whiles thou ſeeſt old Salomon doting vpon his Concubines, yea vpon their Idolatry.

It is no preſuming vpon time, or meanes, or ſtrength: how many haue begunne and proceeded well, who yet haue ſhamed themſelues in their laſt ſtage? If God vphold vs not, we cannot ſtand: If God vphold vs we cannot fal; when we are at the ſtrongeſt, it is the beſt to bee weake in our ſelues; and when at our weakeſt, ſtrong in him, in whom we can doe all things.

I cannot yet thinke ſo hard of Salomon, that he would proiect his perſon to Aſhteroth the goddeſſe of the Sidonians, or Milchom the Idol of the Ammonites, or Chemoſh the abomination of Moab: Hee that knew all things from the ſhrub of the Cedar, could not be ignorant that theſe ſtatues were but ſtocks, and ſtones, or metals, and the powers reſembled by them, Deuils. It is not like he could be ſo inſenſate to adore ſuch Deities; but ſo farre was the vxorious King blinded with affection, that hee gaue not paſſage onely to the Idolatry of his heathenish wiues, but furtherance.

So did he dote vpon their perſons, that he humoured them in their ſinnes: Their act is therefore his, becauſe his eyes winkt at it; his hand aduanced it: Hee that built a Temple to the liuing God, for himſelfe and Iſrael in Sion, built a Temple to Chemoſh in the mount of Scandall, for his Miſtreſſes of Moab, in the very face of Gods Houſe: No hill about Ieruſalem was free from a Chappell of Deuils: Each of his dames had their Puppets, their Altars their Incenſe; Becauſe Salomon feeds them in their ſuperſtition, he drawes the ſinne home to himſelfe, and is branded for what he ſhould haue forbidden. Euen our very permiſsion appropriates crimes to vs: Wee need no more guiltineſſe of any ſinne, then our willing toleration.

Who can but yearne, and feare to ſee the woefull wracke of ſo rich and goodly a veſſell: O Salomon, wert not thou hee whoſe yonger yeares God honoured with a meſſage and ſtile of loue? To whom God twice appeared; and in a gracious viſion renewed the Couenant of his fauour? Whom he ſingled out from all the generation of men to bee the founder of that glorious Temple which was no leſſe cleerely the Type of heauen, then thou wert of Chriſt the Sonne of the euerliuing God? Wert not thou that deep Sea of wiſedome which God ordained to ſend forth riuers and fountaines of all diuine, and humane knowledge to all Nations, to all ages? Wert not thou one of thoſe ſelect Secreraries, whoſe hand it pleaſed the Almighty to imploy in three pieces of the diuine monuments of ſacred Scriptures? Which of vs dares euer hope to aſpire vnto thy graces? Which of vs can promiſe to ſecure our ſelues from thy ruines? We fall, O God, we fall to the loweſt hell, if thou preuent vs not, if thou ſuſtaine vs not; Vphold thou me according to thy Word that I may liue, and let me not bee aſhamed of my hope. Order my ſteps in thy word, and let not any iniquitie haue dominion ouer me. All our weakneſſe is in our ſelues, all our ſtrength is in thee. O God bee thou ſtrong in our weakeneſſe, that our weake knees may bee euer ſteddy in thy ſtrength.

But in the midſt of the horror of this ſpectacle (able to affright all the ſonnes of men) behold ſome glimpſe of comfort: was it of Salomon that Dauid his father propheſied; Though he fall, he ſhall not bee vtterly caſt downe; for the Lord vpholdeth him with his hand? If ſenſible grace, yet finall mercy was not taken from that beloued of God; In the hardeſt of this winter, the ſap was gone downe to the root, though it ſhewed not in the branches: Euen whiles Salomon remoued, that word ſtood faſt, Hee ſhall be my ſonne, and I will be his Father. He that foreſaw his ſinne, threatned and limited his correction, If he breake my ſtatutes, and keepe not my commandements, then will I viſit his tranſgreſsion with a rod, and his iniquitie with ſtripes; Neuertheleſſe my louing kindneſſe will I not vtterly take from him, nor ſuffer my faithfulneſſe to faile; My Couenant will I not breake; nor alter the thing that is gone out of my mouth; Behold the fauour of God doth not depend vpon Salomons obedience: If Salomon ſhall ſuffer his faithfulneſſe to faile towards his God; God will not requite him with the failing of his faithfulneſſe to Salomon; If Salomon breake his Couenant with God; God will not breake his Couenant with the father of Salomon, with the ſonne of Dauid: He ſhall ſmart, hee ſhall not periſh. Oh gracious word of the God of all mercies, able to giue ſtrength to the languiſhing, comfort to the deſpairing, to the dying, life. Whatſoeuer wee are, thou wilt be ſtill thy ſelfe, O holy One of Iſrael, true to thy Couenant, conſtant to thy Decree; The ſinnes of thy choſen can neither fruſtrate thy counſell, nor out-ſtrip thy mercies.

Now I ſee Salomon of a wanton louer, a graue Preacher of mortification; I ſee him quenching thoſe inordinate flames with the teares of his repentance. Me thinks I heare him ſighing deepely betwixt euery word of that his ſolemne penance, which he would needs enioyne himſelfe before all the world. I haue applyed my heart to know the wickedneſſe of folly, euen the fooliſhneſſe; of madneſſe; and I finde more bitter then death the woman whoſe heart is as nets and ſnares; and her hands as bands: Who ſo pleaſeth God ſhall be deliuered from her, but the ſinner ſhall be taken by her.

Salomon was taken as a ſinner, deliuered as a penitent. His ſoule eſcaped as a bird out of the ſnare of the fowlers; the ſnare was broken, and he deliuered: It is good for vs that he was both taken, and diliuered; Taken, that wee might not preſume; and that we might not deſpaire, deliuered. He ſinned, that we might not ſinne; hee recouered, that we may not ſinke vnder our ſinne.

But, oh the iuſtice of God inſeparable from his mercy; Salomons ſinne ſhall not eſcape the rod of men; Rather then ſo wiſe an offender ſhall want enemies, God ſhall raiſe vp three aduerſaries vnto Salomon; Hadad the Edomite, Bezon the King of Aram, Ieroboam the ſonne of Nebat; whereof two were foraine, one domeſticall: Nothing but loue and peace ſounded in the name of Salomon; nothing elſe was found in his raigne, whiles hee held in good tearmes with his God: But when once hee fell foule with his Maker, all things began to be troubled. There are whips laid vp againſt the time of Salomons fore-ſeene offence, which are now brought forth for his correction: On purpoſe was Hadad the ſonne of the King of Edom hid in a corner of Egypt from the ſword of Dauid and Ioab, that he might be reſerued for a ſcourge to the exorbitant ſonne of Dauid: God would haue vs make account that our peace ends with our innocence: The ſame ſinne that ſets debate betwixt God and vs, armes the creatures againſt vs: It were pitie wee ſhould be at any quiet whiles wee are falne out with the God of peace.

Right Honourable:

I Cannot but thus gratulate to you your happy return from your many & noble imployments; which haue made you ſome yeares a ſtranger at home, and ſo renowned abroad, that all the better parts of Europe know and honour your name, no leſſe, then if you had beene borne theirs: Neyther is any of them ſo ſauage, as not to ſay, when they heare mention of your worth, that Vertue is a thouſand Eſcuchions.

If now your ſhort breathing-time may allow your Lordſhip the freedome of quiet and holy thoughts, caſt your eyes vpon Iſrael and Iudah, vpon the Kings and Prophets of both, in ſuch beneficiall variety as prophane Hiſtory ſhall promiſe in vaine. Your Lordſhip ſhall ſee Rehoboam following Salomon in nothing but his ſeat, and his fall, as much more wilfull then his father, as leſſe wiſe; all head, no heart; loſing thoſe ten Tribes with a churliſh breath, whom he would (and might not) recouer with blood. Ieroboam as crafty, as wicked; plotting a reuolt, creating a religion to his ſtate, marring Iſraelites to make ſubiects; branded in his name, ſmitten in his hand, in his loynes. You ſhall ſee a faithfull meſſenger of God, after miraculous proofe of his courage, fidelitie, power, good nature, paying deare for a little circumſtance of credulous diſobedience; The Lyon is ſent to call for his blood, as the price of his forbidden harbour: You ſhall ſee the blinde Prophet deſcrying the diſguiſe of a Queene, the iudgement of the King, the remouall of a Prince, too good for Ieroboams heire. You ſhall ſee the right ſtocke of royall ſucceſſion flouriſhing in Aſa, whiles that true heire of Dauid (though not without ſome blemiſhes of infirmity) inherits a perfect heart; purges his Kingdome of Sodomy, of Idolatry, not balking ſinne, euen where he honoured nature. You ſhall ſee the wonder of Prophets, Elijah, opening and ſhutting heauen, as his priuate cheſt; catored for by the Rauens, nor leſſe miraculouſly catoring for the Sareptan, conteſting with Ahab, confronting the Baalites, ſpeaking both fire and water (from heauen) in one euening; meekly lacquaying his Soueraigne, weakly flying from Iezebel, fed ſupernaturally by Angels, hid in the rocke of Horeb, confirmed by thoſe dreadfull apparitions, that had confounded ſome other; caſting his mantle vpon his homely ſucceſſor, and by the touch of that garment, turning him from a ploughman, to a Prophet. But what doe I with-hold your Lordſhip in the bare heads of this inſuing diſcourſe? In all theſe your piercing eyes ſhall eaſily ſee beyond mine, and make my thoughts but a ſtation for a further diſcouery. Your Lordſhips obſeruation hath ſtudyed men, more then bookes; here it ſhall ſtudy God, more then men; That of bookes hath made you full, that of men, iudicious, this of God ſhall make you holy, and happy: Hitherto ſhall euer tend the wiſhes and indeuours of

in all faithfull obſeruance,

REHOBOAM.

WHO would not but haue looked that ſeuen hundred wiues, and three hundred concubines, ſhould haue furniſhed Salomons Palace with choyce of heires, and haue peopled Iſrael with royall iſſue? and now behold, Salomon hath by all theſe but one Sonne; and him by an Ammoniteſſe: Many a poore man hath an houſe-full of children by one wife; whiles this great King hath but one ſonne by many houſe-fulls of wiues: Fertilitie is not from the meanes, but from the author: It was for Salomon that Dauid ſung of old; Lo, children are an heritage of the Lord; and the fruit of the wombe is his reward: How oft doth God deny this heritage of heyres, where he giues the largeſt heritage of lands; and giues moſt of theſe liuing poſſeſſions, where he giues leaſt of the dead? that his bleſſings may be acknowledged free vnto both; entailed vpon neither.

As the greateſt perſons cannot giue themſelues children, ſo the wiſeſt cannot giue their children wiſedome: Was it not of Rehoboam that Salomon ſaid; I hated all my labour which I had taken vnder the Sunne; becauſe I ſhould leaue it vnto the man that ſhall bee after me; and who knoweth whether he ſhall be a wiſe man or a foole: Yet he ſhall rule ouer all my labour, wherein I haue laboured, and ſhewed my ſelfe wiſe vnder the Sunne? All Iſrael found that Salomons wit was not propagated: Many a foole hath had a wiſer ſonne, then this wiſeſt father: Amongſt many ſonnes it it no newes to finde ſome one defectiue: Salomon hath but one ſonne, and he no miracle of wiſedome: God giues purpoſely ſo eminent an inſtance, to teach men to looke vp to heauen, both for heires and graces.

Salomon was both the King of Iſrael, and the father of Rehoboam, when he was ſcarce out of his childhood; Rehoboam enters into the Kingdome at a ripe age; yet Salomon was the man, and Rehoboam the child: Age is no iuſt meaſure of wiſdome: There are beardleſſe ſages, and gray-headed children: Not the ancient are wiſe, but the wiſe is ancient: Iſrael wanted not for thouſands that were wiſer then Rehoboam: Yet becauſe they knew him to bee the ſonne of Salomon, no man makes queſtion of his gouernement: In the caſe of ſucceſſion into Kingdomes we may not looke into the qualities of the perſon, but into the right. So ſecure is Salomon of the peoples fidelity to Dauids ſeed, that he followes not his fathers example in ſetting his ſonne by him, in his owne throne; here was no danger of a riualitie to enforce it; no eminency in the ſonne to merit it; It ſufficeth him to know that no bond can bee ſurer then the naturall allegeance of ſubiects: I doe not finde that the following Kings ſtood vpon the confirmation of their people; but as thoſe that knew the way to their throne, aſcended thoſe steps without aid; As yet the soueraignty of Dauids house was greene, and vnsetled; Israel therefore doth not now come to attend Rehoboam, but Rehoboam goes vp to meet Israel. They come not to his Ierusalem, but he goes to their Shechem: To Shechem were all Israel come to make him King; If loyaltie drew them together, why not rather to Ierusalem? there the maiestie of his fathers Temple, the magnificence of his palace, the very stones in those walls, (besides the strength of his Guard) had pleaded strongly for their subiection; Shechem had beene many wayes fatall, was euery way incommodious: It is an infinite helpe or disaduantage that arises from circumstances; the very place puts Israel in minde of a rebellion: There Abimelec had raised vp his treacherous vsurpation ouer, and against his brethren: There Gaol against Abimelec: There was Ioseph sold by his brethren: As if the very soile had beene stained with perfidiousnesse. The time is no lesse ill chosen; Rehoboam had ill counsell ere he bewrayed it: For had he speedily called vp Israel, before Ieroboam could haue beene sent for out of Egypt, he had found the way cleere: A little delay may leese a great deale of opportunity: What shall we say of both, but that misery is led in by infatuation.

Had not Israel beene somewhat predisposed to a mutiny, they had neuer sent into Egypt for such a spokesman as Ieroboam; a fugitiue, a traytor to Salomon; long had that crafty conspirator lurked in a forraine Court: The alliances of Princes are not euer necessary bonds of friendship: The bother in law of Salomon harbours this snake in his bosome, and giues that heat, which is repayed with a sting to the posteritie of so neere an allye: And now Salomons death calls him backe to his natiue soile. That Israel would entertaine a rebell, it was an ill signe: worse yet that they would countenance him; worst of all that they would imploy him: Nothing doth more bewray euill intentions, then the choyce of vicious Agents: Those that meane well will not hazard either the successe, or credit of their actions vpon offensiue instruments: None but the sluttish will wipe their faces with foule clothes. Vpright hearts would haue said, as Dauid did to God, so to his anointed: Doe not I hate them that hate thee? Yea I hate them with a perfect hatred. Ieroboams head had been a fit present to haue been tendered vnto their new King: and now in stead thereof they tender themselues to Ieroboam, as the head of their faction.

Had not Rehoboam wanted spirits, he had first (after Salomons example) done iustice to his fathers traytor, and then haue treated of mercy towards his subiects: The people soone found the weaknesse of their new Soueraigne, else they durst not haue spoken to him by so obnoxious a tongue: Thy father made our yoke grieuous, make thou it lighter and wee will serue thee; Doubtlesse the craftie head of Ieroboam was in this suit, which his mouth vttered in the name of Israel; Nothing could haue beene more subtill: It seemed a promise, it was a threat; that which seemed a supplication was a complaint: humilitie was but a vaile for discontentment; One hand held a paper, the other a sword: Had they said, Free vs from Tributes, the capitulation had beene grosse, and strongly sauouring of sedition: now they say Ease vs, they professe his power to impose, and their willingnesse to yeeld; onely crauing fauour in the weight of the imposition: If Rehoboam yeeld, he blemisheth his father: If he denie, he indangers his Kingdome: His wilfulnesse shall seeme worthily to abandon his scepter, if he sticke at so reasonable a suit: Surely Israel came with a purpose to cauill: Ieroboam had secretly troubled these waters, that he might fish more gainfully: One male-content is enough to imbroile a whole Kingdome.

How harshly must it needs sound in the eares of Rehoboam, that the first word hee heares from his people, is a querulous challenge of his fathers gouernment: Thy father made our yoke grieuous: For ought I see, the suggestion was not more spightfull then vniust: where was the weight of this yoke, the toile of these seruices? Here were none of the turmoiles of warre; no traynings, marchings, encampings, entrenchings, watchings, minings, sieges, fortifications; none of that tedious world of worke that attends hostilitie; Salomon had not his name for nought: All was calme during that long long raigne: And if they had payed deare for their peace, they had no cauſe to complaine of an hard march; The warlike times of Saul and Dauid had exhauſted their blood together with their ſubſtance; what ingratitude was this to cry out of eaſe? Yea but that peace brought forth coſtly and laborious buildings: Gods houſe, and the Kings, the walls of Ieruſalem, Hazor, Megiddo, and Gezer, the Cities of ſtore, the cities of defence, could not riſe without many a ſhoulder: True, but not of any Iſraelites; The remainders of Amorites, Hittites, Perizzites, Hiuites, and Iebuſites, were put to all the drudgery of theſe great workes; the taskes of Iſrael were eaſie, and ingenuous; free from ſeruilitie, free from painfulneſſe. But the charge was theirs, whoſe-ſoeuer was the labour: The diet of ſo endleſſe a retinue, the attendance of his Seraglio, the purueyance for his forty thouſand ſtables, the coſt of his ſacrifices, muſt needs weigh heauy; Certainly, if it had layne on none but his owne; But wherefore went Salomons Nauy euery three yeares to Ophir? to what vſe ſerued the ſix hundred threeſcore and ſix Talents of Gold, that came in one yeare to his Exchequer? Wherefore ſerued the large tributes of forraine nations? How did he make ſiluer to be in Ieruſalem as ſtones if the exactions were ſo preſſiue? The multitude is euer prone to picke quarrels with their Gouernors; and whom they feared aliue, to cenſure dead; The benefits of ſo quiet and happie a raigne are paſt ouer in ſilence; the grieuances are recounted with clamor: Who can hope that merit or greatneſſe can ſhield him from obloquie, when Salomon is traduced to his owne loynes?

The propoſition of Iſrael puts Rehoboam to a deliberation; Depart yee for three daies; then come againe to me: I heare no other word of his that argued wiſdome; Not to giue ſudden reſolutions in caſes of importance was a point that might well beſeeme the ſon of Salomon: I wonder that he who had ſo much wit as to call for leiſure in his anſwer, ſhould ſhew ſo little wit in the improuing of that leiſure, in the returne of that anſwer: Who cannot but hope well to ſee the grey heads of Salomons ſecret Counſell called to Rehoboams Cabinet? As Counſellors, as ancient, as Salomons, they cannot chooſe but ſee the beſt the ſafeſt courſe for their new Soueraigne: They had learned of their old Maſter, that a ſoft anſwer appeaſeth wrath; wiſely therefore doe they aduiſe him, If thou wilt be a ſeruant to this people this day; and ſpeake good words to them, they will be thy ſeruants for euer: It was an eaſie condition; with one mouthfull of a breath to purchaſe an euerlaſting homage: with one gentle motion of his tongue, to binde all peoples hearts to his allegeance for euer. Yet (as if the motion had beene vnfit) a new Counſell Table is called: well might this people ſay; What will not Rehoboam grudge vs, if he thinke much to giue good words for a Kingdome. There is not more wiſedome in taking varietie of aduice, where the matter is doubtfull, then folly, when it is plaine: The young heads are conſulted; This very change argues weakeneſſe; Some reaſon might bee pleaded for paſſing from the younger Counſell to the aged; none, for the contrary: Age brings experience; and, it is a ſhame, if with the ancient be not wiſdome: Youth is commonly raſh, heady, inſolent, vngouerned, wedded to will, led by humour, a rebell to reaſon, a ſubiect to paſſion, fitter to execute then to aduiſe: Greene wood is euer ſhrinking and warping, whereas the well-ſeaſoning holds a conſtant firmneſſe: Many a life, many a ſoule, many a floriſhing ſtate hath beene ruined by vndiſciplined Monitors: Such were theſe of Rehoboam; whoſe great ſtomach tells them that this conditionating of Subiects, was no other then an affront to their new maſter, and ſuggeſts to them, how vnfit it is for Maieſtie to brooke ſo ſaucy a treaty: how requiſite and Princely, to cruſh this preſumption in the egge: As ſcorning therefore to bee braued by the baſe Vulgar, they put words of greatneſſe, and terror in their new Prince, My little finger ſhall bee thicker then my fathers loynes; My father made your yoake heauy, I will adde to your yoake; My father hath chaſtiſed you with whips, I will chaſtiſe you with Scorpions. The very words haue ſtings, Now muſt Iſrael needes thinke, How cruell will this mans hands bee, when hee thus drawes blood with his tongue? Men are not wont to ſpeake out their worſt: who can endure the hopes of him that propromiseth tyranny? There can be no good vse of an infinite profession of rigour and seuerity; Feare is an vnsafe guardian of any state, much lesse of an vnsetled. Which was yet worse, not the sins of Israel were threatned, nor their purses, but their persons; neither had they desired a remission of iustice, but of exactions; and now, they heare of nothing but burthens, and scourges, and Scorpions.

Here was a prince and people well met; I doe not find them sensible of ought, saue their owne profit; They doe not say, Religion was corrupted in the shutting vp of thy fathers dayes; Idolatry found the free fauour of Priests, and Temples, and Sacrifices: Begin thy raigne with God; purge the Church, demolish those piles of abomination: abandon those Idol-mongers, restore deuotion to her puritie: They are all for their penny, for their ease: Hee on the other side, is all for his will, for an imperious Soueraigntie; without any regard either of their reformation or satisfaction: They were worthy of load that cared for nothing but their backs; and he worthy of such subiects, who professed to affect their misery and torment.

Who would not but haue looked any whither for the cause of this euill, rather then to heauen? yet, the holy God challenges it to himselfe: The cause was from the Lord, that he might performe his saying by Abijah, the Shilonite to Ieroboam: As sinne is a punishment of sinne, it is a part of iustice: The holy One of Israel doth not abhorre to vse euen the grossest sinnes to his owne iust purposes; whiles our wils are free to our owne choice, his decrees are as necessary, as iust; Israel had forsaken the Lord, and worshiped Ashtaroth, the goddesse of the Zidonians, and Chemosh, and Milchom: God owes them and Salomon a whipping; The frowardnesse of Rehoboam shall pay it them; I see Ieroboams plot, the peoples insolence, the young mens misaduice, the Princes vnreasonable austeritie, meeting together (through the wise Prouidence of the Almighty) vnwittingly to accomplish his most iust decree: All these might haue done otherwise for any force that was offered to their will; all would no more doe otherwise, then if there had beene no predetermination in heauen; that God may be magnified in his wisedome, and iustice, whiles man wittingly perisheth in his folly.

That three dayes expectation had warmed these smoking Israelites, and made them ready for a combustion: vpon so peremptory a resolution of rigour, the flame bursts out, which all the waters of the Well of Bethlehem could neuer quench: The furious multitude flies out into a desperate reuolt; What portion haue wee in Dauid, neither haue wee inheritance in the sonne of Iesse: To your Tents O Israel; now, see to thine owne house Dauid.

How durst these seditious mouthes mention Dauid in defiance? One would haue thought that very name had beene able to haue tempered their furie, and to haue contained them within the limits of obedience: It was the father of Rehoboam, and the sonne of Dauid that had led Israel into Idolatry: Salomon hath drawne contempt vpon his father, and vpon the sonne: If Israel haue cast off their God, is it maruell that they shake off his annointed? Irreligion is the way to disobedience: There can bee no true subiection but out of conscience: They cannot make conscience of ciuill duties, who make none of diuine.

In vaine shall Rehoboam hope to preuaile by his Officer, when himselfe is reiected: The persons of Princes carry in them characters of Maiesty; when their presence workes not, how should their message? If Adoram sollicit the people too late with good words, they answer him with stones. Nothing is more vntractable and violent, then an inraged multitude; It was time for Rehoboam to betake himselfe to his Chares, hee saw those stones were throwne at him, in his Adoram: As the messenger suffers for his master, so the master suffers in his messenger: Had Rehoboam beene in Adoram clothes, this death had beene his: Onely flight can deliuer him from those that might haue beene subiects: Ierusalem must bee his refuge against the conspiracie of Shechem.

Blessed bee GOD for lawfull gouernment: Euen a mutinous body cannot want want an head: If the rebellious Israelites haue cast off their true Soueraigne, they must choose a false: Ieroboam the sonne of Nebat must be the man: He had need bee skilfull, and sit sure, that shall backe the horse which hath cast his Rider: Israel could not haue any where met with more craft and courage, then they found in this Leader.

Rehoboam returnes to Ierusalem lighter by a crowne then he went forth; Iudah and Beniamin sticke still fast to their loyaltie: the example of a generall rebellion cannot make them vnfaithfull to the house of Dauid: God will euer reserue a remnant free from the common contagion: Those tribes, to approue their valour, no lesse then their fidelitie, will fight against their brethren, for their Prince; and will hazard their liues to reduce the crowne to the sonne of Salomon: An hundred and fourescore thousand of them are vp in armes, ready to force Israel to their denied subiection: No noise sounded on both parts but military; no man thought of any thing but blood; when suddenly God sends his Prophet to forbid the battle: Shemaiah comes with a message of cessation: Ye shall not goe vp, nor fight against your brethren, the children of Israel, returne euery man to his house, for this thing is from me, saith the Lord: The word of one silly Prophet dismisses these mighty armies: He that would not lay downe the threats of his rigour, vpon the aduice of his ancient Counsellors, will lay downe his sword, vpon the word of a Seer: Shall wee enuie, or shame to see how much the Prophets of the Old Testament could doe; how little those of the new? If our commission be no lesse from the same God, the difference of successe cannot goe away vnreuenged.

There was yet some grace in Rehoboam, that hee would not spurne against that which God challenged as his owne worke: Some Godlesse Ruffian would haue said; whosoeuer is the Author, I will be reuenged on the instruments: Rehoboam hath learned this lesson of his Grandfather, I held my peace because thou Lord hast done it: If hee might striue with the multitude, hee knew it was no striuing with his Maker: quietly therefore doth he lay downe his armes, not daring after that prohibition to seeke the recouery of his kingdome by blood.

Where Gods purposes are hid from vs, wee must take the fairest wayes of all lawfull remedies; but where God hath reuealed his determinations, wee must sit downe in an humble submission; our struggling may aggrauate, cannot redresse our miseries.

IEROBOAM.

AS there was no publike and vniuersall conflict betwixt the ten Tribes, and the two, so no peace: Either King found reason to fortifie the borders of his owne territories: Sechem was worthy to bee deare to Ieroboam; a Citie as of old seasoned with many treasons, so now auspicious to his new vsurpation. The ciuill defection was soone followed by the spirituall: As there are neare respects betwixt God, and his anointed, so there is great affinitie betwixt treason and idolatry: there is a connexion betwixt, Feare God, and Honour the King; and no lesse betwixt the neglects of both: In vaine shall a man looke for faith in a mis-religious heart.

Next to Achitophel, I doe not find that Israel yeelded a craftier head then Ieroboams, so hath hee plotted this conspiracie, that (what euer fall) there is no place for a challenge; not his owne intrusion, but Israels Election hath raised him to their Throne: neither is his cunning lesse in holding a stolne Scepter: Thus he thinkes in himselfe: If Israel haue made me their King, it is but a pang of discontentment; these violent

thoughts will not laſt alwayes: ſudden fits haue commonly ſudden recoueries; their returne to their loyaltie ſhall forfeit my head together with my Crowne: They cannot returne to God, and hold off from their lawfull Soueraigne? They cannot returne to Ieruſalem, and keepe off from God, from their loyaltie: Thrice a yeere will their deuotion call them vp thither; beſides the exigence of their frequent vowes: How can they be mine, whiles that glorious Temple is in their eye; whiles the magnificence of the royall Palace of Dauid and Salomon, ſhall admoniſh them of their natiue allegeance: whiles (beſides the ſollicitation of their brethren) the Prieſts and Leuites ſhall preach to them the neceſſitie of their due obedience, and the abomination of their ſacrifices in their wilfull diſobedience; whiles they ſhall (by their preſence) put themſelues vpon the mercy, or iuſtice of their lawfull, and forſaken Prince: Either therefore I muſt diuert them from Ieruſalem, or elſe I cannot liue and reigne. It is no diuerting them by a direct reſtraint; ſuch prohibition would both endanger their vtter diſtaſte, and whet their deſire to more eagerneſſe: I may change Religion, I may not inhibit it; ſo the people haue a God, it ſufficeth them; they ſhall haue ſo much formalitie as may content them: their zeale is not ſo ſharpe, but they can be well pleaſed with eaſe: I will proſer them both a more compendious, and more plauſible worſhip: Ieruſalem ſhall be ſupplied within mine owne borders: naturally men loue to ſee the obiects of their deuotion: I will therefore feed their eyes with two golden repreſentations of their God, nearer home; and what can bee more proper then thoſe, which Aaron deuiſed of old to humour Iſrael.

Vpon this peſtilent ground, Ieroboam ſets vp two calues in Dan and Bethel, and perſwades the people; It is too much for you to goe vp to Ieruſalem, behold thy Gods O Iſrael, which brought thee out of the Land of Egypt. Oh the miſchiefe that comes of wicked infidelitie: It was Gods Prophet that had rent Ieroboams garment into twelue pieces, and had giuen ten of them to him; in token of his ſharing the tenne Tribes; who with the ſame breath alſo told him that the cauſe of this diſtraction was their Idolatry: Yet now will he inſtitute an Idolatrous ſeruice for the holding together of them, whom their Idolatry had rent from their true Soueraigne to him: Hee ſayes not; God hath promiſed me this Kingdome, God hath conferd it, God ſhall finde meanes to maintaine his owne act; I will obey him, let him diſpoſe of mee: The God of Iſrael is wiſe and powerfull enough, to fetch about his owne deſignes: But, (as if the deuices of men were ſtronger then Gods prouidence, and ordination) he will be working out his owne ends by prophane policies: Ieroboam being borne an Iſraelite, and bred in the Court of a Salomon, could not but know the expreſſe charge of God againſt the making of Images, againſt the erecting of any riuall altars, to that of Ieruſalem; yet now that he ſees both theſe may aunile much to the aduancing of his ambitious proiect, he ſets vp thoſe Images, thoſe Altars: Wicked men care not to make bold with God in caſes of their owne commoditie: If the Lawes of their Maker lye in the way of their profit or promotion, they either ſpurne them out, or tread vpon them at pleaſure: Aſpiring mindes will know no God but honour. Iſrael ſoiourned in Egypt, and brought home a golden calfe: Ieroboam ſoiournes there, and brought home two; It is hard to dwell in Egypt vntainted; not to ſauour of the ſinnes of the place we liue in, is no leſſe ſtrange, then for wholeſome liquor tunned vp in a muſty veſſell, not to ſmell of the caſk: The beſt body may be infected in a contagious ayre: Let him beware of Egypt that would be free from Idolatry.

No ſooner are Ieroboams calues vp, then Iſrael is downe on their knees: their worſhip followes immediately vpon the erection: How eaſily is the vnſtable vulgar caried into whatſoeuer religion of authoritie? The weather-cocke will looke which way ſoeuer the winde blowes: It is no maruell if his Subiects bee bruitiſh, who hath made a calfe his god.

Euery acceſſary to ſinne is filthy, but the firſt authors of ſinne are abominable: How is Ieroboam branded in euery of theſe ſacred leaues? How doe all ages ring of his fact, with the accent of diſhonour, and indignation: Ieroboam the ſonne of Nebat

Nebat, that made Israel to sinne? It was a shame for Israel that it could bee made to sinne by a Ieroboam: but, O cursed name of Ieroboam that would draw Israel to sinne; The followers and abettors of euill are worthy of torment, but no hell is too deepe for the leaders of publique wickednesse.

Religion is cloathed with many requisite circumstances: As a new King would haue a new god; so that new God must haue new Temples, Altars, Seruices, Priests, Solemnities: All these hath Ieroboam instituted: all these hath he cast in the same mold with his golden calues: False deuotion doth not more crosse, then imitate the true. Satan is no lesse a counterfet then an enemy of God: He knowes it more easie to adulterate religion, then to abolish it.

That which God ordained for the auoidance of Idolatry, is made the occasion of it; a limitation of his holy seruices to Ierusalem: How mischieuously doe wicked men peruert the wholesome institutions of God to their sinne, to their bane!

Ieroboam could not be ignorant how fearfully this very act was reuenged vpon Israel, in the Wildernesse; yet he dares renew it in Dan and Bethel: No example of iudgement can affright wilfull offenders.

It is not the metall that makes their gods, but the worship; the sacrifices. What sacrifices could there be without Priests? No religion could euer want sacred Masters of Diuine ceremonies: Gods Clergy was select and honourable; branches of the holy stemme of Aaron; Ieroboam rakes vp his Priests out of the channell of the multitude; all Tribes, all persons were good enough for his spurious deuotion; Leaden Priests are well fitted to golden Deities. Religion receiues either much honour, or blemish, by the qualitie of those that serue at her Altars: Wee are not worthy to professe our selues seruants of the True God, if wee doe not hold his seruice worthy of the best.

Ieroboams Calues must haue sacrifices, must haue solemne festiuities; though in a day, and moneth of his owne deuising: In vaine shall we pretend to worship a god, if we grudge him the iust dayes, and rites of his worship.

It is strange that hee who thought the dregs of the vulgar good enough for that Priesthood, would grace those gods by acting their Priest himselfe: and yet behold where the new King of Israel stands before his new Altar, with a Scepter in one hand, and a Censer in the other, ready to sacrifice to his new gods; when the man of God comes from Iuda, with a message of iudgement: Oh desperate condition of Israel, that was so farre gone with impiety, that it yeelded not one faithfull monitor to Ieroboam: The time was, that the erecting of but a new altar (for memory, for monument) on the other side of Iordan, bred a challenge to the Tribes of Reuben, Gad, and Manasses; and had cost much Israelitish blood, if the quarrelled Tribes had not giuen a seasonable and pious satisfaction; and now, lo, how the stronger stomach of degenerated Israel can digest new Altars, new Temples, new Gods: What a difference there is betwixt a Church and Kingdome newly breathing from affliction, and setled vpon the lees of a mis-vsed peace?

But oh the patience, and mercy of our long-suffering God, that will not strike a very Ieroboam vnwarned: Iudgement houers ouer the heads of sinners, ere it light: if Israel afford not a bold reprouer of Ieroboam, Iuda shall: When the King of Israel is in all the height both of his State, and superstition, honouring his solemne day with his richest deuotion, steps forth a Prophet of God, and interrupts that glorious seruice, with a loud inclamation of iudgement. Doubtlesse the man wanted not wit to know what displeasure, what danger must needs follow so vnwelcome a message: yet dares hee (vpon the commission of God) doe this affront to an Idolatrous King, in the middest of all his awfull magnificence. The Prophets of God goe vpon many a thankelesse errand: Hee is no messenger for God that either knowes, or feares the faces of men.

It was the Altar, not the person of Ieroboam, which the Prophet thus threatens; Yet not the stones are stricken, but the founder, in both their apprehensions: So deare as the deuices of our owne braine to vs : as if they were incorporated into our selues; There is no opposition whereof we are so sensible, as that of religion.

That the royall Altar should bo thus polluted by dead mens bones, and the blood of the Priests, was not more vnpleasing, then that all this should be done by a childe of the house of Dauid; for Ieroboam well saw that the throne and the altar must stand, or fall together; that a sonne of Dauid could not haue such power ouer the Altar, without an vtter subuersion of the gouernment, of the succession; therefore is he thus galled with this comminatory prediction : The rebellious people who had said, What portion haue we in Dauid, heare now, that Dauid will perforce haue a portion in them: and might well see, what beasts they had made themselues, in worshipping the image of a beast; and sacrificing to such a God, as could not preserue his owne Altar from violation and ruine.

All this while I doe not see this zealous Prophet laying his hand to the demolition of this Idolatrous Altar; or threatning a knife to the Author of this deprauation of religion; Onely his tongue smites both; not with foule, but sharpe words, of menace, not of reproach : It was for Iosias a King, to shed the blood of those sacrificers, to deface those Altars: Prophets are for the tongue, Princes for the hand; Prophets must onely denounce iudgement : Princes execute.

Future things are present to the Eternall : It was some two hundred and sixty years, ere this prophecy should be fulfilled; yet the man of God speaks of it as now in acting: What are some Centuries of yeares to the Ancient of dayes ? How slow, and yet how sure is the pace of Gods reuenge ? It is not in the power of time to frustrate Gods determinations; There is no lesse iustice, nor seueritie in a delayed punishment.

What a perfect Record there is of all names in the roll of Heauen; before they be, after they are past ? what euer seeming contingency there is in their imposition, yet they fall vnder the certainty of a decree, and are better knowne in heauen, ere they be, then on earth whiles they are. He that knowes what names wee shall haue, before we or the world haue a being, doth not oft reueale this peece of his knowledge to his creature; here he doth, naming the man that should be two hundred yeeres after; for more assurance of the euent, that Israel may say, this man speakes from a God who knowes what shall be : There cannot bee a more sure euidence of a true Godhead, then the foreknowledge of those things, whose causes haue yet no hope of being; But because the proofe of this prediction was not more certaine, then remote; a present demonstration shall conuince the future; The Altar shall rend in peeces, the ashes shall be scattered : How amazedly must the seduced Israelites needes locke vpon this miracle; and why doe they not thinke with themselues; whiles these stones rend, why are our hearts whole ? Of what an ouer-ruling power is the God whom wee haue forsaken, that can thus teare the Altars of his corriualls ? How shall wee stand before his vengeance, when the very stones breake at the word of his Prophet ? Perhaps, some beholders were thus affected : but Ieroboam, whom it most concerned, in stead of bowing his knees for humiliation, stretcheth forth his hand for reuenge, and cryes, Lay hold on him. Resolute wickednesse is impatient of a reproofe, and in stead of yeelding to the voyce of God, rebelleth : Iust and discreet reprehension doth not more reforme some sinners, then exasperate others.

How easie it is for God to coole the courage of proud Ieroboam ? The hand which his rage stretches out, dryes vp, and cannot be pulled backe againe : and now stands the King of Israel like some anticke statue, in a posture of impotent endeuour; so disabled to the hurt of the Prophet, that hee cannot command that peece of himselfe; What are the great potentates of the world, in the powerfull hand of the Almighty ? Tyrants cannot be so harmefull as they are malicious.

The strongest heart may be brought downe with affliction; Now the stout stomach of Ieroboam is fallen to an humble deprecation, Intreat now the face of the Lord thy God, and pray for me, that my hand may bee restored mee againe. It must needs bee a great great ſtreight that cou'd driue a proud heart to begge mercy, where he bent his perſecution: ſo doth Ieroboam, holding it no ſcorne to be beholden to an enemy: In extremities, the worſt men can be content to ſue for fauour, where they haue ſpent their malice.

It well becomes the Prophets of God to be merciſull: I doe not ſee this Seer to ſtand vpon termes of exprobration, and ouerly conteſtations with Ieroboam, to ſay, Thine intentions to me were cruell; Had thine hand preuailed, I ſhould haue ſued to thee in vaine: Continue euer a ſpectacle of the fearfull iuſtice of thy Maker, whom thou haſt prouoked by thine Idolatry, whom thou wouldeſt haue ſmitten in my perſecution: but hee meekely ſues for Ieroboams releaſe: and (that God might abundantly magnifie both his power and mercy) is heard and anſwered with ſucceſſe: We doe no whit ſauour of heauen, if we haue not learned to doe good for euill.

When both winde and Sunne, the blaſts of iudgement, and the beames of fauour met tog ther to worke vpon Ieroboam, who would not looke that hee ſhould haue caſt off this cumbrous, and miſ-beſeeming cloake of his Idolatry; and haue ſaid, Lord thou haſt ſtricken mee in iuſtice, thou haſt healed mee in mercy; I will prouoke thee no more. This hand which thou haſt reſtored ſhall bee conſecrated to thee in pulling downe theſe bold abominations: Yet now, behold hee goes on in his old courſes, and, as if God had neither done him good nor euill, liues, and dies idolatrous: No ſtone is more hard or inſentate then a ſinfull heart: The changes of iudgement and mercy doe bur obdure it, in ſtead of meltings.

IEroboams hand is amended, his ſoule is not; that continues ſtill dry, and inflexible; Yet wh les hee is vnthankfull to the Author of his recouery, he is thankfull to the inſtrument: he kindely inuites the Prophet, whom he had threatned, and will remunerate him whom hee endeuoured to puniſh: The worſt men may be ſenſible of bodily fauours: Ciuill reſpects may well ſtand with graceleſſeneſſe: Many a one would be liberall of their purſes, if they might be allowed to be niggardly of their obedience.

As God, ſo his Prophet cares not for theſe waſte courteſies, where hee ſees maine duties neglected: More piety would haue done well, with leſſe complement: The man of God returnes a blunt and peremptory denial to ſo bounteous an offer: If thou wilt giue me halfe thine houſe, I will not goe in with thee, neither will I eate bread or drinke water in this place. Kindneſſe is more ſafely done to an Idolater, then taken from him; that which is done to him obligeth him, that which is taken from him obligeth vs: his obligation to vs may be occaſion of his good, our obligation to him may occaſion our hurt; the ſureſt way is to keepe aloofe from the infectiouſly wicked.

The Prophet is not vnciuill, to reiect the fauour of a Prince without ſome reaſon: He yeelds no reaſon of his refuſall but the command of his God: God hath charged him, Eate no bread, nor drinke no water, nor turne againe by the ſame way that thou cameſt: It is not for a Prophet to plead humane, or carnall grounds for the actions of his function: He may not moue but vpon a diuine warrant: would this Seer haue look't with the eyes of fleſh and blood, hee might haue found many arguments of his yeeldance. He is a King that inuites me; his reward, by enriching mee, may benefit many: and who knowes how much my further conuerſation may preuaile to reforme him? how can he be but well prepared for good counſell by a miraculous cure? how gainefully ſhould my receit of a temporall courteſie be exchanged with a ſpirituall to him?

him: All Israel will follow him either into Idolatry, or reformation; which way can be deuised of doing so great seruice to God and the Church, as by reclaiming him: what can yeeld so great likelihood of his reclamation, as the opportunitie of my further entirenesse with him? But the Prophet dares not argue cases, where hee had a command; what euer become of Ieroboam, and Israel, God must bee obeyed; Neither profit, nor hopes may carie vs crosse to the word of our Maker. How safe had this Seer beene, if he had kept him euer vpon this sure ward; which he no sooner leaues, then he miscaries.

So deeply doth God detest Idolatry, that he forbids his Prophet to eate the bread, to drinke the water of a people infected with this sinne; yea to tread in those very steps which their feet haue touched. If this inhibition were personall, yet the grounds of it are common. No pestilence should bee more shunned then the conuersation of the mis-religious, or openly scandalous: It is no thanke to vs if their familiarity doe not enfeoffe vs of their wickednesse.

I know not what to thinke of an old Prophet that dwels in Bethel, within the ayre of Ieroboams Idol, within the noyse of his sacrifices; that liues where the man of God dares not eate; that permitted his sonnes to bee present at that Idolatrous seruice: If he were a Prophet of God, what did he now in Bethel? why did hee winke at the sin of Ieroboam? what needed a Seer to come out of Iuda, for the reproofe of that sinne, which was acted vnder his nose? why did he lye? why did his family partake with Idolaters? If hee were not a Prophet of God; how had he true visions, how had he true messages from God: why did he second the menacing word of that Prophet, whom he seduced? why did he desire that his owne bones might be honoured with his Sepulcher? Doubtlesse he was a Prophet of God, but corrupt, restie, vicious: Prophecie doth not alwayes presuppose sanctification; many a one hath had visions from God, who shall neuer enioy the vision of God. A very Balaam in his extasies, hath so cleare a Reuelation of the Messiah to come, as scarce euer any of the holiest Prophets; yea, his very Asse hath both her mouth miraculously opened, and her eyes; to see and notifie that Angell, which was hid from her Master: Yea, Satan himselfe, sometimes receiues notice from God of his future actions, which else that euill Spirit could neither foretell, nor foresee. These kinds of graces are both rare, and common: rare, in that they are seldome giuen to any: common, in that they are indifferently giuen to the euill, and to the good: A little holinesse is worth much illumination.

Whether out of enuy, to heare that said by the Seer of Iuda, which he either knew not or smothered; to heare that done by another, which hee could not haue effected, and could not choose but admire: or whether out of desire to make tryall of the fidelitie of so powerfull a Messenger, the old Prophet hastens to ouertake, to recall that man of God, who had so defied his Bethel; whom he finds sitting faint and weary vnder an Oake, in the way; taking the benefit of that shade which hee hated to receiue from those contagious groues that he had left behinde him: His habit easily bewrayed him, to a man of his owne trade: neither doth his tongue spare to professe himselfe. The old Prophet of Bethel inuites him to a returne, to a repast: and is answered with the same words, wherewith Ieroboams offer was repelled; The man of God varies not a syllable from his message: It concernes vs to take good heed of our charge, when we goe on Gods errand. A deniall doth but inuite the importunate; what he cannot doe by entreatie, the old man tries to doe by perswasion, I am a Prophet also as thou art, and an Angell spake to me, by the word of the Lord, saying, Bring him backe with thee into thine house, that he may eat bread, and drinke water: There is no tentation so dangerous, as that which comes shrouded vnder a vaile of holinesse, and pretends authoritie of God himselfe: Ieroboam threatens, the Prophet stands vndanted; Ieroboam fawnes, and promises, the Prophet holds constant, now comes a gray-headed Seer, and pleads a counter-message from God, the Prophet yeelds, and transgresses. Satan may affright vs as a fiend, but he seduces vs as an Angell of light.

Who would haue lookt for a lyer vnder hoary haires, and an holy mantle? who would

would not haue trusted that grauity, when there was no colour of any gaine in the vntruth? Nothing is so apt to deceiue as the faireſt ſemblances, as the ſweeteſt words. We cannot erre if we beleeue not the ſpeech for the perſon, but the perſon for the ſpeech: Well might this man of God thinke, an aged man, a Prophet, an old Prophet, wil not (ſure) bely God vnto a Prophet; No man will forge a lie, but for an aduantage; What can this man gaine by this match, but the entertainment of an vnprofitable gueſt: Perhaps though God would not allow mee to feaſt with Ieroboam, yet pitying my faintneſſe, he may allow me to eate with a Prophet: Perhaps now that I haue approued my fidelity in refuſing the bread of Bethel, God thinks good to ſend me a gracious releaſe of that ſtrict charge: Why ſhould I thinke that Gods reuelations are not as free to others, as to me? and if this Prophet haue receiued a countermand from an Angell of God, how ſhall I not diſobey God, if I doe not follow him?

Vpon this ground he returnes with this deceitfull hoſt, & when the meat was now in his mouth, receiues the true meſſage of death, from the ſame lips that brought him the falſe meſſage of his inuitation; Thus ſaith the Lord, for as much as thou haſt diſobeyed the mouth of the Lord, & haſt not kept the commandement of the Lord thy God, but cameſt backe and haſt eaten bread, and drunke water in the place forbidden thee, thy carkaſſe ſhal not come to the Sepulcher of thy fathers. Oh woefull Prophet, when hee lookes on his hoſt he ſees his executioner, whiles he is feeding of his body, he heares of his carkaſſe; at the table, he heares of his denied Sepulcher; and all this, for eating and drinking where he was forbidden by God, though bidden as from God: The violation of the leaſt charge of a God is mortall: No pretences can warrant the tranſgreſſion of a diuine command: A word from God is pleaded on both ſides: The one was receiued immediately from God, the other related mediately by man: One the Prophet was ſure of, the other was queſtionable: A ſure word of God may not bee left for an vncertaine: An expreſſe charge of the Almighty admitteth not of any checke: His will is but one, as himſelfe is; and therefore it is out of the danger of contradiction.

Me thinkes I ſee the man of God change countenance at this ſharpe ſauce of his pleaſing morſels; his face before-hand is died with the paleneſſe of death: me thinkes I heare him vrging many vnkind expoſtulations with his iniurious hoſt; who yet diſmiſſes him better prouided for the eaſe of his iourny, then he found him. Perhaps, this officiouſneſſe was out of deſire to make ſome amends for this late ſeducement. It is a poore recompence when he hath betrayed his life, and wronged the ſoule, to caſt ſome courteſies vpon the body.

This old Bethelite that had taken paines to come, and fetch the man of God into ſin, will not now goe backe with him to accompany his departure: Doubtleſſe hee was afraid to be inwrapped in the iudgement, which hee ſaw hanged ouer that obnoxious head: Thus the miſchieuous guides of wickedneſſe leaue a man, when they haue led him to his bane; as familiar Deuils forſake their Witches, when they haue brought them once into fetters.

The man of God returnes alone, carefull (no doubt) and penſiue for his offence, when a Lion out of the wood meets him, aſſaults him, kils him: Oh the iuſt and ſeuere iudgements of the Almighty, who hath brought his fierce beaſt out of his wild ranges, into the high way, to be the executioner of his offending ſeruant: Doubtleſſe this Prophet was a man of great holineſſe, of ſingular fidelity; elſe he durſt not haue been Gods Herald to carie a meſſage of defiance to Ieroboam, King of Iſrael, in the midſt of all his royall magnificence; yet how, for varying from but a circumſtance of Gods command (though vpon the ſuggeſtion of a diuine warrant) is giuen for a prey to the Lion: Our intereſt in God, is ſo farre from excuſing our ſinne, that it aggrauates it; Of all others the ſinne of a Prophet ſhall not paſſe vnreuenged.

The very wild beaſts are led by a prouidence; Their wiſe and powerfull Creator knowes how to ſerue himſelfe of them. The Lions guard one Prophet, kill another, according to the commiſſion receiued from their Maker: What ſinner can hope to eſcape vnpuniſhed, when euery creature of God is ready to be an auenger of euill?

The beasts of the field were made to serue vs, we to serue our Creator: When we forsake our homage to him that made vs, it is no maruell if the beasts forget their duty to vs, and deale with vs not as Masters, but as rebels: When an holy man abuyes so dearely such a sleight frailty, of a credulous mistaking, what shall become of our hainous and presumptuous sinnes?

I cannot thinke but this Prophet died in the fauour of God, though by the teeth of the Lion; His life was forfeited for example, his soule was safe: Yea his very carkasse was left though torne, yet faire after those deadly graspes; as if God had said, I will onely take thy breath from thee, as the penalty of thy disobedience, a Lion shall doe that which an apoplexie, or feuer might doe: I owe thee no further reuenge then may be satisfied with thy blood.

Violent euents doe not alwaies argue the anger of God; Euen death it selfe is, to his seruants, a fatherly castigation.

But oh the vnsearchable wayes of the Almighty! The man of God sinnes, and dies speedily: the lying Prophet that seduced him, suruiues; Yea wicked Ieroboam enioyes his Idolatry, and treads vpon the graue of his reprouer: There is neither fauour in the delay of stripes, nor displeasure in the haste; Rather whom God loues, he chastises, as sharply, so speedily; whiles the rest prosper to condemnation: Euen the rod of a louing father may draw blood: How much happier is it for vs that wee die now, to liue for euer, then that we liue a while, to die euer?

Had this Lion set vpon the Prophet for hunger, why did hee not deuoure as well as kill him? Why did he not rather kill the beast then the man? since we know the nature of the Lion such, that he is not wont to assaile man, saue in the extreme want of other prey. Certainly the same power that imployed those fangs, restrained them, that the world might see, it was not appetite that prouoked the beast to this violence, but the ouer-ruling command of God: Euen so, O Lord, thy powerfull hand is ouer that roaring Lion, that goes about continually, seeking whom hee may deuoure? thine hand with-holds him, that though he may shed the blood of thine elect, yet he cannot hurt their soules; and whiles he doth those things which thou permittest, and ordereſt to thy iust ends, yet he cannot doe lesser things, which he desireth, and thou permittest not.

The fierce beast stands by the carkasse; as to auow his owne act, and to tell who sent him: so to preserue that body, which he hath slaine: Oh wonderfull worke of God, the Executioner is turned Guardian; and (as the Officer of the highest) commands all other creatures to stand aloofe from his charge: and commands the fearfull Asse, that brought this burthen thither, not to stirre thence, but stand ready prest, to recarie it to the Sepulcher: and now, when he hath sufficiently witnessed to all passengers, that this act was not done vpon his own hunger, but vpon the quarrell of his Maker, he deliuers vp his charge to that old Prophet; who was no lesse guilty of this blood then himselfe.

This old Seducer hath so much truth, as both to giue a right Commentary vpon Gods intention, in this act, for the tertour of the disobedient, and to giue his voice to the certaintie of that future iudgement; which his late guest had threatned to Israel: (sometimes it pleaseth the wisedome of God to expresse and iustifie himselfe euen by the tongues of faulty Instruments.) Withall, he hath so much faith and courage, as to fetch that carkasse from the Lion; so much pitty and compassion, as to weepe for the man of God, to interre him in his owne Sepulcher; so much loue, as to wish himselfe ioyned in death, to that body, which he had hastened vnto death: It is hard to finde a man absolutely wicked: Some grace will bewray it selfe in the most forsaken breasts.

It is a cruell courtesie to kill a man, and then to helpe him to his graue; to betray a man with our breath and then to bedew him with our teares: The Prophet had needed no such friend, if hee had not met with such an enemy: The mercies of the wicked are cruell.

IT is no measuring of Gods fauour by the line of outward welfare: Ieroboam the idolatrous vsurper of Israel prospers better, then the true heires of Dauid; Hee liues to see three successions in the throne of Iudah; Thus the Iuy liues, when the Oake is dead. Yet could not that miſ-gotten crown of his, keepe his head alwaies from aching: He hath his crosses too: God whips sometimes more then his owne: His enemies smart from him, as well as his children: his children in loue, his enemies in iudgment: Not simply the rod argues loue, but the temper of the hand, that weelds it, and the backe that feeles it: First Ieroboams hand was striken, now his Sonne: Abijah the eldest, the best sonne of Ieroboam, is smitten with sickneſſe: As children are but the pieces of their Parents in another skin, so Parents are no leſſe striken in their children, then in their naturall lims, Ieroboam doth not more feele his arme, then his sonne: not wicked men onely, but beasts may haue naturall affections: It is no thanke to any creature, to loue his owne.

Nature wrought in Ieroboam, not grace: He is enough troubled with his sons diseaſe, no whit bettered: I would haue heard him say; God followes me with his afflictions, it is for mine impietie: what other measure can I expect from his iuſtice? Whiles mine Idols stand, how can I looke that my houſe ſhould proſper? I will turne from my wickednes, O God, turne thou from thy wrath; Theſe thoughts were too good for that obdured heart: his son is sick, he is sorowfull; but (as an amazed man seeks to goe forth at the wrong doore) his distraction sends him to a falſe help: He thinks not of God, he thinks of his Prophet: He thinkes of the Prophet that had foretold him he ſhould be a King; he thinkes not of the God of that Prophet who made him a King: It is the property of a carnall heart to confine both his Obligations, and his hopes to the meanes, neglecting the Author of good. Vaine is the reſpect that is giuen to the seruant, where the Maſter is contemned.

Extremity drawes Ieroboams thoughts to the Prophet; whom elſe hee had not cared to remember. The King of Israel had Diuines enough of his owne: Elſe, he muſt needs haue thought them miſerable gods that were not worth a Prophet: And beſides, there was an old Prophet (if he yet ſuruiued) dwelling within the ſmoak of his Palace, whoſe viſions had beene too well approued: why would Ieroboam sends ſo farre to an Abijah? Certainly, his heart deſpiſed thoſe baſe prieſts of his high places; neither could he truſt either to the gods, or the Clergie of his own making: His conſcience reſts vpon the fidelitie of that man, whoſe doctrine hee had forſaken: How did this Idolater ſtriue against his owne heart, whiles hee inwardly deſpiſed thoſe, whom he profeſſed to honour; and inwardly honoured them, whom hee profeſſed to deſpiſe? Wicked breſts are falſe to themſelues; neither truſting to their owne choyce, nor making choyce of that, which they may dare to truſt. They will ſet a good face vpon their ſecretly vnpleaſing ſinnes, and had rather bee ſelfe-condemned, then wiſe and penitent: As for that old Seer, it is like Ieroboam knew his skill, but doubted of his ſinceritie; that man was too much his neighbour to be good: Abijahs truth had beene tryed in a caſe of his owne: Hee whoſe word was found iuſt in the prediction of his Kingdome, was well worthy of credit in the newes of his ſonne: Experience is a great encouragement of our truſt: It is a good matter to be faithfull; this loadſtone of our fidelity ſhall draw to vs euen hearts of iron, & hold them to our reliance: As contrarily deceit doth both argue, and make a bankrupt; who can truſt where he is diſappointed? O God, ſo oft, ſo euer, haue we found thee true in all thy promiſes, in all thy performances, that if we doe not ſeeke thee, if wee doe not truſt thee in the ſequell, wee are worthy of our loſſe, worthy of thy deſertions.

Yet I do not ſee that Ieroboam ſends to the Prophet for his aide, but for intelligence: Curioſity is guilty of this meſſage, and not deuotion; hee cals not for the prayers, not for for the benediction of that holy man, but for meere information of the euent. He well saw what the prayers of a Prophet could doe: That which cured his hand, might it not haue cured his sonne? Yet he that said to a man of God, Intreat the face of the Lord thy God, that he may restore my hand: sayes not now in his message to Abijah, Intreat thy God to restore my Sonne: Sinne makes such a strangenesse betwixt God and man, that the guilty heart either thinkes not of suing to God or feares it: What a poore contentment it was to foreknow that euill which hee could not auoid, and whose notice could but hasten his misery? Yet, thus fond is our restlesse curiosity, that it seekes ease in the drawing on of torment: He is worthy of sorrow that will not stay till it comes to him, but goes to fetch it.

Whom doth Ieroboam send on this message, but his wife, & how but disguised? Why her, and why thus? Neither durst he trust this errand with another, nor with her in her own forme: It was a secret that Ieroboam sends to a Prophet of God; none might know it but his owne bosome, and she that lay in it; if this had bin noised in Israel, the example had been dangerous: Who would not haue said, the King is glad to leaue his counterfet deities: and seeke to the true: Why should we adhere to them who loue it not? As the message must not be knowne to the people: so shee that beares it must not be knowne to the Prophet, her name, her habit must be changed: shee must put off her robes, and put on a russet coat; she must put off the Queene, and put on a base garment: in stead of her Scepter, she must take vp a basket, and goe a masked pilgrimage to Shiloh: Oh the fondnes of vaine men that thinke to iuggle with the Almighty, & to hide their counsels from that all-seeing eye! If this change of habit were necessary at Bethel, yet what needs it at Shiloh; though she would hide her face from her subiects, yet why should she not pull off her muffler, and shew her selfe to the Prophet? Certainly, what policy began, guiltinesse must continue: Well might she thinke, there can bee no good answer expected of the wife of Ieroboam; my presence will doe no lesse, then solicite reproofe: No Prophet can speake well to the consort of a founder of Idolatry; I may perhaps heare good as another, though as my selfe I can looke for nothing, but tydings of euill: Wicked hearts know they deserue ill at Gods hands, and therefore they doe all they can to auoyd the eyes of his displeased iustice, and if they cannot doe it by colours of dissimulation, they will doe it by imploration of shelter; they shall say to the Rocks, Fall on vs, and couer vs.

But oh the grosse folly mixt with the craft of wickednesse! could Ieroboam thinke that the Prophet could know the euent of his sons disease, & did he thinke that he could not know the disguise of his Wife? the one was present, the other future; this was but wrapt in a clout, that euent was wrapt vp in the counsell of God. Yet this politike head presumes that the greater shall be reuealed, where the lesser shall bee hid: There was neuer wicked man that was not infatuate, and in nothing more then in those things wherein he hoped most to transcend the reach of others.

Abijah shunning the iniquity of the times, was retired to a solitary corner of Shiloh; no place could be too priuate for an honest Prophet, in so extreame depraudnesse: Yet euen there doth the King of Israel take notice of his reclusion, and send his wife to that poore cell, laden with presents; presents that dissembled their bearer: had she offered iewels, or gold, her greatnesse had bin suspected: now she brings loaues and cracknels, and honey, her hand answers her backe: She giues, as she seemes, not as she is: Something she must giue, euen when she acts the pooreſt client.

The Prophets of God were not wont to haue empty visitations: they who hated bribes, yet refused not tokens of gratitude: Yea the God of heauen who neither needs our goods, nor is capable of our gratifications, yet would haue no man to come to him gift-lesse: Woe to those sacrilegious hands, that in stead of bringing to the Prophets carie from them.

Ieroboam was a bad man, yet, as he had a towardly son, so he had an obedient wife; else she had not wanted excuses to turne off both the iourney, and the disguise, against the disguise shee had pleaded the vnbeseemingnesse for her person and state; against the iourney, iourney, the perils of ſo long and ſolitary a walke; perhaps a Lion might be in the way; the Lion that tore the Prophet in peices; perhaps robbers; or if not they, perhaps her chaſtity might be in danger: an vnguarded ſolitarineſſe in the weaker ſexe might bee a prouocation to ſome forced vncleanneſſe: ſhe caſts off all theſe ſhifting proiections of feare, according to the will of her husband, ſhe changes her raiment, ſhe ſets vpon the iourney, and ouercomes it: What needed this diſguiſe to an old Prophet whoſe dim eyes were ſet with age? All cloathes, all faces were alike to a blind Seer: The viſions of Abijah were inward; neither was his bodily ſight more dusky, then the eyes of his minde were cleare & piercing: It was not the common light of men whereby hee ſaw, but diuine illumination; things abſent, things future, were no leſſe obuious to thoſe ſpirituall beames, then preſent things are to vs: Ere the quick eyes of that great Lady can diſcerne him, he hath eſpied her; and ſo ſoone as he heares the ſound of her feete, ſhee heares from him the ſound of her name, Come in thou Wife of Ieroboam: How GOD laughes in heauen at the friuolous fetches of crafty politicians, and when they thinke themſelues moſt ſure, ſhames them with a detection, with a defeat? What an idleneſſe it is for fooliſh Hypocrites to hope they can dance in a net vnſeene of heauen?

Neuer before was this Queene troubled to heare of her ſelfe; now ſhee is: her very name ſtrucke her with aſtoniſhment; and prepares her for the aſſured horrour of following iudgements, I am ſent to thee with heauy tydings; Goe tell Ieroboam: Thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael. Could this Lady leſſe wonder at the mercy of this ſtile of God, then tremble at the ſequel of his iuſtice? Lo Iſrael hath forſaken God, yet God ſtil ownes Iſrael. Iſrael had gone a whoring, yet God hath not diuorced her: Oh the infinit goodnes of our long-ſuffering God, whom our fouleſt ſins cannot rob of his compaſſions.

By how much dearer Iſrael was to God, ſo much more odious is Ieroboam that hath marred Iſrael: Terrible is that vengeance which God thunders againſt him by his Prophet whoſe paſsionate meſſage vpbraids him with his promotions, chargeth him with his ſinnes, and laſtly denounceth his iudgements: No mouth was fitter to caſt this royalty in the teeth of Ieroboam, then that, by which it was firſt foretold, fore-promiſed; Euery circumſtance of the aduancement aggrauates the ſin, I exalted thee: Thou couldeſt not riſe to honour alone. I exalted thee from among the people: not from the Peeres; thy ranke was but common, before this riſe: I exalted thee from among the people to be a Prince; ſubordinate height was not enough for thee, no ſeat would ſerue thee but a throne; Yea to be a Prince of my people Iſrael: No Nation was for thee, but my choſen one; none but my royall inheritance: Neither did I rayſe thee into a vacant throne; a forlorne and forſaken Principalitie might be thankleſſe: but I rent the Kingdome away from another for thy ſake, yea from what other but the grandchild of Dauid? out of his hands did I wreſt the Scepter, to giue it into thine: Oh what high fauours doth God ſometimes caſt away vpon vnworthy ſubiects? How doe his abuſed bounties double both their ſinne and iudgement.

The ſinnes of this Prince were no leſſe eminent then his obligations, therefore his iudgements ſhall bee no leſſe eminent then his ſinnes: How bitterly doth GOD expreſſe that, which ſhall be more bitter in the execution: Behold, I will bring euill vpon the houſe of Ieroboam, and will cut off from Ieroboam, him that piſſeth againſt the wall; and him that is ſhut vp, and left in Iſrael, and will take away the remnant of the houſe of Ieroboam, as a man taketh away dung, till it be all gone: Him that dieth of Ieroboam in the City ſhall the dogs eate, and him that dyeth in the field, ſhall the fowles of the ayre eat: Oh heauy loade that this diſguiſed Princeſſe muſt carie to her Husband; but becauſe theſe euils, though grieuous, yet might be remote, therefore for a preſent hanſell of vengeance, ſhe is diſmiſſed with the ſad tydings, of the death of her ſonne; When thy feet enter into the City, the Childe ſhall dye: It is heauy newes for a mother that ſhee muſt leeſe her ſonne, but worſe yet that ſhee may not ſee him; In theſe caſes of our finall departures, our preſence giues ſome mitigation to our griefe: might ſhee but haue cloſed the eyes, and haue receiued the laſt breath of her dying ſonne, the loſſe had bin more tolerable; I know not how our perſonall farewell eaſes our heart

euen whiles it increaſes our paſſion; but now ſhe ſhall no more ſee, nor bee ſeene of her Abijah: She ſhall no ſooner be in the City, then hee ſhall bee out of the world: Yet, more to perfect her ſorrow, ſhee heares that in him alone there is found ſome good; the reſt of her iſſue, are graceleſſe; ſhe muſt leeſe the good, and hold the graceleſſe; he ſhall die to afflict her, they ſhall liue to afflict her.

Yet what a mixture is here of ſeuerity and fauour in one act? fauour to the ſonne, ſeuerity to the father: Seuerity to the father, that he muſt leeſe ſuch a ſonne, fauour to the ſonne that he ſhall be taken from ſuch a father: Ieroboam is wicked, and therefore he ſhall not enioy an Abijah; Abijah hath ſome good things, therefore hee ſhall be remoued from the danger of the deprauation of Ieroboam: Sometimes God ſtrikes in fauour, but more often forbeares out of ſeuerity: The beſt are fitteſt for heauen; the earth is fitteſt for the worſt; this is the region of ſinne, and miſery, that of immortality: It is no argument of diſ-fauour to be taken early from a well-led life; as not of approbation to age in ſinne.

As the ſoule of Abijah is fauoured in the remouall, ſo is his body with a buriall; hee ſhall haue alone both teares and tombe; all the reſt of his brethen ſhall haue no graue but dogs and fowles; no ſorrow but for their life: Though the carkaſſe be inſenſible of any poſition, yet honeſt Sepulture is a bleſſing: It is fit the body ſhould bee duely reſpected on earth, whoſe ſoule is glorious in heauen.

Asa.

THe two houſes of Iuda, and Iſrael, grow vp now together in an ambitious riualitie; this ſplitted plant branches out ſo ſeuerally, as if it had forgotten that euer it was ioyned in the root: The throne of Dauid oft changeth the poſſeſſors; & more complaineth of their iniquity, then their remoue: Abijam inherits the ſins of his father Rehoboam, no leſſe then his Crown: and ſo ſpends his three yeares, as if he had beene no whit of kin to his grandfathers vertues. It is no newes that grace is not traduced, whiles vice it: Therefore is his reigne ſhort becauſe it was wicked: It was a ſad caſe when both the Kings of Iudah and Iſraell (though enemies) yet conſpired in ſinne: Rehoboam (like his father Salomon) began gratiouſly, but fell to Idolatry: as he followed his father, ſo his ſonne, ſo his people followed him. Oh, what a face of a Church was here, when Iſrael worſhipped Ieroboams calues, when Iudah built them high places, and Images, and groues on euery high Hill, and vnder euery greene tree: On both hands GOD is forſaken, his Temple neglected, his worſhip adulterate: and this, not for ſome ſhort brunt, but during the ſucceſſion of two Kings: For, after the firſt three yeares Rehoboam changed his fathers Religion (as his ſhields) from gold to braſſe; the reſt of his ſeuenteene yeares were ledde in impietie: His ſonne Abijam trod in the ſame mierie ſteps, and Iudah with them both: If there were any (doubtleſſe there were ſome) faithfull hearts, yet remaining in both Kingdomes, during theſe heauy times, what a corroſiue it muſt needs haue beene to them, to ſee ſo deplored and miſerable a deprauation.

There was no viſible Church vpon earth, but here; and this what a one? Oh GOD, how low doeſt thou ſometimes ſuffer thine owne flocke to bee driuen? What woefull wanes, and eclipſes haſt thou ordayned for this heauenly body? Yet at laſt, an Aſa ſhall ariſe from the loynes, from the graue of Abijam: hee ſhall reuiue Dauid & reforme Iudah: The gloomy times of corruption ſhall not laſt alwaies: The light of truth and peace ſhall at length breake out, and bleſſe the ſad hearts of the righteous.

It

It is a wonder how Asa should bee good, of the seed of Abijam, of the soyle of Maachah, both wicked, both Idolatrous; God would haue vs see that grace is from heauen, neither needes the helpes of these earthly conueiances: Should not the children of good parents sometimes be euill, and the children of euill parents, good; vertue would seeme naturall, and the giuer would leese his thankes? Thus we haue seene a fayre flower spring out of dung; and a well-fruited tree rise out of a sowre stocke: Education hath no lesse power to corrupt, then nature; It is therefore the iust prayse of Asa that being trained vp vnder an Idolatrous Maachah, hee maintained his piety; As contrarily, it is a shame for those that haue beene bred vp in the precepts and examples of vertue and Godlinesse, to fall off to lewdnesse, or superstition: There are foure principall monuments of Asaes vertue, as so many rich stones in his Diadem: He tooke away Sodomie, and Idols out of Iudah; Who cannot wonder more that he found them there, then that he remoued them? What a strange incongruitie is this; Sodom in Ierusalem? Idols in Iudah? Surely debauched profession proues desperate; Admit the Idols, yee cannot doubt of the Sodomy; If they haue changed the glory of the vncorruptible God, into an Image, made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and foure-footed beasts, and creeping things, it is no maruell, if God giue them vp to vncleanesse through the lusts of their owne hearts, to dishonour their owne bodies, betweene themselues; If they changed the truth of God into a lye, and worshipped and serued the creature more then the Creator, who is blessed for euer, no maruell, if God giue them to vile affections, to change the naturall vse into that which is against nature; burning in lust one towards another, men with men working that which is vnseemly.

Contrarily, admit the Sodomy, yee cannot doubt of the Idols; vnnaturall beastlinesse in manners, is punished iustly with a sottish dotage in religion; bodily pollution with spirituall: How should the soule care to bee chaste, that keepes a stewes in the body? Asa begins with the banishment of both; scouring Iudah of this double vncleanesse: In vaine should he haue hoped to restore God to his Kingdome, whiles these abominations inhabited it; It is iustly the maine care of worthy, and religious Princes, to cleare their Coasts of the foulest sinnes: Oh the vnpartiall zeale of Asa; There were Idols that challenged a prerogatiue of fauour; The Idols that his father had made, all these he defaces; the name of a father cannot protect an Idoll: The duty to his Parent cannot winne him to a liking, to a forbearance of his misdeuotion: Yea, so much the more doth the heart of Asa rise against these puppets, for that they were the sinne, the shame of his father: Did there want (thinke we) some Courtier of his Fathers retinue, to say: Sir, fauour the memory of him that begot you; you cannot demolish these statues, without the dishonour of their Erector: Hide your dislike at the least; It will bee your glory to lay your finger vpon this blot of your fathers reputation: If you list not to allow his act, yet winke at it: The godly zeale of Asa turnes the deafe eare to these monitors, and lets them see, that he doth not more honor a father, then hate an Idol; No deareneſſe of person should take off the edge of our detestation of the sinne. Nature is worthy of forgetfulnesse, and contempt, in opposition to the God of Nature: Vpon the same ground, as hee remoued the Idols of his father Abijam, so for Idols he remoued his Grand-mother Maachah; shee would not bee remoued from her obscene Idols, she is therefore remoued from the station of her honour: That Princesse had aged both in her regency, and superstition: Vnder her rod was Asa brought vp; and schooled in the rudiments of her Idolatry; whom she could not infect, she hoped to ouer-awe; so, as if Asa will not follow her gods, yet she presumes that shee may retaine her owne: Doubtlesse, no meanes were neglected for her reclamation; none would preuaile: Religious Asa gathers vp himselfe, and begins to remember that he is a King, though a sonne: that shee, though a mother yet is a subiect: that her eminence could not but countenance Idolatry, that her greatnesse suppressed religion: which hee should in vaine hope to reforme, whiles her superstition swayed: forgeting therefore the challenges of nature, the awe of infancy, the cuſtome of reuerence, hee ſtrips her of that command, which hee ſaw preiudiciall to his Maker; All reſpects of fleſh and blood muſt be trampled on, for God: Could that long-ſetled Idolatry want abettors? Queſtionleſſe, ſome or other would ſay; This was the religion of your father Abijam, this of your Grand-father Rehoboam, this of the latter dayes of your wife and great Grand-father Salomon, this of your Grand-mother Maachah, this of your great Grand-mother Naamah; why ſhould it not be yours? Why ſhould you ſuſpect either the wiſedome, or piety, or ſaluation of ſo many Predeceſſors? Good Aſa had learned to contemne preſcription againſt a direct law: He had the grace to know it was no meaſuring truth by ſo moderne antiquity; his eyes ſcorning to looke ſo low, raiſe vp themſelues to the vncorrupt times of Salomon, to Dauid, to Samuel, to the Iudges, to Ioſhua, to Moſes, to the Patriarkes, to Noah, to the religious founders of the firſt world, to the firſt father of mankinde; to Paradiſe, to Heauen: In compariſon of theſe, Maachahs God cannot ouerlooke yeſterday; the ancienteſt error is but a nouice, to Truth; And if neuer any example could be pleaded for purity of religion; it is enough that the precept is expreſs: Hee knew what God ſayd in Sinai, and wrote in the Tables: Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelfe any grauen image, nor any ſimilitude; Thou ſhalt not bow downe to them nor worſhip them: If all the world had beene an Idolater, euer ſince that word was giuen, hee knew how little that precedent could auaile for diſobedience: Practice muſt bee corrected by law, and not the law yeeld to practice: Maachah therefore goes downe from her ſeat; her Idols from their groue; ſhee to retirednesſe, they to the fire, and from thence to the water: Wofull deities that could both burne, and drowne.

Neither did the zeale of Aſa more magnifie it ſelfe in theſe priuatiue acts of weeding out the corruptions of Religion, then in the poſitiue acts of an holy plantation; In the falling of thoſe Idolatrous ſhrines, the Temple of God flouriſhes; That doth he furniſh with thoſe ſacred treaſures, which were dedicated by himſelfe, by his Progenitors; Like the true ſonne of Dauid, hee would not ſerue God coſt-free: Rehoboam turned Salomons gold into braſſe: Aſa turnes Rehoboams braſſe into gold: Some of theſe veſſels (it ſeemes) Abijam (Aſaes father) had dedicated to God; but after his vow, inquired; yea with-held them: Aſa, like a good ſonne, payes his fathers debts, and his owne. It is a good ſigne of a well-meant deuotion, when wee can abide it chargeable; as contrarily in the affaires of God a niggardly hand argues a cold, and hollow heart.

All theſe were noble and excellent acts, the extirpation of Sodomie, the demolition of Idols, the remouall of Maachah, the bounteous contribution to the Temple; but that which giues true life vnto all theſe, is a ſound root: Aſaes heart was perfect with the Lord all his dayes; No leſſe laudable workes then theſe haue proceeded from Hypocriſie; which whiles they haue caried away applauſe from men, haue loſt their thankes with God: All Aſaes gold was but droſſe to his pure intentions.

But oh what great, and many infirmities may conſiſt with vprightneſſe? what allayes of imperfection will there be found in the moſt refined ſoule? Foure no ſmall faults are found in true-hearted Aſa: Firſt the high-places ſtood ſtill, vnremoued; What high-places? There were ſome dedicated to the worſhip of falſe gods; theſe Aſa tooke away: There were ſome miſdeuoted to the worſhip of the true God; theſe hee lets ſtand; There was groſſe Idolatry in the former; there was a weake will-worſhip in the latter; whiles hee oppoſes impiety, hee winkes at miſtakings, yet euen the varietie of altars was forbidden by an expreſſe charge from God, who had confined his ſeruice to the Temple: With one breath doth God report both theſe; The high places were not removed, yet neuertheleſſe Aſaes heart was perfit. God will not ſee weaknesſes, where he ſees truth: How pleaſing a thing is ſinceritie, that in fauour thereof the mercy of our iuſt God digeſts many an errour: Oh God, let our hearts goe vpright, through our feet ſlide, the fall cannot (through thy grace) be deadly; how euer it may ſhame or paine vs.

Beſides

Beſides, to confront his riuall of Iſrael, Baaſha, this religious King of Iudah fetches in Benhadad the King of Syria into Gods inheritance, vpon too deare a rate; the breach of his league, the expilation of the Temple. All the wealth wherewith Aſa had endowed the Houſe of the Lord, was little enough to hire an Edomite, to betray his fidelitie, and to inuade Iſrael: Leagues may bee made with Infidels; not at ſuch a price, vpon ſuch tearmes; There can bee no warrant for a wilfull ſubornation of perfidiouſneſſe: In theſe caſes of outward things, the mercy of God diſpenceth with our true neceſſities, not with the affected: O Aſa where was thy piety, whiles thou robbeſt God, to corrupt an Infidell for the ſlaughter of Iſraelites? O Princes, where is your pietie, whiles yee hire Turkes to the ſlaughter of Chriſtians? to the ſpoile of Gods Church? 2

Yet (which was worſe) Aſa doth not onely imploy the Syrian, but relies on him, relies not on God; A confidence leſſe ſinfull coſt his Grand-father Dauid deare: And when Hanani Gods Seer, the Herald of heauen, came to denounce warre againſt him for theſe ſinnes, Aſa in ſtead of penitence, breakes into choler: Fury ſparkles in thoſe eyes, which ſhould haue guſhed out with water; Thoſe lips that ſhould haue call'd for mercy, command reuenge; How ill doe theſe two agree, The heart of Dauid, the tongue of Ieroboam? That holy Grand-father of his would not haue done ſo; when Gods meſſenger reproued him for ſinne, hee condemned it, and himſelfe for it; I ſee his teares, I doe not heare his threats: It ill becomes a faithfull heart to rage, where it ſhould ſorrow; and in ſtead of ſubmiſſion, to perſecute: Sometimes no difference appeares betwixt a ſonne of Dauid, and the ſonne of Nebat: Any man may doe ill, but to defend it, to outface it, is for rebels; yet euen vpright Aſa impriſons the Prophet, and cruſheth his gainſayers. It were pitie that the beſt man ſhould bee iudged by euery of his actions, and not by all; The courſe of our life muſt either allow or condemne vs, not theſe ſudden eruptions. 3

As the Life, ſo the Death-bed of Aſa wanted not infirmities; Long and proſperous had his reigne beene; now after forty yeares health and happineſſe, hee that impriſoned the Prophet, is impriſoned in his bed; There is more paine in thoſe fetters which God put vpon Aſa, then thoſe which Aſa puts vpon Hanani: And now, behold, hee that in his warre ſeekes to Benhadad, not to God, in his ſickneſſe ſeekes not to God, but to Phyſitians: Wee cannot eaſily put vpon God a greater wrong, then the alienation of our truſt: Earthly meanes are for vſe, not for confidence; We may, wee muſt imploy them; we may not rely vpon them: Well may God challenge our truſt, as his peculiar, which if wee caſt vpon any creature, wee deifie it: Whence haue herbes, and drugges, and Phyſitians, their being, and efficacie, but from that diuine hand? No maruell then if Aſaes gout ſtrucke to his heart, and his feet caried him to his graue, ſince his heart was miſcaried for the cure of his feet, to an iniurious miſ-confidence in the meanes, with neglect of his Maker. 4

WHo ſhould be match't with Moſes in the hill of Tabor, but Elijah? Surely next after Moſes, there was neuer any Prophet of the old Teſtament more glorious then hee: None more glorious, none more obſcure; The other Prophets are not mentioned without the name of their Parent, for the mutuall honour both of the father, and the ſonne; Elijah, (as if he had beene a ſonne of the earth) come forth with the bare mention of the place of his birth; Meanneſſe of deſcent is no blocke in Gods way to the moſt honourable vocations; It matters not whoſe ſonne he be whom God will grace with his ſeruice: In the greateſt honours that humane nature is capable of, God forgets our parents: As when we ſhall be raiſed vp to a glorious life, there ſhall be no reſpect had to the loines whence we came; ſo it is proportionally in theſe ſpirituall aduancements.

Theſe times were fit for an Elijah; an Elijah was fit for them; The eminenteſt Prophet is reſerued for the corrupteſt age; Iſrael had neuer ſuch a King as Ahab, for impiety; neuer ſo miraculous a Prophet, as Elijah; This Elijah is addreſſed to this Ahab; The God of Spirits knowes how to proportion men to the occaſions; and to raiſe vp to himſelfe ſuch witneſſes, as may be moſt able to conuince the world: A milde Moſes was for the low eſtate of afflicted Iſrael; milde of ſpirit, but mighty in wonders; milde of ſpirit, becauſe he had to doe with a perſecuted, and yet a techy and peruerſe people; mighty in wonders, becauſe he had to doe with a Pharaoh. A graue and holy Samuel was for the quiet conſiſtence of Iſrael; A fierie-ſpirited Elijah was for the deſperateſt declination of Iſrael: and if in the late times of the depraued condition of his Church, God haue raiſed vp ſome ſpirits that haue beene more warme, and ſtirring, then thoſe of common mould, wee cannot cenſure the choyce, when we ſee the ſeruice.

The firſt word that we heare from Elijah, is an oath, and a threat to Ahab, to Iſrael: As the Lord God of Iſrael liueth, before whom I ſtand, there ſhall not be dew, nor raine, theſe yeares but according to my word: Hee comes in like a Tempeſt, who went out in a whirl-wind; Doubtleſſe he had ſpoken faire, and peaceable inuitations to Iſrael (though wee heare them not;) This was but the ſtorme which followed his repulſe, their obſtinacy; After many ſolicitations, and warnings, Iſrael is ſtricken by the ſame tongue that had prayed for it; Elijah dares auouch theſe iudgements to their head, to Ahab: I doe not ſo much wonder at the boldneſſe of Elijah, as at his power; Yea, who ſees his power, can no whit wonder at his boldneſſe: How could hee bee but bold to the face of a man, who was thus powerfull with God? As if God had lent him the keyes of heauen to ſhut it vp, and open it at pleaſure; hee can ſay, There ſhall be neither dew, nor raine, theſe yeares but according to my word; Oh God, how farre it hath pleaſed thee to communicate thy ſelfe to a weake man? What Angell could euer ſay thus? Thy hand, O Lord, is not ſhortned; Why art thou not thus maruellous in the miniſters of thy Goſpell? Is it for that their miracles were ours? Is it for that thou wouldſt haue vs liue by faith, not by ſenſe? Is it for that our taske is more ſpirituall, and therefore more abſtracted from bodily helpes? we cannot command the Sunne with Ieſhua, nor the Thunder with Samuel, nor the Raine with Elijah; It ſhall content vs if we can fixe the Sunne of righteouſneſſe in the ſoule, if wee can thunder out the iudgements of God againſt ſinne, if wee can water the earthen hearts of men with the former, and latter raine of heauenly doctrine.

Elijah

Elijahs mantle cannot make him forget his flesh; whiles he knowes himselfe a Prophet, he remembers to be a man; hee doth not therefore arrogate his power, as his owne, but publisheth it as his masters; This restraint must be according to his word; and that word was from an higher mouth, then his: He spake from him by whom he sware; whose word was sure as his life; and therefore he durst say, As the Lord liueth, there shall be no raine: Man onely can denounce what God will execute; which when it is once reuealed, can no more faile, then the Almighty himselfe.

He that had this interest and power in heauen, what needed he flee from an earthly pursuit? Could his prayers restraine the clouds, and not hold the hands of flesh and blood? Yet behold Elijahs must flee from Ahab, and hide him by the brooke Cherith; The wisedome of God doth not thinke fit so to make a beaten path of miracles; at that hee will not walke beside it; Hee will haue our owne indeuours concurre to our preseruation; Elijah wanted neither courage of heart, nor strength of hand, and yet he must trust to his feet for safety; How much more lawfull is it for our impotency to flee from persecution? Euen that God sends him to hide his head, who could as easily haue protected, as nourished him: Hee that wilfully stands still to latch dangers, tempteth God in stead of trusting him.

The Prophet must be gone; not without order taken for his purueyance; Oh the strange Cators for Elijah, I haue commanded the Rauens to feed thee there; I know not whether had beene more miraculous, to preserue him without meat, or to prouide meat by such mouthes: The Rauen, a deuouring and rauenous fowle, that vses to snatch away meat for others, brings it to him: Hee that could haue fed Elijah by Angels, will feed him by Rauens; There was then in Israel an hospitall Obadiah, that kept a secret Table in two seuerall caues, for an hundred Prophets of God; There were seuen thousand faithfull Israelites (in spight of the Diuell) who had neuer bowed knee to Baal; Doubtlesse, any of these would haue had a trencher ready for Elijah, and haue thought himselfe happy to haue defrauded his owne maw, for so noble a Prophet; God rather choses to make vse of the most vnlikely fowles of the ayre, then their bounty; that hee might giue both to his Propher, and vs a pregnant proofe of his absolute command ouer all his creatures, and winne our trust in all extremities. Who can make question of the prouisions of God, when he sees the very Rauens shall forget their owne hunger, and purucy for Elijah? Oh God, thou that prouidest meat for the fowles of the ayre, wilt make the fowles of the ayre prouide meat for man, rather then his dependance on thee shall be disappointed; Oh let not our faith be wanting to thee, thy care can neuer be wanting to vs.

Elijah might haue liued for the time with bread and water; neither had his fare been worse then his fellowes in the caues of Obadiah; but the munificence of God will haue his meales better furnished; The Rauens shall bring him both bread, and flesh, twice in the day; It is not for a persecuted Prophet to long after delicates; God giues order of competency, not for wantonnesse; Not out of the daintie compositions in Iezebels kitchin, not out of the pleasant Wines in her celler; would God prouide for Elijah, but the Rauens shall bring him plaine, and homely victualls, and the riuer shall affoord him drinke; If we haue wherewith to sustaine nature (though not to pamper it) we owe thankes to the giuer; Those of Gods family may not be curious, not disdainfull: Ill doth it become a seruant of the highest, to be a slaue to his palate. Doubtlesse, one bit from the mouth of the Rauen was more pleasing to Elijah, then a whole Table-full of Ahab: Nothing is more comfortable to Gods children, then to see the sensible demonstrations of the diuine care, and prouidence.

The brook Cherith cannot last alwaies; that stream shall not for Elijahs sake be exempted from the vniuersall exsiccation; Yea the Prophet himselfe feeles the smart of this drought, which hee had denounced; It is no vnusuall thing with God to suffer his owne deare children to be inwrapped in the common calamities of offenders: He makes difference in the vse, and issue of their stripes, not in the infliction; The corne is cut downe with the weeds, but to a better purpose.

When the brooke failes, God hath a Zarephath for Elijah; In ſtead of the Rauens, a Widow ſhall there feed him; yea her ſelfe by him: Who can enough wonder at the pitch of this ſelectiue prouidence of the Almighty; Zarephath was a towne of Sidon, and therefore without the pale of the Church; Pouerty was the beſt of this Widow, ſhe was a Pagan by birth, heatheniſhly ſuperſtitious by inſtitution; Many Widowes were in Iſrael in the daies of Elijah when the heauen was ſhut vp three yeares, and ſix moneths, when great famine was throughout all the Land, but vnto none of them was Elias ſent, ſaue vnto this Sarepta, a City of Sidon, vnto a woman that was a Widow; He that firſt fed the Prophet by the mouth of vncleane fowles, will now feed him by the hand of an heatheniſh Hoſteſſe; His onely command ſanctifies thoſe creatures which by a generall charge were legally impure.

There were other birds beſides Rauens, other Widowes beſides this Sareptan; none but the Rauens, none but the Sareptan ſhall nouriſh Elijah. Gods choice is not led in the ſtring of humane reaſons, his holy will is the guide, and the ground of all his elections. It is not in him that wils, nor in him that runnes, but in God that ſhewes mercy.

The Prophet followes the call of his God; the ſame hand that brought him to the gate of Sarepta, led alſo this poore widow out of her doores, ſhee ſhall then goe to ſeeke her ſticks, when ſhee ſhall bee found of Elijah; ſhee thought of her hearth, ſhe thought not of a Prophet; when the man of God cals to her, Fetch me a little water (I pray thee) in a veſſell, that I may drinke. It was no eaſie ſuit in ſo droughtie a ſeaſon; and yet, at the firſt ſight, the Prophet dares ſecond it with a greater; Bring me a morſell of bread in thine hand; That long drought had made euery drop, euery crum precious; yet the Prophet is emboldened by the charge of God to call for both water and bread; He had found the Rauens ſo officious, that he cannot make doubt of the Sareptan: She ſticks not at the water, ſhe would not ſticke at the bread, if neceſſitie had not preſſed her: As the Lord thy God liueth, I haue not a cake, but an handfull of meale in a barrell, and a little oyle in a cruſe, and behold I am gathering two ſtickes, that I may goe in and dreſſe it for me and my ſon, that we may eat it and dye.

If ſhe knew not the man, how did ſhee know his God? and if ſhee knew not the God of Elijah, how did ſhee ſweare by him? Certainely though ſhee were without the bounds of Iſrael, yet ſhe was within the borders; ſo much ſhee had gained by her neighbourhood, to know an Iſraelite, a Prophet by his habit; to know the onely liuing God was the God of the Prophet, the God of Iſrael; and if this had not beene, it is no maruell if the widow knew Elijah, ſince the Rauens knew him. It was high time for the Prophet to viſit the Sareptan; poore ſoule, ſhee was now making her laſt meale, after one meane morſell ſhe was yeelding her ſelfe ouer to death. How opportunely hath God prouided ſuccours to our diſtreſſes? It is his glory to helpe at a pinch, to begin where we haue giuen ouer: that our reliefe might be ſo much the more welcome, by how much it is leſſe look't for.

But oh, what a tryall is this of the faith of a weake Proſelyte, if ſhee were ſo much; Feare not, goe doe as thou haſt ſaid, but make me thereof a little cake firſt, and bring it to me, and after make for thee, and thy ſonne. For, thus ſaith the God of Iſrael, The barrell of meale ſhall not waſte, nor the cruſe of oyle faile till the day that God ſend raine vpon the earth: She muſt goe ſpend vpon a ſtranger part of that little ſhe hath, in hope of more which ſhe hath not, which ſhe may haue; ſhe muſt part with her preſent food, which ſhe ſaw, in truſt of future which ſhe could not ſee; ſhe muſt rob her ſenſe in the exerciſe of her beleef, & ſhorten her life in being, vpon the hope of a protracti̅o of it, in promiſe; ſhe muſt beleeue God will miraculouſly increaſe what ſhee hath yeelded to conſume; ſhe muſt firſt feed the ſtranger with her laſt victuals, and then after her ſelfe, and her ſonne: Some ſharpe dame would haue ſhaken vp the Prophet, and haue ſent him away with an angry repulſe: Bold Iſraelite, there is no reaſon in this requeſt, wert thou a friend, or a brother, with what face couldeſt thou require to pull my laſt bit out of my mouth? Had I ſuperfluitie of prouiſion, thou mighteſt hope for this effect of my charitie, charitie; now, that I haue but one morsell for my selfe, and my sonne, this is an iniurious importunitie; what can induce thee to thinke thy life (an vnknowne traueller) should be more deare to me, then my sons, then my owne? How vncivill is this motion that I should first make prouision for thee, in this dying extremitie? It had bin too much to haue begged my last scraps; Thou tellest me the meale shall not waste, nor the oile faile, how shall I beleeue thee? Let me see thee done, before thou eatest. In vaine should I challenge thee, when the remainder of my poore store is consumed. If thou canst so easily multiply victuals, how is it that thou plantest? Doe that before-hand, which thou promisest shall be after-wards performed, there will be no neede of any title. But this good Sarepta was wrought by God not to mistrust a Prophet, she will doe what he bids, and hope for what he promises, she will liue by faith rather then by sense, and giue away the present, in the confidence of a future remuneration; first she bakes Elijahs cake, then her owne; not grudging to see her last morsels goe downe anothers throat, whiles her selfe was famishing. How hard precepts doth God lay where he intends bounty; Had not God meant her preseruation, he had suffred her to eat her last cake alone, without any interpellation; now the mercy of the Almighty purposing as well this miraculous fauour to her, as to his Prophet, requires of her this taske, which flesh and blood would haue thought vnreasonable. So we are wont to put hard questions to those schollers, whom we would promote to higher formes. So in all atchiuements the difficulty of the enterprise makes way for the glory of the actor.

Happy was it for this widow, that shee did not shut her hand to the man of God; that she was no niggard of her last handfull. Neuer corne or oliue did so increase in sowing, as here in confirming; This barrell, this cruse of hers had no bottome, the barrell of meale wasted not, the cruse of oyle failed not; Behold, not getting, not saue, is the way to abundance, but giuing. The mercy of God crownes our beneficence with the blessing of store; who can feare want by a mercifull liberality, when he sees the Sarepta had famished, if she had not giuen, and by giuing abounded? With what thankfull deuotion must this woman euery day needs look vpon her barrell, and cruse, wherein shee saw the mercy of God renewed to her continually? Doubtlesse her soule was no lesse fed by faith, then her body with this supernaturall prouision. How welcome a guest must Elijah needs be to this widow, that gaue her life and her sonnes to her, for his board? yea, that in that woful famine gaue her and her sonne her board for his house-roome.

The dearth thus ouercome, the mother looks hopefully vpon her onely sonne, promising her selfe much ioy in his life and prosperity, when an vnexpected sicknesse surpriseth him, and doth that which the famine but threatned: When can we hold our selues secure from euills? No sooner is one of these Sergeants compounded withall, then wee are arrested by another.

How ready we are to mistake the grounds of our afflictions, and to cast them vpon false causes; The passionate mother cannot find whither to impute the death of her son, but to the presence of Elijah: to whom she comes distracted with perplexitie, not without an vnkinde challenge of him, from whom shee had receiued both that life shee had lost, and that she had, What haue I to do with thee, O thou man of God; Art thou come to me to call my sin to remembrance, and to slay my sonne?

As if her son could not haue died if Elijah had not been her guest; when as her son had dyed, but for him; why should shee thinke that the Prophet had saued him from the famine, to kill him with sicknesse? As if God had not been free in his actions, and must needes strike by the same hands, by which he preserued; Shee had the grace to know that her affliction was for her sinne; yet was so vnwise, to imagine the arrerages of her iniquities had not bin called for, if Elijah had not been the remembrancer; He who had appeased God towards her, is suspected to haue incensed him; This wrongfull misconstruction was enough to moue any patience; Elijah was of an hot spirit; yet his holinesse kept him from fury; This challenge rather increased the zeale of his prayer, then stirred his choller to the offendent: Hee takes the dead child out of his mothers bosome, and layes him vpon his owne bed, and cries vnto the Lord; Oh Lord my God, hast thou brought euill also vpon the Widow with whom I soiourne, by slaying her sonne? In stead of chiding the Sareptan, out of the fervency of his soule, he humbly expostulates with his God: His onely remedy is in his prayer; that which shut heauen for raine, must open it for life. Every word inforceth; First he pleads his interest in God; Oh Lord my God; then the quality of the patient; a Widow, and therefore, both most distressed with the losse, and most peculiar to the charge of the Almighty. Then, his interest, as in God, so in this patient; with whom I soiourne: as if the stroke were given to himselfe, through her sides: and lastly, the quality of the punishment, By slaying her son; the onely comfort of her life; and in all these implying the scandall, that must needes arise from this euent, where euer it should be noysed, to the name of his God, to his owne; when it should be said; Loe how Eliahs entertainment is rewarded; Surely the Prophet is either impotent, or vnthankfull.

Neither doth his tongue mone thus only; Thrice doth hee stretch himselfe vpon the dead body, as if he could wish to infuse of his owne life into the child; and so often cals to his God for the restitution of that soule: What can Eliah aske to be denyed? The Lord heard the voice of the Prophet, the soule of the child came into him againe, and he reuiued: What miracle is impossible to faithfull prayers! There cannot bee more difference betwixt Eliahs deuotion, and ours, then betwixt supernaturall and ordinary acts; If he therefore obtained miraculous fauours by his prayers, do we doubt of those which are within the sphere of nature, and vse? What could we want, if wee did not slacke to ply heauen with our prayers?

Certainly Eliah had not beene premonished of this sudden sickneſſe, and death of the child; He who knew the remote affaires of the world, might not know what God would doe within his owne roofe; The greatest Prophet must content himselfe with so much of Gods counsell, as he will please to reueale; and he will sometimes reueale the great secrets, and conceale the lesse, to make good both his owne liberty, and mans humiliation. So much more vnexpected as the stroke was, so much more welcome is the cure; How ioyfully doth the man of God take the reuiued child into his armes, and present him to his mother? How doth his heart leape within him, at this proofe of Gods fauour to him, mercy to the widow, power to the childe.

What life and ioy did now shew it selfe in the face of that amazed mother, when she saw againe the eyes of her sonne fixed vpon hers; when shee felt his flesh warme, his motions vitall? Now she can say to Eliah; By this I know that thou art a man of God, and that the word of the Lord in thy mouth is truth; Did she not til now know this? Had she not said before, What haue I to do with thee O thou man of God? Were not her cruse, and her barrel sufficient proofes of his diuine commission? Doubtlesse what her meale and oyle had assured her of, the death of her sonne made her to doubt; and now reuiuing did re-ascertaine. Euen the strongest faith sometimes staggereth, and needeth new acts of heauenly supportation; the end of miracles is confirmation of truth; It seemes, had this widowes sonne continued dead, her beleefe had beene buried in his graue: notwithstanding her meale and her oile, her soule had languished. The mercy of God is faine to prouide new helpes for our infirmities, and graciously condescends to our owne tearmes, that hee may worke out our faith and saluation.

Elijah with the Baalites.

THree yeares and an halfe, did Israel lye gasping vnder a parching drought, and miserable famine: No creature was so odious to them, as Elijah, to whom they ascribed all their misery: Me thinkes I heare how they railed on, and cursed the Prophet? How much enuy must the seruants of God vndergoe for their master? Nothing but the tongue was Elijahs; the hand was Gods; the Prophet did but say what God would doe: I doe not see them fall out with their sins, that had deserued the iudgement, but with the messenger that denounced it; Baal had no fewer seruants then if there had beene both raine, and plenty: Elijah safely spends this storme vnder the lee of Sarepta: Some three yeares hath he lien close in that obscure corner, and liued vpon the barrell, and cruse which he had multiplied: At last, God cals him forth, Goe shew thy selfe to Ahab, and I will send raine vpon the earth; no raine must fall till Elijah were seene of Ahab; Hee caried away the clouds with him, he must bring them againe: The King, the people of Israel, shall bee witnesses that God will make good the word, the oath of his Prophet: Should the raine haue falne in Elijahs absence, who could haue knowne it was by his procurement? God holds the credit of his messengers precious, and neglects nothing that may grace them in the eyes of the world; Not the necessity of seuen thousand religious Israelites could crack the word of one Elijah; There is nothing wherein God is more tender, then in approuing the veracity of himselfe in his ministers.

Lewd Ahab hath an holy Steward: As his name was, so was he, a seruant of God, whiles his Master was a slaue to Baal; Hee that reserued seuen thousand in the Kingdome of Israel, hath reserued an Obadiah in the Court of Israel: and, by him, hath reserued them: Neither is it likely there had been so many free hearts in the countrey, if Religion had not beene secretly backed in the Court: It is a great happinesse when God giues fauour, and honour to the Vertuous. Elijah did not lie more close in Sarepta, then Obadiah did in the Court: Hee could not haue done so much seruice to the Church, if he had not beene as secret, as good; Policy and religion doe as well together, as they doe ill asunder: The Doue without the Serpent is easily caught, the serpent without the Doue stings deadly; Religion without policy is too simple to be safe: Policy, without religion, is too subtle to be good; Their match makes themselues secure, and many happy.

Oh degenerated estate of Israel; any thing was now lawfull there sauing piety: It is well if Gods Prophets can find an hole to hide their heads in: They must needes bee hard driuen when fifty of them are faine to croud together into one caue; There they had both shade and repast: Good Obadiah hazards his owne life to preserue theirs, and spends himselfe in that extreame dearth, vpon their necessary diet; Bread and water was more now, then otherwhiles wine, and delicates; Whether shall wee wonder more at the mercy of God in reseruing an hundred Prophets, or in thus sustaining them being reserued; When did God euer leaue his Israel vnfurnished of some Prophets? When did he leaue his Prophets vnprouided of some Obadiah? How worthy art thou, O Lord, to be trusted with thine owne charge? whiles there are men vpon earth, or birds in the ayre, or Angels in heauen, thy messengers cannot want prouision.

Goodnesse caries away trust, where it cannot haue imitation. Ahab diuides with Obadiah the surucy of the whole land; They two set their owne eyes on worke, for the search of water, of pasture, to preserue the horses, and mules aliue: Oh the poore and vaine cares of Ahab: He casts to kill the Prophet, to saue the cattle; he neuer seekes to

saue his owne soule, to destroy Idolatry; he takes thought for grasse, none for mercy: Carnall hearts are euer either grouelling on the earth, or deluing into it; no more regarding God, or the soules of men, then if they did not, or were not at all.

Elijah hearts of the proofe he, and offers himselfe to the view of them both. Here was wisedome in this courage: First, he presents himselfe to Obadiah, ere hee will bee seene of Ahab; that Ahab might vpon the report of so discreet an informer, digest the expectation of his meeting: Then he takes the opportunity of Ahabs presence, when he might be sure Iezebel was away.

Obadiah meets the Prophet, knowes him, and (as if he had seene God in him) falls on his face to him, who in his time with his master persecuted. Though a great Peere, he had learned to honour a Prophet. No respect was too much for the president of that holy colledge. To the poore boarder of the Sarepta, here was no lesse, then a prostration, and My Lord Elijah, from the great High Steward of Israel. Those that are truly religious cannot be niggardly of their obseruances to the messengers of God.

Elijah receiues the reuerence, returnes a charge: Goe tell my Lord, behold Elijah is here: Obadiah finds this lode too heauy, neither is he more striken with the boldnesse, then with the vnkindnesse of this command: boldnesse in respect of Elijah, vnkindnesse in respect of himselfe. For, thus he thinkes, If Elijah doe come to Ahab, he dyes: If he doe not come, I die: If it bee known that I met him, and brought him not, it is death: If I say that hee will come voluntarily, and God shall alter his intentions, it is death: How vnhappy a man am I, that must be either Elijahs executioner, or my owne: were Ahabs displeasure but smoaking, I might hope to quench it, but now that the flame of it hath broken forth to the notice, to the search of all the Kingdomes and Nations round about, it may consume me, I cannot extinguish it. This message were for animent of Elijah, for a client of Baal. As for me, I haue euer approued my true deuotion to God, my loue to his Prophets: What haue I done, that I should be singled out as bound to kill Elijah, or to be killed for him? Many an hard plunge must that man needs bee in, to whom would hold his conscience togeather with the seruice, and fauour of a Tyrant: It is an happy thing to serue a iust master, where is no danger, no straine in such obedience.

But, when the Prophet binds his resolution with an oath, and cleares the heart of Obadiah from all feares, from all suspitions, the good man dares bee the messenger of that, which he saw was decreed in heauen. Doubtlesse Ahab stai'd to heare of Elijah comming to meet him; as one that did not mote dare, then feare the Prophet. Well might he thinke, thus long, thus far haue I sought Elijah, Elijah would not come to seeke me, but vnder a sure guard, and with some strange commission. His course mantle hath the aduantage of my robe and Scepter: if I can command a peece of the earth, I see hee can command heaven. The edge of his reuenge is taken off with a doubtfull expectation of the issue: and now when Elijah offers himselfe to the eyes of Ahab, He who durst not strike, yet durst challenge the Prophet, Art thou he that troubleth Israel? Ieroboams hatred was still in Ahabs thoughts, he holds it not so safe to smite, as to expostulate: He, that was the head of Israel, speakes out that which was in the heart of all his people, that Elijah was the cause of all their sorrow. Alas, what hath the righteous Prophet done? He taxed their sin, he foretold the iudgement, he deserued it not, he inflicted it not; yet he smarts, and they are guilty. As if some fond people should accuse the Herald or the Trumpet as the cause of their warre; or as if some ignorant peasant, when he sees his fowles bathing to his pond, should cry out of them, as the causes of foule weather.

Oh the heroycall Spirit of Elijah! he stands alone amids all the traine of Ahab, and dares not onely repell this charge, but retort it: I haue not troubled Israel, but thou and thy fathers house, in that yee haue forsaken the Commandements of the Lord, and thou hast followed Baalim. No earthly glory can daunt him, who hath the cleare and heartning visions of God. This holy Seer discernes the true cause of our sufferings, to be our sinnes: Foolish men are plagued for their offences, and it is no small part of

of their plague that they ſee it not; The onely common diſturber of men, Families, Cities, Kingdomes, Worlds, is ſinne; There is no ſuch traitor to any ſtate, as the wilfully wicked; The quieteſt and moſt plauſible offender is ſecretly ſeditious, and ſtirreth quarrels in heauen.

The true meſſengers of God cary authority euen where they are maligned; Elijah doth at once reproue the King, and require of him the improuement of his power, in gathering all Iſrael to Carmel, in fetching thither all the Prophets of Baal. Baal was rich in Iſrael, whiles God was poore; Whiles God hath but one hundred Prophets, hid cloſely in Obadiahs caues, Baal hath eight hundred and fifty; foure hundred and fifty diſperſed ouer the villages and townes of Iſrael, foure hundred at the Court; Gods Prophets are glad of bread and water, whiles the foure hundred Trencher-Prophets of Iezebel feede on her dainties: They lurke in caues, whiles theſe Lord it in the pleaſanteſt groues. Outward proſperity is a falſe note of truth: All theſe with all Iſrael, doth Elijah require Ahab to ſummon vnto Carmel. It is in the power of Kings to command the Aſſembly of the Prophets; the Prophet ſues to the Prince for the indiction of this Synode: They are iniurious to Soueraigntie who arrogate this power to none but ſpirituall hands. How is it that Ahab is as ready to performe this charge, as Elijahs to moue it? I dare anſwer for his heart, that it was not drawne with loue: Was it out of the ſenſe of one iudgement, and feare of another? hee ſmarted with the dearth and drought, and well thinkes Elijah would not be ſo round with him, for nothing: Was it out of an expectation of ſome miraculous exploit which the Prophet would doe in the ſight of all Iſrael? Or, was it out of the ouer-ruling power of the Almighty; The heart of Kings is in the hand of God, and he turnes it which way ſoeuer he pleaſeth.

Iſrael is met together, Elijah rates them, not ſo much for their ſuperſtition, as for their vnſetledneſſe, and irreſolution: One Iſraelite ſerues God, another Baal; yea the ſame Iſraelite perhaps ſerues both God and Baal. How long halt yee betweene two opinions? If the Lord be God, follow him; but if Baal, then follow him: Nothing is more odious to God then a prophane neutralitie in maine oppoſitions of religion: To goe vpright in a wrong way, is a leſſe eye-ſore to God, then to halt betwixt right & wrong; The ſpirit wiſheth that the Laodicean were either hot or cold; either temper would be better borne, then neither, then both: In reconcileable differences nothing is more ſafe then indifferency both of practice and opinion; but in caſes of ſo neceſſary hoſtility, as betwixt God, and Baal, hee that is on neither ſide is the deadlieſt enemy to both: Leſſe hatefull are they to God that ſerue him not at all, then they that ſerue him with a riuall.

Whether out of guiltineſſe, or feare, or vncertainty, Iſrael is ſilent; yet whiles their mouth was ſhut, their eyes were open: It was a faire motion of Elijah; I am onely remaining a Prophet of the Lord, Baals Prophets are foure hundred and fifty: Let them chooſe one bullocke, let me chooſe another; Their deuotion ſhall be combined, mine ſingle: The God that conſumes the ſacrifice by fire from heauen, let him be God: Iſrael cannot but approue it; the Prophets of Baal cannot refuſe it; they had the appearance of the aduantage, in their number, in the fauour of King and people. Oh ſtrange diſputation, wherein the argument which muſt be vſed is fire; the place whence it muſt bee fetcht, heauen; the mood and figure, deuotion; the concluſion, death to the ouercomne.

Had not Elijah, by diuine inſtinct, beene aſſured of the euent, he durſt not haue put religion vpon ſuch hazard: That God commanded him this triall, who meant confuſion to the authors of Idolatry, victory to the truth: His power ſhall be approued both by fire and by water: firſt by fire, then by water: There was no leſſe terror in the fire, then mercy in the raine: It was fit they ſhould be firſt humbled by his terrors, that they might be made capable of his mercy: and by both, might be wonne to repentance. Thus ſtill the feares of the law make way for the influences of grace, neither doe thoſe ſweete and heauenly dewes deſcend vpon the ſoule, till way bee made for them by the terrible flaſhes of the law.

Iuſtly

Iuſtly doth Elijah vrge this triall: Gods ſacrifices were vſed to none but heauenly fires; whereas the baſe and earthly religion of the heathen contented it ſelfe with groſſe and naturall flames.

The Prophets of Baal durſt not (though with faint and guilty hearts) but imbrace the condition; they dreſſe their bullocke, and lay it ready vpon the wood; and ſend out their cryes to Baal from morning vntill mid-day; O Baal heare vs: What a yelling was here, of foure hundred and fifty throats, tearing the skies for an anſwer? What leaping was here vpon the altar, as if they would haue climbed vp to fetch that fire, which would not come downe alone? Mount Carmel might giue an Echo to their voyce, heauen gaue none; In vaine doe they roare out, and wearie themſelues in imploring a dumbe a deafe deitie; Graue and auſtere Elijah holds it not too light to flout their zealous deuotion; he laughes at their teares and playes vpon their earneſt; Cry aloud, for he is a God, either he is talking, or he is purſuing, or hee is trauelling, or he is ſleeping, and muſt be awaked.

Scornes and taunts are the beſt anſwers for ſerious Idolatry; Holineſſe will beare vs out in diſdainfull ſcoffes, and bitterneſſe againſt will ſuperſtition; No leſſe in the indignation at theſe inſulting frumps, then zeale of their owne ſafety, and reputation, doe theſe Idolatrous Prophets now rend their throats with inclamations, and that they may aſſure the beholders, they were not in ieſt, they cut and flaſh themſelues, with kniues, and lancers, and ſolicit the fire with their blood; How much paynfulneſſe there is in miſ-religion? I doe not finde that the true God euer required or accepted the ſelfe-tortures of his ſeruants; Hee loues true inward mortification of our corruptions, he loues the ſubduing of our ſpirituall inſurrections, by due exerciſes of ſeuere reſtraint; hee takes no pleaſure in our blood, in our carcaſſes: They miſtake God that thinke to pleaſe him by deſtroying that nature, which hee hath made; and meaſure truth by rigour of outward extremities; Elijah drew no blood of himſelfe, the Prieſts of Baal did: How faine would the Deuill (whom theſe Idolaters adored) haue anſwered the ſuit of his ſuppliants? What would that ambitious ſpirit haue giuen, that as he was caſt downe from heauen like lightning, ſo now he might haue falne downe in that forme vpon his altar?

God forbids it: All the powers of darkneſſe can no more ſhew one flaſh of fire in the ayre, then auoyd the vnquenchable fire in hell: How eaſie were it for the power of the Almighty to cut ſhort all the tyrannicall vſurpations of that wicked one; if his wiſedome and iuſtice did not finde the permiſſion thereof vſefull to his holy purpoſes.

Theſe Idolaters now towards euening, grew ſo much more vehement, as they were more hopeleſſe; and at laſt when neither their ſhrikes, nor their wounds, nor their mad motions could preuaile, they ſit downe hoarſe and wearie; tormenting themſelues afreſh with their deſpayres, and with the feares of bitter ſucceſſe of their aduerſarie; when Elijah cals the people to him, (the witneſſes of his ſincere proceedings) and taking the opportunitie both of the time, (the iuſt houre of the euening ſacrifice) and of the place, a ruined altar of God, now by him repaired, conuinces Iſrael with his miracle, and more cuts theſe Baalites with enuy, then they had cut themſelues their lancers.

Oh holy Prophet why didſt thou not ſaue this labor? what needed theſe vnſeaſonable reparations? Was there not an altar, was there not a ſacrifice ready prepared to thine hand? that which the Prophets of Baal had addreſſed, ſtood ſtill waiting for that fire from thee, which the ſounders threatned in vaine: the ſtones were not more impure, either for their touch, or their intentions: yet ſuch was thy deteſtation of Idolatry, that thou abhorredſt to meddle with ought, which their wickedneſſe had defiled: Euen that altar, whoſe ruines thou didſt thus repaire, was miſ-erected though to the name of the True God; yet didſt thou finde it better to make vp the breaches of that altar, which was miſ-conſecrated to the ſeruice of thy God, then to make vſe of that pile, which was idolatrouſly deuoted to a falſe god: It cannot be but ſafe to keepe aloofe from participation with Idolaters, euen in thoſe things which not onely in nature, but in vſe are vncleane.

Elijah layes twelue ſtones in his repayred altar, according to the number of the Tribes of the ſonnes of Iacob: Alas, ten of theſe were peruerted to Baal: The Prophet regards not their preſent Apoſtacie; hee regards the ancient couenant, that was made with their father Iſrael; he regards their firſt ſtation, to which he would reduce them: he knew that the vnworthineſſe of Iſrael could not make God forgetfull: he would by this monument put Iſrael in minde of their owne degeneration, and forgetfulneſſe. He employes thoſe many hands for the making a large trench round about the altar; and cauſes it to be filled with thoſe precious remainders of water, which the people would haue grudged to their owne mouthes; neither would eaſily haue parted with, but (as thoſe that poure down a pailefull into a drie pump) in the hope of fetching more. The altar, the trench is full: A barrell full is poured out for each of the Tribes, that euery Tribe might be afterwards repleniſhed. Ahab and Iſrael are no leſſe full of expectation; and now, when Gods appointed houre of the euening ſacrifice was come, Elijah comes confidently to his altar, and looking vp into heauen, ſayes, Lord God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Iſrael, Let it be knowne this day, that thou art God in Iſrael, and that I am thy Seruant, and that I haue done all theſe things at thy word: Heare mee, O Lord heare me, that this people may know that thou art the Lord God, & that thou haſt turned their hearts backe againe.

The Baalites prayers were not more tedeous, then Elijahs was ſhort; and yet more pithy then ſhort; charging God with the care of his couenant, of his truth, of his glory. It was Elijah that ſpake loud; Oh ſtrong cryes of faith, that pierce the heauens, and irreſiſtibly make their way to the throne of grace: Iſrael ſhall well ſee that Elijahs God whom they haue forſaken, is neither talking, nor purſuing, nor trauelling, nor ſleeping: Inſtantly, the fire of the Lord fals frō heauen, & conſumes the burnt ſacrifice, the wood, the ſtones, the duſt, & licks vp the water that was in the trench: With what terror muſt Ahab and Iſrael needs ſee this fire rolling downe out of the skie, and alighting with ſuch fury ſo neere their heads; heads no leſſe fit for this flame then the ſacrifice of Elijah: Well might they haue thought, How eaſily might this fire haue dilated it ſelfe, and haue conſumed our bodies, as well as the wood and ſtone, and haue lickt vp our blood, as well as that water? I know not whether they had the grace to acknowledge the mercy of God, they could doe no leſſe then confeſſe his power, The Lord is God, The Lord is God.

The iron was now hot with this heauenly fire; Elijah ſtayes not till it coole againe, but ſtrikes immediately: Take the Prophets of Baal, let not one of them eſcape. This wager was for life: Had they preuailed in procuring this fire, and Elijah failed of effect; his head had been forfeited vnto them: now in the contrary ſucceſſe, theirs are loſt to him. Let no man complaine that thoſe holy hands were bloody: This ſacrifice was no leſſe pleaſing to God, then that other. Both the man and the act were extraordinarie, and led by a peculiar inſtinct: Neither doth the Prophet this without the aſſent of the ſupreme Magiſtrate; who was now ſo affected with this miraculous worke, that hee could not in the heat of that conuiction, but allow the iuſtice of ſuch ſentence: Farre be it from vs to accuſe Gods commands or executions of cruelty: It was the ancient and peremptory charge of God, that the authors of Idolatry and ſeduction ſhould dye the death; no eye, no hand might ſpare them: The Prophet doth but moue the performance of that Law, which Iſrael could not without ſinne haue omitted: It is a merciſull and thanke-worthy ſeuerity to rid the world of the Ring-leaders of wickedneſſe.

Heare no newes of the foure hundred Prophets of the Groues: They lie close vnder the wing of Iezebel vnder their pleasing shades: neither will be suffered to vndergoe the danger of this triall; the carkeises of their fellowes helpe to fill vp the halfe-dry channell of Kishon: Iustice is no sooner done, then Ahab heares newes of mercie from Elijah: Get thee vp, eate and drinke, for there is a sound of abundance of raine: Their meeting was not more harsh, then their parting was friendly: It seemes Ahab had spent all that day fasting in an eager attendance of those conflicting Prophets: It must needes bee late, ere the execution could be done: Elijahs part began not till the euening: So farre must the King of Israel bee from taking thought for the massacre of those foure hundred and fifty Baalites, that now, hee may goe eate his bread with ioy, and drinke his wine with a chearefull heart: for God accepteth this worke, and testifies it in the noyse of much raine: Euery drop of that Idolatrous blood was answered with a showre of raine, with a streame of water, and plenty poured downe in euery showre: A sensible blessing followes the vnpartiall stroakes of seuere iustice: Nothing is more cruell then an vniust pitie.

No eares but Elijahs could as yet perceiue a sound of raine; the clouds were not yet gathered, the vapours were not yet risen, yet Elijah heares that which shall bee: Those that are of Gods Counsell can discerne either fauours or iudgements afarre off; the slacke apprehensions of carnall hearts make them hard to beleeue that, as future, which the quick and refined senses of the faithfull receiue as present.

Ahab goes vp to his repast; Elijah goes vp to his prayers: That day had bin painfull to him, the vehemencie of his spirit drawes him to a neglect of his body: The holy man climbes vp to the top of Carmel, that now he may talke with his God alone: neither is he sooner ascended, then he casts himselfe downe vpon the earth: He bowes his knees to God, and bowes his face downe to his knees: by this humble posture acknowledging his awfull respects to that Maiestie which he implored: We cannot prostrate our bodies, or soules, too low to that infinitely glorious Deity, who is the Creator of both.

His thoughts were more high then his body was low: what hee said wee know not, we know that what he said opened the heauens, that for three yeares and an halfe had bin shut vp: God had said before, I will send raine vpon the earth; yet Elijah must pray for what God did promise; The promises of the Almighty do not discharge our prayers, but suppose them; he will doe what he vndertakes, but we must sue for that which we would haue him doe: Our petitions are included in the decrees, in the ingagements of God.

The prophet had newly seene and caused the fire to descend immediately out of heauen, he doth not looke the water should doe so; he knew that the raine must come from the clouds, and that the clouds must arise from vapours, and those vapours from the Sea, thence doth he expect them: But as not willing that the thoughts of his fixed deuotion should be distracted, he doth not goe himselfe, onely sends his seruant to bring him the newes of his successe: At the first sight nothing appeares: Seuen times must he walke to that prospect; and not till his last view can discerne ought: All that while is the Prophet in his prayers, neither is any whit danted with that delay: Hope holds vp the head of our holy desires, and perseuerance crownes it: If we receiue not an answer to our suits at the sixth motion, wee may not bee out of countenance, but must try the seuenth: At last, a little cloud arises out of the Sea, of an hand breadth: So many, so feruent prayers cannot but pull water out of heauen as well as fire: Those sights reflect vpon the earth, and from the earth reflect vpon heauen, from heauen rebound vpon the Sea, and raise vapours vp thence to heauen againe: If we finde that our prayers are heard for the substance, wee may not cauill at the quantitie: Euen an hand-broad cloud contents Elijah, and fils his heart full of ioy and thankfulnesse: He knew well this meteor was not at the biggest, it was newly borne of the wombe of the waters, and in some minutes of age must grow to a large stature: stay but a while, and Heauen is couered with it: From how small beginnings haue greater matters risen? It is no otherwise in all the gracious proceedings of God with the soule, scarce sensible are those first workes of his spirit in the heart, which grow vp at last to the wonder of men, and applause of Angels.

Well did Elijah know that God who is perfection it selfe, would not defile his hand with an inchoate and scanted fauour, as one therefore that fore-saw the face of heauen ouer-spread with this cloudy spot, hee sends to Ahab to hasten his Charior, that the raine stop him not: It is long since Ahab feared this let; neuer was the newes of a danger more welcome: Doubtlesse the King of Israel whiles hee was at his diet, lookt long for Elijahs promised showers; where is the raine whose sound the Prophet heard? how is it that his eares were so much quicker then our eyes? Wee saw his fire to our terrour, how gladly would we see his Waters? When now the seruant of Elijah brings him newes from heauen, that the clouds were setting forward, and (if hee hastened not) would bee before him: The winde arises, the clouds gather, the sky thickens; Ahab betakes him to his Charet; Elijah girds vp his loynes, and runnes before him: Surely the Prophet could not want the offer of more ease in his passage; but he will be for the time Ahabs lacquey, that the King and all Israel may see his humilitie no lesse then his power, and may confesse that the glory of those miracles hath not made him insolent. Hee knew that his very sight was monitory: neither could Ahabs minde be beside the miraculous workes of God, whiles his eye was vpon Elijah: neither could the Kings heart be otherwise then well-affected towards the Prophet, whiles hee saw that himselfe, and all Israel, had receiued a new Life by his procurement. But what newes was here for Iezebel? Certainly Ahab minced nothing of the report of all those astonishing accidents: If but to salue vp his owne honour, in the death of those Baalites, hee made the best of Elijahs merits; hee told of his challenge, conflict, victory, of the fire that fell downe from heauen, of the conuiction of Israel, of the vnauoidable execution of the Prophets, of the prediction and fall of those happy showers, and lastly of Elijahs officious attendance. Who would not haue expected that Iezebel should haue said; It is no striuing, no dallying with the Almighty: No reasonable creature can doubt, after so prodigious a diciſion; GOD hath wonne vs from Heauen, he must possesse vs: Iustly are our seducers perished; None but the GOD that can command fire and water shall be ours; There is no Prophet but his: But shee contrarily, in stead of relenting, rageth; and sends a message of death to Elijah, So let the gods doe to mee, and more also; if I make not thy life, as the life of one of them by to morrow about this time: Neither scourges, nor fauours can worke any thing with the obstinately wicked; All euill hearts are not equally dis-affected to good: Ahab and Iezebel were both bad enough, yet Ahab yeelds to that worke of GOD, which Iezebel stubbornely opposeth: Ahab melts with that water, with that fire, wherewith Iezebel is hardened: Ahab was bashfully, Iezebel audatiously impious. The weaker sexe is euer commonly stronger in passion; and more vehemently carried with the sway of their desires, whether to good or euill: Shee sweares, and stamps at that whereat she should haue trembled. She sweares by those gods of hers, which were not able to saue their Prophets, that she will kill the Prophet of God, who had scorned her gods, and slaine her Prophets.

It is well that Iezebel could not keepe counſell: Her threat preſerued him whom ſhee had meant to kill: The wiſedome and power of God could haue found euaſions for his Prophet, in her greateſt ſecreſie: but now, he needs no other meanes of reſcue, but her owne lips: She is no leſſe vayne, then the gods ſhee ſweares by: In ſpight of her fury, and her oath, and her gods, Eliah ſhall liue: At once ſhall ſhe finde her ſelfe fruſtrate, and forſworne: She is now ready to bite her tongue, to eate her heart for anger, at the diſappointment of her cruell Vow. It were no liuing for godly men, if the hands of Tyrants were allowed to bee as bloody as their hearts. Men and Deuils are vnder the reſtraint of the Almighty; neither are their deſignes more lauiſh, then their executions ſhort.

Holy Eliah flees for his life; wee heare not of the command of God, but wee would willingly preſuppoſe it: So diuine a Prophet ſhould doe nothing without God: His heeles were no new refuge; As no where ſafe within the tenne Tribes, hee flees to Beerſheba, in the Territories of Iudah; as not there ſafe, from the machinations of Iezebel, hee flees alone (one dayes iourney) into the wilderneſſe; there hee ſits him downe vnder a Iuniper tree, and (as wearie of life, no leſſe then of his way) wiſhes to riſe no more. It is enough now, O Lord, take away my life, for I am not better then my fathers: O ſtrange and vncouth mutation! What is this wee heare? Eliah fainting and giuing vp? that heroicall ſpirit deiected, and proſtrate? Hee that durſt ſay to Ahabs face, It is thou, and thy fathers houſe that troubleth Iſrael; hee that could raiſe the dead, open and ſhut the Heauens, fetch downe both fire, and water with his prayers; hee that durſt chide and conteſt with all Iſrael, that durſt kill the foure hundred and fifty Baalites, with the ſword; doth hee ſhrinke at the frownes and threats of a woman? doth hee wiſh to bee rid of his life becauſe he feared to loſe it? Who can expect an vndaunted conſtancie from fleſh and blood, when Eliah failes? The ſtrongeſt and holieſt Saint vpon earth is ſubiect to ſome qualmes of feare, and infirmitie: To bee alwayes and vnchangeably good, is proper onely to the glorious Spirits in heauen: Thus the wiſe and holy God will haue his power perfitted in our weakeneſſe: It is in vaine for vs, whiles wee carrie this fleſh about vs, to hope for ſo exact health, as not to be caſt downe ſometimes with fits of ſpirituall diſtemper. It is no new thing for holy men to wiſh for death: Who can either maruell at, or blame the deſire of aduantage? For the weary traueller to long for reſt, the priſoner for libertie, the baniſhed for home, it is ſo naturall, that the contrary diſpoſition were monſtrous: The benefit of the change is a iuſt motiue to our appetition: but to call for death, out of a ſatietie of life, out of an impatience of ſuffering, is a weakeneſſe vnbeſeeming a Saint: It is not enough, O Eliah; God hath more worke yet for thee: thy God hath more honoured thee, then thy fathers, and thou ſhalt liue to honour him.

Toyle and ſorrow haue lulled the Prophet aſleepe, vnder his Iuniper tree; that wholeſome ſhade was well choſen, for his repoſe: whiles death was called for, the couzen of death comes vnbidden: The Angell of God waits on in him that hard lodging: no wilderneſſe is too ſollitarie for the attendance of thoſe bleſſed ſpirits: As hee is guarded, ſo is hee awaked by that Meſſenger of GOD; and ſtirred vp from his reſt, to his repaſt; whiles hee ſlept, his breakefaſt is made ready for him, by thoſe ſpirituall hands; There was a cake baked on the coales, and a cruſe of water at his head.: Oh the neuer-ceaſing care and prouidence of the Almightie, not to be barred by any place, by any condition; when meanes are wanting to vs, when wee are wanting to our ſelues, when to GOD, euen then doth he follow vs, with his mercie, and caſt fauours vpon vs, beyond, againſt expectation: What varietie of purueyance doth he make for his ſeruant? One while the Rauens, then the Sareptan, now the Angell ſhall be his Cator; none of them without a miracle. Thoſe other prouided for him waking, this ſleeping: O GOD, the eye of thy prouidence is not dimmer, the hand of thy power is not ſhorter; onely teach thou vs to ſerue thee, to truſt thee.

Needs

Needs muſt the Prophet eate, and drinke, and ſleepe with much comfort, whiles hee ſaw that he had ſuch a guardian, attendant, purueiour; and now the ſecond time is he raiſed, by that happy touch, to his meale, and his way: Ariſe, and eate, becauſe the iourney is too great for thee. What needed hee to trauell further, ſith that diuine power could as well protect him in the Wilderneſſe, as in Horeb? what needed hee to eate, ſince he that meant to ſuſtaine him forty dayes with one meale, might as well haue ſuſteined him without it? God is a moſt free Agent, neither will he be tied to the tearmes of humane regularities: It is enough that hee knowes and approues the reaſons of his owne choyce, and commands: once in forty dayes and nights ſhall Elijah eate, to teach vs what GOD can doe with little meanes: and but once, to teach vs what hee can doe without meanes: once ſhall the Prophet eate, Man liues by bread; and but once, Man liues not by bread onely, but by euery word that proceeds out of the mouth of God: Moſes, Elijah, our Sauiour faſted each of them forty dayes, and forty nights: the three great faſters met gloriouſly in Tabor: I doe not find where God euer honoured any man for feaſting: It is abſtinence, not fulneſſe, that makes a man capable of heauenly viſions, of diuine glory.

The iourney was not of it ſelfe ſo long; the Prophet tooke thoſe wayes, thoſe houres which his heart gaue him: In the very ſame Mount where Moſes firſt ſaw God, ſhall Elijah ſee him: one and the ſame caue (as is very probable) was the receptacle to both: It could not bee but a great confirmation of Elijah, to renue the ſight of thoſe ſenſible monuments of Gods fauour, and protection, to his faithfull predeceſſor. Moſes came to ſee God in the Buſh of Horeb: God came to finde Elijah in the Caue of Horeb: What doeſt thou here, Elijah? The place was directed by a prouidence, not by a command: Hee is hid ſure enough from Iezebel: hee cannot bee hid from the all-ſeeing eye of God. Whither ſhall I goe from thy Spirit? or Whither ſhall I flye from thy preſence? If I aſcend vp into Heauen, thou art there; If I make my bed in Hell, behold thou art there: If I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the vtmoſt parts of the Sea, euen there ſhall thine hand finde me, and thy right hand ſhall hold mee: Twice hath God propounded the ſame queſtion to Elijah: Once in the heart once in the mouth of the Caue: Twice doth the Prophet anſwer, in the ſame words: Had the firſt anſwer ſatisfied, the queſtion had not beene re-demanded. Now, that ſullen anſwer which Elijah gaue in the darkneſſe of the Caue is challenged into the Light, not without an awfull preface. The Lord firſt paſſeth by him with the terrible demonſtrations of his power. A great & ſtrong wind rent the Mountaines, and brake the Rocks in pieces: Thy tearing blaſt was from God, God was not in it: So was he in it as in his other extraordinary workes; not ſo in it, as by it to impart himſelfe to Elijah: it was the Vſhier not the cariage of GOD: After the winde came an Earthquake, more fearfull then it: That did but moue the ayre, this the earth; that beat vpon ſome prominences of earth, this ſhooke it from the Center. After the earth-quake came a fire more fearfull then either. The other affected the eare, the feeling: but this lets in horrour into the Soule, by the eye, the quickeſt and and moſt apprehenſiue of the ſenſes. Elijah ſhall ſee Gods mighty power in the earth, aire, fire, before hee heare him in the ſoft voyce: all theſe are but boiſtrous harbingers of a meeke, and ſtill word: In that God was; Behold, in that gentle and mild breath there was omnipotencie; there was but powerfulneſſe in thoſe fierce repreſentations: There is not alwayes the greateſt efficacie where is the greateſt noiſe: God loues to make way for himſelfe by terrour, but hee conuayes himſelfe to vs in ſweetneſſe: It is happy for vs if after the guſts and flaſhes of the Law, we haue haue heard the ſoft voice of Euangelicall mercy.

In this very mount, with the ſame horrour God had deliuered his Law to Moſes and Iſrael: It is no maruell if Elijah wrapt his face in his mantle: His Obedience drawes him forth to the mouth of the Caue, his feare ſtill hides his head: Had there not beene much courage in the Prophets faith, hee had ſtood out theſe affrightfull fore-runners of the diuine preſence, though with his face couered: The very Angels doe no leſſe, before that all-glorious Maieſtie then vaile themſelues with their wings: Farre be it from vs once to thinke of that infinite, and omnipotent Deitie, without an humble awfulneſſe.

Feare changes not the tenour of Eliiahs anſwer: Hee hath not left one word behinde him in the Caue: I haue beene very iealous for the Lord God of Hoſts, becauſe the children of Iſrael haue forſaken thy Couenant, throwne downe thine Altars, and ſlaine thy Prophets with the ſword, and I, euen I onely, am left, and they ſeeke my life to take it away. I heare not a direct anſwer from the Prophet to the demand of GOD: then hee had ſaid, I runne away from the threats of Iezebel, and here I hide my head from her malicious purſuit: His guiltineſſe would not let him ſpeake out all: Hee had rather ſay, I haue beene iealous for the Lord God of Hoſts, then, I was fearefull of Iezebel: Wee are all willing to make the beſt of our owne caſe: but what hee wants of his owne accuſation, hee ſpends vpon the complaint of Iſrael. Neither doth he more bemone himſelfe, then exclaime againſt them, as Apoſtates from Gods Couenant, Violaters of his Altars, murtherers of his Prophets: It muſt needs be a deſperate condition of Iſrael, that driues Eliiah to indite them before the throne of God: That tongue of his was vſed to plead for them, to ſue for their pardon, it could not be but a forceable wickedneſſe, that makes it their accuſer. Thoſe Idolatrous Iſraelites were well forward to reformation: The fire and raine from heauen at the prayers of Eliiah had wonne them to a ſcorne of Baal; onely the violence of Iezebel turned the ſtreame, and now they are re-ſetled in impietie, and perſecute him for an enemy, whom they almoſt adored for a benefactor; otherwiſe, Eliiah had not complained of what they had beene: Who would thinke it? Iezebel can doe more then Eliiah: No miracle is ſo preualent with the vulgar, as the ſway of authoritie, whether to good, or euill.

Thou art deceiued, O Eliiah; thou art not left alone; neither is all Iſrael tainted: GOD hath children and Prophets in Iſrael, though thou ſee them not; Thoſe cleere eyes of the Seer diſcerne not the ſecret ſtorie of GOD: they lookt not into Obadiahs Caues, they lookt not into the cloſets of the religious Iſraelites; hee that ſees the heart, can ſay, I haue left mee ſeuen thouſand in Iſrael, all the knees which haue not bowed to Baal, and euery mouth which hath not kiſſed him: According to the faſhion of the wealthy, God pleaſeth himſelfe in hidden treaſures; it is enough that his owne eyes behold his riches: Neuer did hee, neuer will hee leaue himſelfe vnfurniſhed with holy clients, in the midſt of the fouleſt deprauations of his Church: The ſight of his faithfull ones hath ſometimes beene loſt, neuer the being: Doe your worſt, O yee Gates of Hell, God will haue his owne: Hee that could haue more, will haue ſome: that foundation is ſure, God knoweth who are his.

It was a true cordiall for Eliiahs ſolitarineſſe, that hee had ſeuen thouſand inuiſible abettors; neither is it a ſmall comfort to our weakneſſe to haue companions in good: for the wickedneſſe of Iſrael God hath another receit; the oyle of royall, and propheticall vnction; Eliiah muſt anoint Hazael King of Syria, Iehu King of Iſrael; Eliſha for his ſucceſſor: All theſe ſhall reuenge the quarrels of God, and him; one ſhall begin, the other ſhall proſecute, the third ſhall perfect the vengeance vpon Iſrael.

A Prophet ſhall auenge the wrongs done to a Prophet: Eliſha is found, not in his ſtudy, but, in the field; not with a booke in his hand, but a plough: His father Shaphat was a rich farmer in Abel-Meholah, himſelfe was a good husband not trained vp in the ſchooles of the Prophets, but, in the thrifty trade of tillage: and behold, this was the man whom God will picke out of all Iſrael for a Prophet; God ſeeth not as man ſeeth: Neither doth he chooſe men before they are fit, but therefore he fits them, becauſe he hath choſen them; his call is aboue all earthly inſtitution.

I heare not of ought that Eliiah ſayd: Onely hee caſt his cloake vpon Eliſha in the paſſage: That Mantle, that act was vocall: Together with this ſigne, Gods inſtinct teacheth this amazed ſonne of Shaphat that hee was deſigned to an higher worke, worke, to breake vp the fallow grounds of Israel, by his Propheticall function: Hee findes a strange vertue in that Robe; and (as if his heart were changed with that habit) forgets his teme, and runnes after Elijah; and sues for the leaue of a farewell to his Parents, ere hee had any but a dumbe command to follow: The secret call of God offers an inward force to the heart, and insensibly drawes vs beyond the power of our resistance: Grace is no enemy to good nature: well may the respects to our earthly Parents stand with our duties to our Father in heauen. I doe not see Elisha wring his hands and deplore his condition, that hee shall leaue the world, and follow a Prophet, but for the ioy of that change, hee makes a feast: those Oxen, those vtensils of husbandry whereon his former labours had beene bestowed, shall now be gladly deuoted to the celebration of that happy day, wherein hee is honoured with so blessed an imployment. If with desire; if with cheerfulnesse wee doe not enter into the workes of our heauenly Master, they are not like to prosper in our hands: Hee is not worthy of this spirituall station, who holds not the seruice of God his highest, his richest preferment.

TO THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE EDWARD LORD DENNY, BARON OF Waltham, my bountifull and dearely honoured Patron.

Right Honourable:

NOne can challenge ſo much right in theſe Meditations, as your Lordſhip, vnder whoſe happy ſhade they receiued their firſt conception: Vnder this Iuniper of yours, haue I (not driuen by force, but drawne by pleaſure) ſlept thus long, ſweetly, ſafely; and haue receiued theſe Angelicall touches: How iuſtly may your Lordſhip claime the fruits of your owne fauours? Your carefull ſtudies in the booke of God, are fit to be exemplary; which haue ſo inriched you, that your Teacher ſhall gaine. In this reach of diuine thoughts, you ſhall ſee Benhadads inſolence taken downe by Ahabs victory, an humble (though Idolatrous) Iſraelite carrying it from an inſulting Pagan: You ſhall ſee in Ahab the impotent paſſions of greatneſſe; in Naboth, bleeding honeſtie; in Iezebel bloody hypocriſie, cruell craft; plotting from hell, pretending from heauen: You ſhall ſee the wofull ſucceſſe of an vniuſt mercy; Ahab forfaiting what hee gaue, killed by him whom he ſhould haue killed: you ſhall ſee reſolute Michaiah oppoſing the mercenary Synode of Prophets, a beaten victor, an impriſoned freeman: You ſhall ſee Ahaziah falling through his grate; Elijah climbing vp his Mount, mounting vp to his glory; fetching fire from heauen, fetcht by a fiery charet charet to heauen. Elisha the heire of his mantle, of his spirit, no lesse maruellous in his beneficences, in his reuenges. What doe I foretell all? Me thinkes I feele my selfe now too like an Italian host, thus to meet your Lordship on the way, and to promise beforehand your fare and entertainment: Let it please your Lordship rather to see and allow your cheare: Indeed the feast is Gods, and not mine, wherein store striues with delicacie: If my cookery hurt it not, it is enough: Through your hands I commend it to the world, as I doe your Lordship, and my Honourable good Ladie, to the gracious protection of the Almighty, iustly vowing my selfe

Ios. Hall.

Contemplations.

AHAB and BENHADAD.

THere is nothing more dangerous for any ſtate, then to call in forraigne powers, for the ſuppreſſion of an home-bred enemie; the remedy hath oft in this caſe, proued worſe then the diſeaſe. Aſa King of Iudah implores the ayde of Benhadad, the Syrian, againſt Baaſha King of Iſrael. That ſtranger hath good colour to ſet his foot in ſome out-skirt-townes of Iſrael; and now theſe ſerue him but for the handſell of more; Such ſweetneſſe doth that Edomite find in the ſoile of Iſrael, that his ambition will not take vp with leſſe then all; He that entred as a Friend, will proceed as a Conqueror; and now aimes at no leſſe then Samaria it ſelfe, the heart, the head of the ten Tribes: There was no cauſe to hope for better ſucceſſe of ſo perfidious a League with an Infidell: Who can looke for other then warre when he ſees Ahab and Iezebel in the Throne, Iſrael in the groues and temples of Baalim? The ambition of Benhadad was not ſo much guilty of this warre, as the Idolatry of that wicked nation; How can they expect peace from earth, who doe wilfully fight againſt heauen? Rather will the God of Hoſts arme the brute, the ſenſeleſſe creatures againſt Iſrael, then he will ſuffer their defiance vnreuenged. Ahab and Benhadad are well matched, an Idolatrous Iſraelite, with a paganiſh Idumæan; well may God plague each with other, who meanes vengeance to them both. Ahab finds himſelfe hard preſſed with the ſiege; and therefore is glad to enter into treaties of peace; Benhadad knowes his owne ſtrength; and offers inſolent conditions, Thy ſiluer and thy gold is mine, thy wiues alſo and thy children, euen the goodlieſt are mine. It is a fearefull thing to be in the mercy of an enemy; In caſe of hoſtility might will carue for it ſelfe: Ahab now after the diuiſion of Iudah, was but halfe a King; Benhadad had two and thirty Kings to attend him; What equality was in this oppoſition? Wiſely doth Ahab therefore, as a reed in a tempeſt, ſtoop to this violent charge of ſo potent an enemy: My Lord, O King, according to thy ſaying I am thine, and all that I haue: It is not for the ouer-powred to capitulate; Weakneſſe may not argue but yeeld. Tyranny is but drawne on by ſubmiſſion; and where it finds feare, and deiection, inſulteth. Benhadad not content with the ſouereignty of Ahads goods, cals for the poſſeſſion; Ahab had offred the Dominion, with reſeruation of his ſubordinate intereſt: he will be a tributary, ſo he may be an owner: Benhadad imperiouſly beſides the command, cals for the propriety; and ſuffers not the King of Iſrael to inioy thoſe things at all, which he would inioy but vnder the fauour of that predominancie. Ouer-ſtrained ſubiection turnes deſperate; if conditions bee impoſed worſe then death, there needes no long diſputation of the remedy; The Elders of Iſrael (whoſe ſhare was proportionably in this dainger) hearten Ahab to a deniall: which yet comes out ſo fearefully, as that it appeares rather extorted by the peremptory indignation of the people, then proceeding out of any generoſity of his Spirit: Neither doth he ſay, I will not, but, I may not. The proud Syrian (who would haue taken it in foule ſcorne to bee denied, though he had ſent for all the heads of Iſrael) ſnuffes vp the wind like a wilde Aſſe in the Wilderneſſe, and brags, and threats, and ſweares, The gods doe ſo to me, and more alſo, if the duſt of Samaria ſhall ſuffice for handfulls for all the people that follow me: Not the men, not the goods onely of Samaria ſhall bee caried away captiue, but the very earth whereon it ſtands; and this, with how much eaſe? No Souldier ſhall need to bee charged with more then an handfull, to make a valley where the mother City of Iſrael once ſtood: Oh vaine boaſter! In whom I know not whether pride or folly be more eminent: Victorie is to bee atchieued, not to bee ſworne; future euents are no matter of an oath; Thy gods (if they had beene) might haue beene called as witneſſes of thy intentions, not of that ſucceſſe, whereof thou wouldeſt be the Author without them: Thy gods can doe nothing to thee, nothing for thee, nothing for themſelues; all thine Aramites ſhall not cary away one corne of ſand out of Iſrael, except it bee vpon the ſoles of their feet, in their ſhamefull flight; It is well, if they can cary backe thoſe skins that they brought thither: Let not him that girdeth on his harneſſe boaſt himſelfe as he that putteth it off: There is no cauſe to feare that man that truſtes in himſelfe? Man may caſt the dice of war, but the diſpoſition of them is of the Lord.

Ahab was lewd, but Benhadad was inſolent; If therefore Ahab ſhall be ſcourged with the rod of Benhadads feare; Benhadad ſhall bee ſmitten with the ſword of Ahabs reuenge; Of all things God will not endure a preſumptuous, and ſelfe-confident vaunter; after Eliiahs flight and complaint, yet a Prophet is addreſſed to Ahab; Thus ſaith the Lord, Haſt thou ſeene all this great multitude? behold I will deliuer it into thine hand, this day, and thou ſhalt know that I am the Lord? Who can wonder enough at this vnwearyable mercy of God? After the fire and raine fetcht miraculouſly from Heauen, Ahab had promiſed much, performed nothing, yet againe will God bleſſe and ſolicit him with victory; One of thoſe Prophets whom hee perſecuted to death ſhall comfort his deiection with the newes of deliuerance and triumph: Had this great worke beene wrought without premonition; either chance, or Baal, or the golden calues had caried away the thanks: Before hand therefore ſhall Ahab know both the Author and the meanes of his victory; God for the Author, the two hundred thirty two yong men of the Princes for the meanes; What are theſe for the Vant-gard, and ſeuen thouſand Iſraelites for the maine battell, againſt the troupes of three & thirty Kings, and as many centuries of Syrians, as Iſrael had ſingle ſouldiers? An equality of number had taken away the wonder of the euent; but now, the God of hoaſts will be confeſſed in this iſſue, not the valor of men; How indifferent it is with thee, O Lord, to ſaue by many, or by few; to deſtroy many or few? A world is no more to thee then a man; how eaſie is it for thee to enable vs to be more then Conquerors ouer Principalities and Powers: to ſubdue ſpirituall wickedneſſes to fleſh and blood? Through thee we can doe great things, yea we can doe all things through thee that ſtrengtheneſt vs; Let not vs want faith, we are ſure there can bee no want in thy power or mercy.

There was nothing in Benhadads pauilions but drink, and ſurfet, and iollity; as if wine ſhould make way for blood; Security is the certain vſher of deſtruction: we neuer haue ſo much cauſe to feare as when we feare nothing. This handfull of Iſrael dares look out (vpon the Prophets aſſurance) to the vaſt hoſt of Benhadad: It is enough for that proud pagan to ſit ſtill, and command amongſt his cups: To defile their fingers with the blood of ſo few, ſeemed no maſtery; that act would bee inglorious on the part of the Victors: More eaſily might they bring in three heads of dead enemies then one aliue: Imperiouſly enough therefore doth this boaſter out of his chaire of ſtate and eaſe, command, Whether they be come out for peace, take them aliue; or whether they be come out for warre, take them aliue; There needs no more, but, Take them, this field is won with a word. Oh the vaine and ignorant preſumptions of wretched men that will be reckoning without, againſt their Maker.

Euery Iſraelite kills his man, the Syrians flee, and cannot runne away from death: Benhadad and his Kings, are more beholden to their horſes, then to their gods, or themſelues for life and ſafetie, elſe they had beene either taken or ſlaine, by thoſe, whom they commanded to be taken.

How eaſie is it for him that made the heart, to fill it with terror, and conſternation, euen where no feare is? Thoſe whom God hath deſtined to ſlaughter, hee will ſmite, neyther needs hee any other enemy or executioner, then what he findes in their owne boſome: Wee are not the maſters of our owne courage, or feares; both are put into vs by that ouer-ruling power that created vs. Stay now, O ſtay, thou great King of Syria, and take with thee thoſe forgotten handfulls of the duſt of Iſrael: Thy gods will doe ſo to thee, and more alſo, if thy followers returne without their vowed burden: Learne now of the deſpiſed King of Iſrael, from henceforth not to ſound the triumph before the battell; not to boaſt thy ſelfe in the girding on of thy harneſſe, as in the putting off.

I heare not of eyther the publike thankſgiuing, or amendment of Ahab. Neyther danger nor victory can change him from himſelfe: Benhadad and he, though enemies, agree in vnrepentance; the one is no more moued with mercy, then the other with iudgement: Neyther is God any changeling in his proceedings towards both; his iudgement ſhall ſtill follow the Syrian, his mercy Iſrael: Mercy, both in fore-warning, and redeliuering Ahab; Iudgement, in ouerthrowing Benhadad. The Prophet of God comes againe, and both foretels the intended re-encounter of the Syrian, and aduiſes the care, and preparation of Iſrael: Goe ſtrengthen thy ſelfe, and marke, and ſee what thou doeſt; for, at the returne of the yeare, the King of Syria will come vp againſt thee: God purpoſeth the deliuerance of Iſrael, yet may not they neglect their fortifications; The mercifull intentions of God towards them may not make them careleſſe; The induſtry and courage of the Iſraelites fall within the decree of their victory; Security is the bane of good ſucceſſe; It is no contemning of a foyled enemie; the ſhame of a former diſgrace and miſcariage, whets his valor, and ſharpens it to reuenge: No power is ſo dreadfull, as that which is recollected from an ouerthrow.

The hoſtility againſt the Iſrael of God may ſleepe, but will hardly die. If the Aramites ſit ſtill, it is but till they be fully ready for an aſſault; Time will ſhew that their ceſſation was onely for their aduantage; neither is it otherwiſe with our ſpirituall aduerſaries: ſometimes their onſets are intermitted; they tempt not alwaies, they alwaies hate vs: their forbearance is not out of fauour, but attendance of opportunitie; happy are wee, if out of a ſuſpicion of their ſilence, we can as buſily prepare for their reſiſtance, as they doe for our impugnation.

As it is a ſhame to bee beaten, ſo yet the ſhame is leſſe, by how much the victor is greater; to mitigate the griefe, and indignation of Benhadads foile, his paraſites aſcribe it to gods, not to men; an humane power could no more haue vanquiſh't him then a diuine power could by him be reſiſted; Their gods are gods of the hils; Ignorant Syrians, that name gods, and confine them; varying their deities according to ſituations; They ſaw that Samaria (whence they were repelled) ſtood vpon the hill of Shemer? They ſaw the Temple of Ieruſalem ſtood vpon mount Sion; they knew it vſuall with the Iſraelites to ſacrifice in their high places, and perhaps they had heard of Eliiahs altar, vpon mount Carmel; and now they ſottiſhly meaſure the effects of the power, by the place of the worſhip; as if he that was omnipotent on the hill, were impotent in the Valley; What doltiſh conceits doth blinde Paganiſme frame to it ſelfe of a Godhead? As they haue many gods, ſo finite; euery region, euery hill, euery dale, euery ſtreame hath their ſeuerall gods, and each ſo knowes his owne bounds, that he dares not offer to incroach vpon the other; or, if he doe, abuyes it with loſſe: Who would thinke that so grosse blockishnesse should finde harbour in a reasonable soule? A man doth not alter with his station; He that wrestled strongly vpon the hill, loseth not his force in the plaine; all places finde him alike actiue, alike valorous; yet these barbarous Aramites shame not to imagine that of God, which they would blush to affirme of their owne champions. Superstition infatuates the heart out of measure; neither is there any fancy so absurd or monstrous, which credulous infidelity is not ready to entertaine with applause.

In how high scorne doth God take it to bee thus basely vnder valued by rude heathen? This very mis-opinion concerning the God of Israel shall cost the Syrians a shamefull, and perfect destruction; They may call a Counsell of War, and lay their heads together, and change their Kings into Captaines, and their hills into valleyes, but they shall finde more graues in the plaines, then in the mountaines; This very mis-prison of God shall make Ahab (though he were more lewd) victorious; An hundred thousand Syrians shall fall in one day, by those few hands of Israel; And a dead wall in Aphek (to whose shelter they fled) shall reuenge God vpon the rest that remained; The stones in the wall shall rather turne executioners, then a blasphemous Aramite shall escape vnreuenged. So much doth the iealous God hate to be robd of his glory, euen by ignorant Pagans, whose tongues might seeme no slander. That proud head of Benhadad, that spoke such big words of the dust of Israel, and swore by his gods, that hee would kill and conquer, is now glad to hide it selfe in a blinde hole of Aphek; and now in stead of questioning the power of the God of Israel, is glad to heare of the mercy of the Kings of Israel; Behold, now, wee haue heard that the Kings of the house of Israel are mercifull Kings; Let vs, I pray thee, put sackcloth on our loines, and ropes on our heads, and goe out to the King of Israel, peraduenture he will saue thy life.

There can bee no more powerfull attractiue of humble submission, then the intimation and conceit of mercy; Wee doe at once feare, and hate the inexorable; This is it, O Lord, that allures vs to thy throne of grace, the knowledge of the grace of that throne; with thee is mercy and plentious redemption; thine hand is open before our mouthes, before our hearts; If we did not see thee smile vpon suiters, we durst not presse to thy footstoole; Behold now we know that the King of heauen, the God of Israel, is a mercifull God; Let vs put sackcloth vpon our loynes, and strew ashes vpon our heads, and goe meet the Lord God of Israel, that he may saue our soules.

How well doth this habit become insolent, and blasphemous Benhadad and his followers? a rope, and sackcloth? A rope for a Crowne, sackcloth for a robe; Neither is there lesse change in the tongue, Thy seruant Benhadad saith, I pray thee let mee liue. Euen now the King of Israel said to Benhadad, My Lord O King, I am thine: Tell my Lord the King, all that thou didst send for to thy seruant, I will doe: Now Benhadad sends to the King of Israel, Thy seruant Benhadad said, I pray thee let me liue: Hee that was erewhile a Lord and King, is now a seruant; and he that was a seruant to the king of Syria, is now his Lord: he that would blow away all Israel in dust, is now glad to beg for his owne life at the doore of a despised enemy; no courage is so haughty, which the God of hosts cannot easily bring vnder; what are mē or deuils in those almighty hāds?

The greater the deiection was, the stronger was the motiue of commiseration; That haltar pleaded for life; and that plea for but a life, stirred the bowels for fauour: How readily did Ahab see in Benhadads sudden misery the image of the instability of all humane things? and relents at the view of so deepe and passionate a submission. Had not Benhadad said, Thy seruant, Ahab had neuer said, My brother; seldome euer was there losse in humility; How much lesse can we feare disparagement, in the annihilating of our selues, before that infinite Maiestie? The drowning man snatches at euery twig; It is no maruell if the messengers of Benhadad cacht hastilie at that last of grace, and hold it fast, Thy brother Benhadad; Fauours are wont to draw on each other: Kindnesses breed on themselues: neither need wee any other perswasion to beneficence, then from our owne acts. Ahab cals for the King of Syria,

ſets him in his owne Charet; treats with him of an eaſie (yet firme) league, giues him both his life, and his Kingdome. Neither is the Crowne of Syria ſooner loſt, then recouered; Onely hee that came a free Prince, returnes tributarie: Onely his traine is clipt too ſhort for his wings; an hundred twentie ſeuen thouſand Syrians are abated of his Guard, homeward. Blaſphemy hath eſcaped too well, Ahab hath at once peace with Benhadad, warre with God; God proclaimes it by his Herald, one of the ſonnes of the Prophets; not yet in his owne forme, but diſguiſed, both in faſhion, and complaint; It was a ſtrange ſuit of a Prophet, Smite me I pray thee; Many a Prophet was ſmitten, and would not; neuer any but this wiſhed to be ſmitten; The reſt of his fellowes were glad to ſay, Saue me; this onely ſayes, Smite me; His honeſt neighbour, out of loue and reuerence, forbeares to ſtrike; There are too many (thinkes hee) that ſmite the Prophets, though I refraine; What wrong haſt thou done that I ſhould repay with blowes? Hadſt thou ſued for a fauour, I could not haue denyed thee, now thou ſueſt for thine hurt, the deniall is a fauour; Thus he thought; but Charitie cannot excuſe diſobedience; Had the man of God called for blowes, (vpon his owne head) the refuſall had beene iuſt and thanke-worthy; but now that he ſayes, In the Word of the Lord, Smite me, this kindneſſe is deadly: Becauſe thou haſt not obeyed the voyce of the Lord, behold, aſſoone as thou art departed from me a Lyon ſhall ſlay thee; It is not for vs to examine the charges of the Almighty; Be they neuer ſo harſh, or improbable, (if they bee once knowne for his) there is no way but obedience, or death. Not to ſmite a Prophet, when God commands, is no leſſe ſinne, then to ſmite a Prophet, when God forbids; It is the diuine precept or prohibition, that either makes or aggrauates an euill; And if the Iſraelite bee thus reuenged, that ſmote not a Prophet, what ſhall become of Ahab that ſmote not Benhadad? Euery man is not thus indulgent; an eaſie requeſt will gaine blowes to a Prophet from the next hand; yea, and a wound in ſmiting. I know not whether it were an harder taske for the Prophet to require a wound, then for a well-meaning Iſraelite to giue it; Both muſt bee done; The Prophet hath what hee would; what hee muſt will, a ſight of his owne blood: and now diſguiſed herewith, and with aſhes vpon his face, hee way-layes the King of Iſrael, and ſadly complaines of himſelfe in a reall parable, for diſmiſſing a Syrian priſoner deliuered to his hands, vpon no leſſe charge then his life; and ſoone receiues ſentence of death, from his owne mouth: Well was that wound beſtowed that ſtrucke Ahabs ſoule through the fleſh of the Prophet: The diſguiſe is remoued: The King ſees not a ſouldier, but a Seer, and now finds that he hath vnawares paſſed ſentence vpon himſelfe. There needs no other doome then from the lips of the offender: Thus ſaith the Lord, Becauſe thou haſt let goe out of thy hand, a man whom I appointed to vtter deſtruction, therefore thy life ſhall go for his life, and thy people for his people: Had not Ahab knowne the will of God concerning Benhadad, that had beene mercy to an enemy, which was now cruelty to himſelfe, to Iſrael: His eares had heard of the blaſphemies of that wicked tongue: His eyes had ſeene God goe before him, in the example of that reuenge; No Prince can ſtrike ſo deepe into his ſtate, as in not ſtriking: In priuate fauour there may bee publike vnmercifulneſſe.

Naboth had a faire Vineyard; It had beene better for him to haue had none; His vineyard yeelded him the bitter Grapes of death. Many a one hath beene sold to death by his lands and goods; wealth hath beene a snare, as to the soule, so to the life; Why doe wee call those goods, which are many times the bane of the owner? Naboths vineyard lay neere to the Court of Iezebel; It had beene better for him, it had beene planted in the wildernesse; Doubtlesse, this vicinity made it more commodious to the possessor; but more enuious and vnsafe: It was now the perpetuall obiect of an euill eye, and stirred those desires, which could neither be well denyed, nor satisfied: Eminency is still ioyned with perill, obscuritie with peace: There can bee no worse annoyance to an inheritance, then the greatnesse of an euill neighbourhood: Naboths vines stood too neere the smoake of Iezebels chimneys: too much within the prospect of Ahabs window; Now lately had the King of Israel beene twice victorious ouer the Syrians; no sooner is he returned home then hee is ouercome with euill desires; The toyle hee gaue was not worse then that hee tooke: There is more true glory in the conquest of our lusts, then in all bloody Trophees; In vaine shall Ahab boast of subduing a forraine enemy, whiles he is subdued by a domesticke enemy within his owne brest; Opportunity and Conuenience is guilty of many a theft: Had not this ground line so faire, Ahab had not beene tempted: His eye lets in this euill guest into the soule, which now dares come forth at the mouth; Giue mee thy vineyard, that I may haue it for a garden of herbes, because it is neere to my house, and I will giue thee a better vineyard for it, or if it seeme good to thee, I will giue thee the worth of it in money; Yet had Ahab so much ciuility, and iustice, that he would not wring Naboths patrimony out of his hand by force, but requires it vpon a faire composition, whether of price, or of exchange: His gouernment was vicious, not tyrannicall; Proprietie of goods was inuiolably maintained by him; No lesse was Naboth allowed to claime a right in his vineyard, then Ahab in his palace; This wee owe to lawfull Soueraignty to call ought our owne, and well worthy is this priuiledge to be repaid with all humble and loyall respects. The motion of Ahab (had it beene to any other then an Israelite) had beene as iust, equall, reasonable, as the repulse had beene rude, churlish, inhumane. It is fit that Princes should receive due satisfaction in the iust demands, not onely of their necessities, but conuenience, and pleasure; well may they challenge this retribution to the benefit of our common peace and protection; If there bee any sweetnesse in our vineyards, any strength in our fields, we may thanke their scepters; lustly may they expect from vs the commoditie, the delight of their habitation; and if we gladly yeeld not to their full elbow-roome, both of site and prouision, we can be no other then ingratefull; Yet dares not Naboth giue any other answer to so plausible a motion, then, The Lord forbid it me, that I should giue thee the inheritance of my Fathers: The honest Israelite saw violence in this ingenuity; There are no stronger commands, then the requests of the great; It is well that Ahab will not wrest away this patrimony, it is not well that he desired it; The land was not so much stood vpon, as the law; One earth might be as good as another, and money equiualent to eyther: The Lord had forbidden to alien their inheritance: Naboth did not feare losse, but sinne: What Naboth might not lawfully doe, Ahab might not lawfully require: It pleased God to bee very punctuall, and cautelous, both in the distinction, and preseruation of the intirenesse of these Iewish inheritances: Nothing but extreme necessitie might warrant a sale of land, and that, but for a time; if not so, yet at the Iubile, it must reuert to the first owner:

owner: It was not without a comfortable signification, that whosoeuer had once his part in the land of Promise, could neuer lose it; Certainly Ahab could not but know this diuine restriction, yet doubts not to say, Giue me thy vineyard; The vnconscionable will know no other law but their profit, their pleasure. A lawlesse greatnesse hates all limitations, and abides not to heare men should need any other warrant but will.

Naboth dares not be thus tractable; How gladly would he be quit of his inheritance, if God would acquit him from the sinne? Not out of wilfulnesse, but obedience, doth this faithfull Israelite hold off from this demand of his Soueraign; not daring to please an earthly King with offending the heauenly: When Princes command lawfull things, God commands by them; when vnlawfull, they command against God; passiue obedience we must giue, actiue we may not; wee follow them as subordinate, not as opposite to the highest.

Who cannot but see and pity the straites of honest Naboth: Ahab requires what God forbids; he must fall out either with his God, or his King: Conscience caries him against policy; and he resolues not to sinne, that he might be gracious. For a world he may not giue his vineyard: Those who are themselues godlesse, thinke the holy care of others but idly scrupulous: The King of Israel could not chuse but see that onely Gods prohibition lay in the way of his designes, not the stomacke of a froward subiect; yet he goes away into his house heauy and displeased, and casts himselfe downe vpon his bed, turnes away his face, and refuses his meat; Hee hath taken a surfet of Naboths grapes which marres his appetite, and threatens his life: How ill can great hearts endure to bee crossed, though vpon the most reasonable and iust grounds: Ahabs place call'd him to the Guardianship of Gods Law; and now his heart is ready to breake, that this parcell of that Law may not bee broken: No maruell if hee made not dainty to transgresse a locall statute of God, who did so shamefully violate the eternall Law of both Tables.

I know not whether the spleen, or the gall of Ahab be more affected; Whether more of anger, or griefe, I cannot say; but sick he is & keepes his bed, and balkes his meat, as if he should die of no other death, thē the salads that he would haue had: O the importet passion and insatiable desires of Couetousnesse! Ahab is Lord & King of all the territories of Israel; Naboth is the owner of one poore Vineyard; Ahab cannot inioy Israel, if Naboth inioy his Vineyard; Besides Samaria, Ahab was the great Lord Paramount of Damascus and all Syria, the victor of him that was attended with two and thirty Kings; Naboth was a plaine townsman of Iezreel, the good husband of a little Vineyard; Whether is the wealthier? I doe not heare Naboth wish for any thing of Ahabs, I heare Ahab wishing (not without indignation of a repulse) for somwhat from Naboth: Riches & pouerty, is no more in the heart then in the hand; He is wealthy that is contented; he is poore that wanteth more: O a rich Naboth that carest not for all the large possessions of Ahab, so thou maist bee the Lord of thine owne Vineyard; O miserable Ahab, that carest not for thine owne possessions whiles thou mayest not be the Lord of Naboths Vineyard.

He that caused the disease sends him a Physitian; Satan knew of old how to make vse of such helpers; Iezebel comes to Ahabs bed-side, and casts cold water in his face, and puts into him spirits of her owne extracting. Dost thou now gouerne the Kingdome of Israel? Arise, eat bread, and let thine heart be merry, I will giue thee the Vineyard of Naboth. Ahab wanted neither wit, nor wickednesse; Yet is he in both, a very nouice to this Zidonian dame. There needs no other Deuill, then Iezebel, whether to project euill, or to worke it: She chides the pusillanimity of her dejected husband, and perswades him his rule cannot bee free, vnlesse it be licentious, that there should bee no bounds for soueraignetie, but will: Already hath shee contriued to haue by fraud and force, what was denied to intreaty; Nothing needs but the name, but the seale of Ahab: let her alone with the rest: How present are the wits of the weaker sex for the deuising of wickednesse? She frames a letter in Ahabs name, to the Senatours of Iezreel, wherein shee requires them to proclaime a fast, to suborne two false witnesses against Naboth, to charge him with blasphemy against God & the King, to stone him to death; A ready payment for a rich Vineyard: Whose indignation riseth not to heare Iezebel name a fast? The great contemners of the most important Lawes of God, yet can be content to make vse of some diuine, both statutes, and customes, for their owne aduantage: She knew the Israelites had so much remainder of grace, as to hold blasphemy worthy of death; She knew their manner was to expiate those crying sinnes with publike humiliation: She knew that two witnesses at least must cast the offender; all these she vrges to her own purpose. There is no mischiefe so deuillish, as that which is cloked with piety: Simulation of holinesse doubleth a villany; This murder had not been halfe so foule, if it had not bin thus masked with a religious obseruation; Besides deuotion, what a faire pretence of legality is here? Blasphemy against God and his anointed may not passe vnreuenged; The offender is conuented before the sad and seuere bench of Magistracy; the iustice of Israel allowes not to condemne an absent, an vnheard malefactor; Witnesses come forth, and agree in the intentation of the crime; the Iudges rend their garments, and strike their brests as grieued, not more for the sin, then the punishment; their very countenance must say, Naboth should not die, if his offence did not force our iustice, and now, he is no good subiect, no true Israelite, that hath not a stone for Naboth.

Iezebel knew well to whom she wrote; Had not those letters saine vpon the times of a wofull degeneration of Israel, they had receiued no lesse strong denials from the Elders, then Ahab had from Naboth; God forbid that the Senate of Iezreel should forge a periurie, belie truth, condemne innocency, broke corruption: Command iust things, wee are ready to die in the zeale of our obedience, wee dare not imbrue our hands in the blood of an innocent.

But she knew whom she had engaged; whom she had marred by making conscious. It were strange if they who can countenance euill with greatnesse, should want factors for the vniustest designes. Miserable is that people whose Rulers (in stead of punishing) plot, and incourage wickednesse; when a distillation of euill fals from the head, vpon the lungs of any State, there must needes follow a deadly consumption.

Yet, perhaps there wanted not some colour of pretence for this proceeding; They could not but heare, that some words had passed betwixt the King and Naboth; Haply is was suggested, that Naboth had secretly ouer-lashed into saucy and contemptuous termes to his Soueraigne, such as neither might be well borne, nor yet (by reason of their priuacy) legally conuinced; the bench of Iezreel should but supply a forme to the iust matter, and desert of condemnation; What was it for them to giue their hand to this obscure midwifery of Iustice? Is it enough that their King is an accuser and witnesse of that wrong, which onely their sentence can formally reuenge. All this cannot wash their hands from the guilt of blood; If iustice be blinde, in respect of partiality, she may not be blinde in respect of the grounds of execution; Had Naboth beene a blasphemer, or a traitor, yet these men were no better then murtherers; What difference is there betwixt the stroke of Magistracie, and of man-slaughter, but due conuiction?

Wickednesse neuer spake out of a Throne, and complained of the defect of instruments; Naboth was (it seemes) strictly conscionable, his fellow Citizens loose, & lawlesse; they are glad to haue gotten such an opportunite of his dispatch: No clause of Ahabs letter is not obserued; A fast is warned, the city is assembled, Naboth is conuented, accused, confronted, sentenced, stoned. His vineyard is escheated to the Crowne; Ahab takes speedy and quiet possession; How still doth God sit in heauen, and looke vpon the complots of treachery and villanies, as if they did not concerne him: The successe so answers their desires, as if both heauen and earth were their friends. It is the plague, which seemes the felicity of sinners, to speed well in their lewd enterprises; No reckoning is brought in the midst of the meale, the end payes for all: Whiles Ahab is reioycing in his new garden-plot, and promising himselfe contentment in this commodious enlargement, in comes Elijah, sent from God with an errand of vengeance.

vengeance. Me thinkes, I see how the Kings countenance changed; with what agast eyes, and pale cheekes, he tookt vpon that vnwelcome Prophet? Little pleasure tooke he in his prospect; whiles it was clogged with such a guest: yet his tongue begins first; Hast thou found me, O mine enemy? Great is the power of conscience: vpon the last meeting (for ought we know) Ahab and Eliah parted friends: The Prophet had lacquayed his coach, and tooke a peaceable leaue at this Townes end; now Ahabs heart told him (neither needed any other messenger) that God, and his Prophet were falne out with him, His continuing Idolatry, now seconded with blood, bids him look for nothing but frownes from heauen: A guilty heart can neuer be at peace. Had not Ahab knowne how ill he had deserued of God, he had neuer saluted his Prophet by the name of an enemy: Hee had neuer been so troubled to be found by Eliah, if his owne breast had not found him out for an enemy to God: Much good may thy vineyard doe thee, O thou King of Israel, many faire flowers, and sauoury herbes may thy new Garden yeeld thee; please thy selfe with thy Iezebel, in the triumph ouer the carkasse of a scrupulous subiect; let me rather die with Naboth, then reioyce with thee: His turne is ouer, thine is to come: The stones that ouerwhelmed innocent Naboth, were nothing to those that smite thee; Hast thou killed, & also taken possession? thus saith the Lord, In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth, shall dogs lick thy blood, euen thine. What meanest thou, O Eliah, to charge this murther vpon Ahab: Hee kept his Chamber, Iezebel wrote, the Elders condemned, the people stoned; yet thou sayest, Hast thou killed? Well did Ahab know that Iezebel could not giue this vineyard with drie hands; yet was he content to winke at what she would doe: Hee but sits still whiles Iezebel workes: Onely his Signet is suffered to walke for the sealing of this vnknowne purchase: Those that are trusted with authority, may offend no lesse in coniuency, or neglect, then others in act, in participation: Not onely command, consent, countenance, but very permission toffes publike persons in those sinnes, which they might, and will not preuent. God loues to punish by retaliation: Naboth and Ahab shall both bleed; Naboth by the stones of the Iezreelites; Ahab by the shafts of the Aramites; The dogs shall tast of the blood of both: What Ahab hath done in cruelty, he shall suffer in iustice: The case and the end make the difference happy on Naboths side, on Ahabs wofull; Naboth bleeds as a Martyr; Ahab as a murtherer: What euer is Ahabs condition, Naboth changes a vineyard on earth, for a Kingdome in heauen. Neuer any wicked man gained by the persecution of an innocent: Neuer any innocent man was a loser by suffering from the Wicked.

Neither was this iudgement personall but hereditarie: I will take away thy posterity; and will make thine house like the house of Ieroboam: Him that dyeth of Ahab in the City, the Dogs shall eat; and him that dieth in the field, shall the fowles of the ayre eat: Ahab shall not need to take thought for the traducing of this ill gotten inheritance; God hath taken order for his heyres; whom his sin hath made no lesse the heyres of his curse, then of his body: Their fathers cruelty to Naboth hath made them, together with their mother Iezebel, dogs-meat. The reuenge of God doth at last make amends for the delay; Whether now is Naboths vineyard payd for?

The man that had sold himselfe to worke wickednesse, yet rues the bargaine. I doe not heare Ahab (as bad as he was) reuile or threaten the Prophet, but hee rends his cloathes, and wears and lies in sack-cloth, and fasts, and walks softly: Who that had seen Ahab would not haue deemed him a true penitent: All this was the visor of sorrow, not the face; or if the face, not the heart; or if the sorrow of the heart, yet not the repentance: A sorrow for the iudgement, not a repentance for the sinne: The very deuils howle to be tormented: Griefe is not euer a signe of grace: Ahab rends his cloathes, he did not rend his heart; he puts on sack-cloth, not amendment; he lies in sack-cloth, but he lies in his Idolatry; he walkes softly, he walks not sincerely; worldly sorrow causeth death: Happy is that griefe for which the soule is the holier.

Yet what is this I see? This very shadow of repentance caries away mercy: It is no small mercy to defer an euill: Euen Ahabs humiliation shall prorogue the iudgement;

such as the penitence was, such shall be the reward; a temporary reward of a temporary penitence: As Ahab might be thus sorrowfull, and neuer the better; so, hee may be thus fauoured, and neuer the happier: Oh God, how graciously art thou ready to reward a sound, and holy repentance, who art thus indulgent to a carnall and fruitle deiction.

AHAB and MICHAIAH: OR, The death of AHAB.

WHo would haue look't to haue heard any more of the wars of the Syrians with Israel, after so great a slaughter, after so firme a league; a league not of peace onely, but of Brotherhood: The haltars, the sack-cloth of Benhadads followers were worn out, as of vse, so of memory, and now they are changed for Iron and steele. It is but three yeares that this peace lasts; and now that warre begins which shall make an end of Ahab: The King of Israel rues his vniust mercy; according to the word of the Prophet, that gift of a life, was but an exchange. Because Ahab gaue Benhadad his life; Benhadad shall take Ahabs; He must forfeit in himselfe what he hath giuen to another. There can bee no better fruit of too much kindnesse to Infidels: It was one Article of the league betwixt Ahab and his brother Benhadad, that there should bee a speedy restitution of all the Israelitish Cities: The rest are yeelded, onely Ramoth Gilead is held backe, vnthankfully, iniuriously. He that begged but his life, receiues his Kingdome, and now rests not content with his owne bounds: Iustly doth Ahab challenge his owne, iustly doth he moue a warre to recouer his owne from a perfidious tributary; the lawfulnesse of actions may not be iudged by the euents, but by the grounds; the wise and holy arbiter of the world knowes why many times the better cause hath the worse successe: Many a iust businesse is crossed, for a punishment to the agent.

Yet Israel and Iudah were now peeced in friendship; Iehoshaphat the good King of Iudah had made affinitie with Ahab the Idolatrous King of Israel: and, besides a personall visitation, ioynes his forces with his new Kinsman, against an old confederate: Iudah had called in Syria against Israel; and now Israel cals in Iuda against Syria: Thus rather should it be: It is fit that the more pure Church should ioyne with the more corrupt, against a common Paganish enemy.

Iehoshaphat hath match't with Ahab; not with a diuorce of his deuotion. Hee will fight, not without God; Inquire I pray thee at the Word of the Lord, to day: Had hee done thus sooner; I feare Athaliah had neuer called him father: This motion was newes in Israel: It was wont to be said, Inquire of Baal: The good King of Iudah will bring Religion into fashion in the Court of Israel; Ahab had inquired of his counsellors, What needed he be so deuout, as to inquire of his Prophets? Onely Iehoshaphats presence made him thus godly: It is an happy thing to conuerse with the vertuous; their counsell and example cannot but leaue some tincture behind them of a good profession, if not of piety: Those that are truely religious dare not but take God with them in all their affaires; with him they can be as valiant as timorous without him.

Ahab had Clergy enough, such as it was: Foure hundred Prophets of the groues were reserued from appearing to Elijahs challenge; these are now consulted by Ahab: they liue to betray the life of him who saued theirs. These care not so much to inquire what God would say, as what Ahab would haue them say; they saw which way the Kings heart was bent, that way they bent their tongues: Go vp, for the Lord shall de-

liuer it into the hands of the King : False Prophets care onely to pleaſe; a plauſible falſhood paſſes with them aboue an harſh truth. Had they ſeene Ahab fearefull, they had ſaid, Peace, Peace; now they ſee him reſolute, war and victory: It is a fearefull preſage of ruine when the Prophets conſpire in aſſentation.

Their number, conſent, confidence hath eaſily won credit with Ahab: Wee doe all willingly beleeue what we wiſh: Iehoſhaphat is not ſo ſoone ſatisfied: Theſe Prophets were (it is like) obtruded to him (a ſtranger) for the true Prophets of the true God: The iudicious King ſees cauſe to ſuſpect them, and now perceiuing at what altars they ſerued, hates to reſt in their teſtimony: Is there not here a Prophet of the Lord beſides, that we might inquire of him? One ſingle Prophet ſpeaking from the Oracles of GOD, is more worth then foure hundred Baalites: Truth may not euer be meaſured by the poll. It is not number but weight that muſt carry it: in a Councell of Prophets: A ſolid Verity in one mouth is worthy to preponderate light falſhood in a thouſand.

Euen King Ahab (as bad as hee was) kept tale of his Prophets; and could giue account of one that was miſſing: There is yet one man (Michaiah the ſonne of Imlah) by whom we may inquire of the Lord, but I hate him, for hee doth not prophecy good concerning me, but euill. It is very probable that Michaiah was that diſguiſed Prophet, who brought to Ahab the fearefull meſſage of diſpleaſure, and death, for diſmiſſing Benhadad, for which he was euer ſince faſt in priſon, deepe in diſgrace: Oh corrupt heart of ſelfe condemned Ahab: If Michaiah ſpake true to thee, how was it euill? If others ſaid falſe, how was it good? and if Michaiah ſpake from the Lord, why doſt thou hate him? This hath wont to be the ancient lot of Truth, cenſure and hatred: Cenſure of the meſſage, hatred of the bearer. To carnall eares the meſſage is euill, if vnpleaſing; and if plauſible, good: If it be ſweet, it cannot be poiſon: if bitter, it cannot be wholeſome: The diſtemper of the receiuer is guilty of this miſ-conceit: In it ſelfe euery truth as it is good, ſo amiable; euery falſhood loathſome, as euill: A ſicke palate cryes out of the taſt of thoſe liquors, which are well allowed of the healthfull. It is a ſigne of a good ſtate of the ſoule, when euery vendure can receiue his proper iudgement.

Wiſe and good Iehoſaphat diſſwades Ahab from ſo hard an opinion, and ſees cauſe ſo much more to vrge the conſultation of Michaiah, by how much he findes him more vnpleaſing: The King of Iſrael to ſatisfie the importunitie of ſo great, and deare an allie, ſends an Officer for Michaiah: He knew well (belike) where to finde him; within thoſe foure walls, where vniuſt cruelty had diſpoſed of that innocent Seer: Out of the obſcurity of the priſon, is the poore Prophet fetcht in the light of ſo glorious a Conſeſſion of two Kings, who thought this Conuocation of Prophets not vnworthy of their greateſt repreſentation of State and Maieſtie: There he findes Zedekiah, the leader of that falſe crue, not ſpeaking only, but acting his prediction: Signes were no leſſe vſed by the Prophets, then words; this arch-flatterer hath made him hornes of iron; the horne is forceable, the iron irreſiſtible; by an irreſiſtible force ſhall Ahab puſh the Syrians; as if there were more certainty in this mans hands then in his tongue: If this ſon Chenaanah had not had a fore-head of braſſe for impudency, and a heart of Lead for flexibleneſſe to humours, and times, he had neuer deuiſed theſe horns of iron; wherewith his King was goared vnto blood: Howſoeuer, it is enough for him that he is beleeued, that he is ſeconded: All the great inqueſt of theſe Prophets gaue vp their verdict by this foreman: not one of foure hundred diſſented: Vnanimitie of opinion in the greateſt Eccleſiaſticall aſſemblies is not euer an argument of truth: There may be as common, and as firme agreement in error.

The meſſenger that came for Michaiah, like a carnall friend, ſets him in a way of fauour: tels him what the reſt ſaid, how they pleaſed; how vnſafe it would bee for him to varie, how beneficiall to aſſent: Thoſe that adore earthly greatneſſe, thinke euery man ſhould dote vpon their Idols: and hold no tearmes too high for their ambitious purchaſes. Faithfull Michaiah ſcornes the motion, hee knowes the price of the word, and contemnes it, As the Lord liueth, what the Lord ſaith vnto me, that will I ſpeake: Neither feares, nor fauours, can tempt the holily reſolute: They can trample

vpon dangers, or honors, with a careleſſe foot; and whether they be ſmiled or frowned on by the great, dare not either alter, or conceale their errand.

The queſtion is moued to Michaiah; He at firſt ſo yeelds, that he contradicts; yeelds in words, contradicts in pronunciation; The ſyllables are for them, the ſound againſt them: Ironies deny ſtrongeſt in affirming; and now being preſſed home, hee tels them that God had ſhewed him thoſe ſheepe of Iſrael ſhould ere long, by this meanes, want their Shepheard; The very reſemblance, to a good Prince, had beene affectiue; The ſheepe is an helpleſſe creature, not able either to guard or guide it ſelfe; all the ſafety, all the direction of it, is from the keeper; without whom, euery curre chaſes and wearies it, euery tracke ſeduceth it; Such ſhall Iſrael ſoone bee, if Ahab bee ruled by his Prophets; The King of Iſrael doth not beleeue, but quarrell; not at himſelfe, who had deſerued euill, but at the Prophet, who foreſignified it, and is more carefull that the King of Iuda ſhould marke how true hee had fore-told concerning the Prophet, then how the prophet had fore-told concerning him.

Bold Michaiah (as no whit diſcouraged with the vniuſt checks of greatneſſe) doubles his prediction, and by a ſecond viſion particularizeth the meanes of this dangerous errour. Whiles the two Kings ſate maieſtically in their Thrones, hee tels them of a more glorious Throne, then theirs, whereon he ſaw the King of Gods ſitting: Whiles they were compaſſed with ſome hundreds of Prophets, and thouſands of Subiects, and Souldiers, he tels them of all the hoſt of heauen, attending that other Throne; Whiles they were deliberating of a war, he tels them of a God of heauen iuſtly decreeing the iudgement of a deadly deception to Ahab: The decree of the higheſt is not more plainely reuealed, then expreſſed parabolically. The wiſe and holy God is repreſented, after the manner of men, conſulting of that ruine, which hee intended to the wicked King of Iſrael; That increated, and infinite wiſedome, needs not the aduice of any finite, and created powers, to direct him, needs not the aſſent, and aid of any ſpirit for his execution; much leſſe of an euill one: yet here an euill ſpirit is brought in (by way of viſion mixt with parable) profering the ſeruice of his lie, accepted, imployed, ſucceſſefull: Theſe figures are not voyd of truth: The action and euent is reduced to a decree; the decree is ſhadowed out by the reſemblance of humane proceedings: All euill motions, and counſels are originally from that malignant Spirit: That euill ſpirit could haue no power ouer men, but by the permiſſion, by the decree of the Almighty: That Almighty, as he is no Author of ſin, ſo he ordinates all euill to good: It is good that is iuſt: it is iuſt that one ſinne ſhould be puniſhed by another: Satan is herein no other then the executioner of that God, who is as farre from infuſing euill, as from not reuenging it. Now Ahab ſees the ground of that applauſed conſent of his rabble of Prophets: one euil ſpirit hath no leſſe deceiued them, then they their maſter: he is one, therefore he agrees with himſelfe, he is euill, therefore both he & they agree in deceit.

Oh the noble & vndaunted ſpirit of Michaiah! neither the Thrones of the Kings, nor the number of the Prophets could abate one word of his true (though diſpleaſing) meſſage: The King of Iſrael ſhall heare, that he is miſ-led by lyers, they by a deuill: Surely Iehoſhaphat cannot but wonder at ſo vnequall a contention: to ſee one ſilly Prophet affronting foure hundred: with whom leſt confidence ſhould carie it, behold Zedekiah more bold, more zealous: If Michaiah haue giuen him (with his fellowes) the lye, he giues Michaiah the fiſt: Before theſe two great Guardians of peace, and iuſtice, ſwaggering Zedekiah ſmites Michaiah on the face, and with the blow expoſtulates: Which way went the Spirit of the Lord from me, to ſpeake vnto thee? For a Prophet to ſmite a Prophet, in the face two Kings, was intolerably inſolent: the act was much vnbeſeeming the perſon, more the preſence: Prophets may reproue, they may not ſtrike: It was enough for Ahab to puniſh with the hand; no weapon was for Zedekiah, but his tongue; neither could this rude preſumption haue beene well taken, if malice had not made magiſtracie inſenſible of this vſurpation: Ahab was well content to ſee that hated mouth beaten by any hand. It is no new condition of Gods faithfull meſſengers to ſmart for ſaying truth. Falſhood doth not more bewray it ſelfe

in any thing then in blowes; Truth ſuffers, whiles errour perſecutes: None are more ready to boaſt of the Spirit of God, then thoſe that haue the leaſt; As in veſſels the full are ſilent.

Innocent Michaiah, neither defends, nor complaines; It would haue well beſeemed the religious King of Iudah, to haue ſpoken in the cauſe of the dumbe, to haue checked inſolent Zedekiah: Hee is content to giue way to this tide of peremptory, and generall oppoſition: The helpleſſe Prophet ſtands alone, yet layes about him with his tongue, Behold, thou ſhalt ſee in that day, when thou ſhalt goe into an inner chamber, and hide thy ſelfe. Now the proud Baalite ſhewed himſelfe too much; ere long he ſhall bee glad to lurke vnſeene; his hornes of iron cannot beare off this danger. The ſonne of Ahab cannot chuſe, but in the zeale of reuenging his fathers deadly ſeducement, call for that falſe head of Zedekiah: In vaine ſhall that Impoſtor ſeeke to hide himſelfe from iuſtice: But, in the meane while, he goes away with honour: Michaiah with cenſure. Take Michaiah, and carie him backe to Amon, the Gouernour of the Citie, and to Ioaſh the Kings ſonne; and ſay, Thus ſayth the King, Put this fellow in priſon, and feed him with bread of affliction, and with water of affliction, vntill I come in peace.

An hard doome of Truth; The Iayle for his lodging; coorſe bread and water for his food, ſhall but reſerue Michaiah for a further reuenge. The returne of Ahab ſhall bee the bane of the Prophet: Was not this hee that aduiſed Benhadab, not to boaſt in putting on his Armour, as in the vngirding it; and doth hee now promiſe himſelfe peace and victory, before hee buckle it on? No warning will diſſwade the wilfull; So aſſured doth Ahab make himſelfe of ſucceſſe, that hee threats ere hee goe, what he will doe when he returnes in peace: How iuſtly doth God deride the miſreckonings of proud and fooliſh men; If Ahab had no other ſinnes, his very confidence ſhall defeat him; yet the Prophet cannot be ouercome in his reſolution; hee knowes his grounds cannot deceiue him, and dare therefore caſt the credit of his function vpon this iſſue: If thou returne at all in peace, the Lord hath not ſpoken by mee: And hee ſayd, Hearken, O people, euery one of you; Let him neuer bee called a Prophet, that dare not truſt his GOD: This was no aduenture therefore of reputation, or life; ſince hee knew whom hee beleeued, the euent was no leſſe ſure, then if it had beene paſt: Hee is no God that is not conſtant to himſelfe: Hath hee ſpoken, and ſhall he not performe? What hold haue wee for our ſoules, but his eternall Word? The being of God is not more ſure, then his promiſes, then his ſentences of iudgement. Well may we appeale the teſtimonie of the world in both: if there bee not plagues for the wicked; if there be not rewards for the righteous; God hath not ſpoken by vs.

Not Ahab onely, but good IEHOSHAPHAT is caried with the multitude; Their forces are ioyned againſt Ramoth: The King of Iſrael doth not ſo truſt his Prophets, that he dares truſt himſelfe in his owne cloathes: Thus ſhall hee elude Michaiahs threat; I wis the iudgement of God, the Syrian ſhafts cannot finde him out in this vnſuſpected diſguiſe: How fondly doe vaine men imagine to ſhift off the iuſt reuenges of the Almighty.

The King of Syria giues charge to his Captaines to fight againſt none, but the King of Iſrael: Thus doth the vnthankefull Infidell repay the mercy of his late victor: Ill was the Snake ſaued, that requites the fauour of his life, with a ſting: Thus ſtill the greateſt are the faireſt marke to enuious eyes. By how much more eminent any man is in the Iſrael of God, ſo many more, and more dangerous enemies muſt hee expect: Both earth and hell conſpire in their oppoſition to the worthieſt. Thoſe who are aduanced aboue others, haue ſo much more need of the guard, both of their owne vigilancy, and others prayers. Iehoſhaphat had like to haue payd deare for his loue: He is purſued, for him, in whoſe amitie he offended; His cryes deliuer him; his cries, not to his purſuers, but to his God; whoſe mercy takes not aduantage of our infirmitie, but reſcues vs from thoſe euils, which wee wilfully prouoke: It is Ahab

againſt whom, not the Syrians onely, but God himſelfe intends this quarrell: The enemy is taken off from Iehoſhaphat: Oh the iuſt and mighty hand of that diuine prouidence, which directeth all our actions to his owne ends; which takes order where euery ſhaft ſhall light; and guides the arrow of the ſtrong Archer, into the ioynts of Ahabs harneſſe: It was ſhot at a venture, fals by a deſtiny; and there fals where it may carie death to an hidden debtor: In all actions both voluntary and caſuall, thy will, O God, ſhall bee done by vs, with what euer intentions. Little did the Syrian know whom he had ſtriken, no more then the arrow wherewith hee ſtroke: An inuiſible hand diſpoſed of both, to the puniſhment of Ahab, to the vindication of Michaiah: How worthily, O God, art thou to bee adored in thy iuſtice, and wiſedome, to bee feared in thy iudgements. Too late doth Ahab now thinke of the faire warnings of Michaiah, which he vnwiſely contemned; of the painfull flatteries of Zedekiah, which hee ſtubbornly beleeued; That guilty blood of his runs downe out of his wound, into the midſt of his charet, and payes Naboth his arrerages: O Ahab, what art thou the better for thine Iuory houſe, whiles thou haſt a blacke ſoule? What comfort haſt thou now, in thoſe flattering prophets, which tickled thine eares, and ſecured thee of victories? What ioy is it to thee now, that thou waſt great? Who had not rather be a Michaiah in the Iayle, then Ahab in the Charet? Wicked men haue the aduantage of the way, godly men of the end: The Charet is waſhed in the poole of Samaria, the dogges come to claime their due: they licke vp the blood of the King of Iſrael: The tongues of thoſe brute creatures ſhall make good the tongue of Gods Prophet: Michaiah is iuſtified, Naboth is reuenged, the Baalites confounded, Ahab iudged: Righteous art thou O God in all thy wayes, and holy in all thy workes.

Haziah ſucceeds his father Ahab, both in his throne, and in his ſinne: Who could looke for better iſſue of thoſe loynes, of thoſe examples? God followes him with a double iudgement; of the reuolt of Moab, and of his owne ſickneſſe: All the reigne of Ahab, had Moab beene a quiet Tributarie; and furniſhed Iſrael with rich flockes, and fleeces; now their ſubiection dies with that warlike King, and will not be inherited: This rebellion tooke aduantage, as from the weaker ſpirits, ſo from the ſickly body of Ahaziah, whoſe diſeaſe was not naturall, but caſuall: walking in his Palace of Samaria, ſome grate in the floore of his Chamber, breakes vnder him, and giues way to that fall, whereby hee is bruiſed, and languiſheth: The ſame hand that guided Ahabs ſhaft, cracks Ahaziahs latteſſe: How infinite varietie of plagues hath the iuſt GOD for obſtinate ſinners? whether in the field or in the chamber, he knowes to finde them out: How feareleſſly did Ahaziah walke on his wonted pauement? The Lord hath layd a trapp for him, whereinto, whiles he thinkes leaſt, he fals irrecouerably: No place is ſafe for the man that is at varience with God.

The body of Ahaziah was not more ſicke, then his ſoule was graceleſſe: None but chance was his enemy, none but the God of Ekron muſt bee his friend: He lookes not vp to the Omnipotent hand of diuine iuſtice for the diſeaſe, or of mercy for the remedy: An Idol is his refuge, whether for cure or intelligence: We heare not till now of Baal-zebub: this new God of flies is (perhaps) of his making, who now is a ſuter to his owne erection: All theſe heathen Deities were but a deuill, with change of appellations; the influence of that euill ſpirit deluded thoſe miſerable clients; elſe, there there was no fly ſo impotent as that out ſide of the god of Ekron: Who would thinke that any Iſraelite could ſo farre dote vpon a ſtocke, a Fiend? Time gathered much credit to this Idol; in ſo much as the Iewes afterwards ſtiled Beel-zebub, the Prince of all the regions of darkneſſe: Ahaziah is the firſt that brings his Oracle in requeſt, and payes him the tribute of his deuotion: Hee ſends meſſengers, and ſayes, Goe inquire of Baal-Zebub the god of Ekron, whether I ſhall recouer of this diſeaſe: The meſſage was either idle, or wicked: idle, if he ſent it to a ſtock; if to a deuill, both idle and wicked. What can the moſt intelligent ſpirits know of future things, but what they ſee either in their cauſes, or in the light of participation: What a madneſſe was it in Ahaziah to ſeeke to the poſterne, whiles the fore-gate ſtood open? Could thoſe euill ſpirits truely foretell euents no way pre-exiſtent, yet they might not, without ſinne, bee conſulted; the euill of their nature debarres all the benefit of their information: If not as intelligencers, much leſſe may they be ſought to, as gods: who cannot bluſh to heare and ſee, that euen the very Euangelicall Iſrael ſhould yeeld Pilgrims to the ſhrines of darkneſſe? How many, after this cleere light of the Goſpell, in their loſſes, in their ſickneſſes, ſend to theſe infernall Oracles, and damne themſelues wilfully, in a vaine curioſitie: The meſſage of the iealous God intercepts them, with a iuſt diſdaine, as here by Eliiah, Is it not becauſe there is not a God in Iſrael, that yee goe to enquire of Baal-Zebub the god of Ekron? What can be a greater diſparagement to the True God, then to be neglected, then to ſtand aſide, and ſee vs make loue to an helliſh riuall: were there no God in Iſrael, in heauen, what could wee doe other? what worſe? This affront of what euer Ahaziah cannot eſcape without a reuenge: Therefore thus ſaith the Lord, Thou ſhalt not come downe from that bed, on which thou art gone vp, but ſhalt ſurely die. It is an high indignitie to the True God, not to be ſought to, in our neceſſities, but ſo to bee caſhiered from our deuotions, as to haue a falſe god thruſt in his roome, is ſuch a ſcorne, as it is well if it can eſcape with one death: Let now the famous god of Ekron take off that brand of feared mortalitie, which the liuing God hath ſet vpon Ahaziah: Let Baal-zebub make good ſome better newes to his diſtreſſed ſuppliant: Rather the King of Iſrael is himſelfe (without his repentance) haſting to Beel-zebub. This errand is ſoone done; The meſſengers are returned, ere they goe: Not a little were they amazed to heare their ſecret meſſage from anothers mouth; neither could chuſe but thinke, Hee that can tell what Ahaziah ſaid, what hee thought, can foretell how hee ſhall ſpeed: Wee haue met with a greater God then wee went to ſeeke; what need wee inquire for another anſwer? With this conceit, with this report, they returne to their ſicke Lord, and aſtoniſh him with ſo ſhort, ſo ſad a relation: No maruell if the King inquired curiouſly of the habit, and faſhion of the man, that could know this, that durſt ſay this: They deſcribe him a man whether of an hairy skin, or of rough, courſe, careleſſe attire; thus dreſt, thus girded: Ahaziah readily apprehends it to be Eliiah, the old friend of his father Ahab, of his mother Iezebel: More then once had he ſeene him (an vnwelcome gueſt) in the Court of Iſrael: The times had beene ſuch, that the Prophet could not at once ſpeake true, and pleaſe: Nothing but reproofes and menaces ſounded from the mouth of Eliiah; Michaiah and hee were ſtill as welcome to the eyes of that guilty Prince, as the Syrian arrow was into his fleſh: Too well therefore had Ahaziah noted that querulous Seer, and now is not a little troubled to ſee himſelfe (in ſucceſſion) haunted with that bold, and ill-boding ſpirit.

Behold the true ſonne of Iezebel; the anguiſh of his diſeaſe, the expectation of death cannot take off the edge of his perſecution of Eliiah: It is againſt his will that his death-bed is not bloody: Had Ahaziah meant any other then a cruell violence to Eliiah, he had ſent a peaceable meſſenger, to call him to the Court, hee had not ſent a Captaine, with a band of Souldiers, to fetch him: the inſtruments which hee vſeth, cary reuenge in their face: If he had not thought Eliiah more then a man, what needed a band of fifty to apprehend one? and if he did thinke him ſuch, why would hee ſend to apprehend him by fifty? Surely Ahaziah knew of old how miraculous a Prophet

Elijah was: what power that man had ouer all their base Deities: what command of the Elements, of the heauens: and yet hee sends to attache him. It is a strange thing to see how wilfully godlesse men striue against the streame of their owne hearts: hating that which they know good, fighting against that which they know diuine. What a grosse disagreement is in the message of this Israelitish Captaine? Thou man of God, the King hath said, Come downe; If hee were a man of God, how hath hee offended? and if he haue iustly offended the anointed of God, how is hee a man of God? And if he be a man of God, and haue not offended, why should he come downe to punishment? Here is a kinde confession, with a false heart, with bloody hands: The world is full of these windy courtesies, reall cruelties: Deadly malice lurkes vnder faire complements, and whiles it flatters, killeth. The Prophet hides not himselfe from the pursuit of Ahaziah; rather hee sits where hee may bee most conspicuous, on the top of an Hill: this band knowes well where to finde him; and climbes vp, in the sight of Elijah, for his arrest: The steepnesse of the ascent (when they drew neere to the highest reach) yeelded a conuenience both of respiration and parle: thence doth the Captaine imperiously call downe the Prophet. Who would not tremble at the dreadfull answer of Elijah, If I be a man of God, then let fire come downe from heauen and consume thee, and thy fifty: What shall we say? That a Prophet is reuengefull; that Souldiers suffer whiles a Prophet strikes; that a Princes command is answered with imprecation, words with fire, that an vnarmed Seer should kill one and fiftie at a blow? There are few trackes of Elijah that are ordinarie, and fit for common feet: His actions are more for wonder, then for precedent: Nor in his owne defence would the Prophet haue beene the death of so many, if God had not by a peculiar instinct made him an instrument of this iust vengeance. The diuine iustice finds it meet to doe this for the terrour of Israel, that hee might teach them, what it was to contemne, to persecute a Prophet; that they might learne to feare him whom they had forsaken, and confesse that heauen was sensible of their insolencies, and impieties: If not as visibly, yet as certainly doth God punish the violations of his ordinances, the affronts offered to his messengers, still and euer: Not euer with the same speed: sometimes, the punishment ouer takes the act: sometimes dogs it afarre off, and seizeth vpon the offender, when his crime is forgotten: Here, no sooner is the word out of Elijahs mouth, then the fire is out of Heauen. Oh the wonderfull power of a Prophet! There sits Elijah in his coorse Mantle, on the top of the Hill, and commands the heauens, and they obey him, Let fire fall downe from heauen; Hee needs no more but say what hee would haue done: The fire fals down, as before, vpon the sacrifice in Carmel, so now vpon the Souldiers of Ahaziah: What is man in the hands of his Maker? One flash of lightning hath consumed these one and fifty. And if all the hosts of Israel, yea of the world, had beene in their roomes, there had needed no other force. What madnesse is it for him whose breath is in his nosthrils to contend with the Almightie? The time was, when two zealous Disciples would faine have imitated this fierie reuenge of Elijah, and were repelled with a checke: The very place puts them in minde of the iudgement: Not farre from Samaria was this done by Elijah, and wisht to bee done by the Disciples: So churlish a reiection of a Sauiour seemed no lesse hainous, then the endeuour of apprehending a Prophet: Lord, wilt thou that wee command fire to come downe from heauen, and consume them, as Elias did. The world yeelded but one Elias: That which was zeale in him, might be fury in another, the least variation of circumstance may make an example dangerous; presently therefore doe they heare, Ye know not of what spirit yee are: It is the calling that varies the spirit; Elijah was Gods Minister for the execution of so seuere a iudgement; they were but the Seruants of their owne impotent anger; there was fire in their brests, which God neuer kindled: farre was it from the Sauiour of men, to second their earthly fire, with his heauenly: Hee came indeed to send fire vpon earth; but to warme, not to burne; and if to burne, not the persons of men, but their corruptions: How much more safe is it for vs to follow the meeke Prophet of the New Testament,

then that ſeruent Prophet of the Old: Let the matter of our prayers be the ſweet dewes of mercy, not the fires of vengeance.

Would not any man haue thought Ahaziah ſufficiently warned by ſo terrible a iudgement: Could he chuſe but ſay, It is no medling with a man that can ſpeake lightening and death: what he hath ſaid concerning mee, is too well approued by what hee hath done to my Meſſengers; Gods hand is with him; mine ſhall not bee againſt him: Yet, now, behold, the rage of Ahaziah is ſo much the more kindled by this fire from heauen; and a more reſolute Captain, with a ſecond band, is ſend to fetch Elijah to death; This man is in haſte, and commands not onely his deſcent, but his ſpeed; Come downe quickly: The charge implyes a threat; Elijah muſt looke for force, if hee yeeld not: There needs no other weapon for defence, for offence, then the ſame tongue, the ſame breath: God hath fire enough for all the troopes of Ahaziah: Immediately, doth a ſudden flame breake out of heauen, and conſume this forward Leader, and his bold followers: It is a iuſt preſage and deſert of ruine, not to be warned: Worthily are they made examples, that will not take them.

What Marble, or Flint is harder then a wicked heart? As if Ahaziah would deſpightfully ſpit in the face of heauen, and wreſtle a fall with the Almighty, hee will needs yet againe ſet a third Captaine, vpon ſo deſperate an imploiment: How hot a ſeruice muſt this Commander needs thinke himſelfe put vpon? Who can but pity his ſtraits? There is death before him, death behinde him: If he goe not, the Kings wrath is the meſſenger of death: if he goe, the Prophets tongue is the executioner of death. Many an hard taske will follow the ſeruice of a Prince wedded to his paſſion, diuorced from God: Vnwillingly, doubtleſſe, and fearfully doth this Captaine climbe vp the Hill, to ſcale that impregnable Fort; but, now, when hee comes neere to the aſſault, the battery that hee layes to it, is his prayers; his ſtreſt fight is vpon his knees: Hee went vp, and came, and fell vpon his knees, before Elijah, and beſought him, and ſaid vnto him, O man of God, I pray thee, let my life, and the life of theſe fifty thy ſeruants, be precious in thy ſight: he confeſſes the iudgement that befell his Predeceſſors; the monuments of their deſtruction were in his eye, and the terrour of it, in his heart; of an enemy therefore he is become a ſuppliant, and ſues not ſo much for the Prophets vengeance, as for his owne life: This was the way to offer violence to the Prophet of God, to the God of that Prophet, euen humble ſupplications; Wee muſt deprecate that euill, which wee would auoid: if we would force bleſſings, we muſt intreat them: There is nothing to be gotten from God by ſtrong hand, any thing by ſuit. The life of the Captaine is preſerued: Elijah is by the Angell commanded to goe downe with him, ſpeedily, feareleſſly. The Prophet caſts not with himſelfe: What ſafety can there be in this iourney? I ſhall put my ſelfe into the hands of rude Souldiers, and by them, into the hands of an inraged King, if he did not eagerly thirſt after my blood, hee had neuer ſought it, with ſo much loſſe: But, ſo ſoone as hee had a charge from the Angell, hee walkes downe reſolutely, and (as it were) dares the dangers of ſo great an hoſtilitie: Hee knew that the ſame God, who had fought for him, vpon the hill, would not leaue him in the Valley; hee knew that the Angell which bade him goe, was guard enough againſt a world of enemies. Faith knowes not how to feare, and can as eaſily contemne the ſuggeſtion of perils, as infidelitie can raiſe them.

The Prophet lookes boldly vpon the Court; which doubtleſſe was not a little diſaffected to him, and comes confidently into the bed-chamber of Ahaziah; and ſticks not to ſpeake ouer the ſame words to his head, which hee had ſent him not long ſince by his firſt meſſengers: Not one ſyllable will the Prophet abate of his errand: It is not for an Herald of heauen to be out of countenance, or to mince ought of the moſt killing meſſages of his God.

Whether the inexpected confidence both of the man, and of the ſpeech amazed the ſicke King of Iſrael, or whether the feare of ſome preſent iudgement (wherewith hee might ſuſpect Elijah to come armed vpon any act of violence that ſhould bee offered) offered) ouer-awed him; or whether now at the last, vpon the sight and hearing of this man of God, the Kings heart began to relent, and checke it selfe for that sinne, for which hee was iustly reproued, I know not; but sure I am, the Prophet goes away vntouched; neither the furious purposes of Ahaziah, nor the exasperations of Iezebel can hurt that Prophet, whom God hath intended to a fiery Chariot: The hearts of Kings are not their owne: Subiects are not so much in their hands, as they are in their Makers: How easily can God tame the fiercenesse of any creature, and in the midst of their most heady careere, stop them on the sudden, and fetcht them vpon the knees of their humble submission: It is good trusting God with the euents of his owne commands; who can at pleasure either auert euils, or improue them to good.

According to the word of the Propher, Ahaziah dies: not two whole yeares doth hee sit in the Throne of Israel: which hee now must yeeld (in the want of children) to his brother. Wickednesse shortens his reigne; he had too much of Ahab, and Iezebel, to expect the blessing, either of length, or prosperitie of gouernment: As alwaies in the other, so oft-times in this world doth God testifie his anger to wicked men: Some liue long, that they may aggrauate their iudgement; others die soon, that they may hasten it.

The Rapture of Elijah.

Long and happily hath Elijah fought the wars of his God; and now after his noble, and glorious victories, God will send him a chariot of Triumph: Not suddenly would God snatch away his Prophet without warning, without expectation; but acquaints him before-hand with the determination of his glory. How full of heauenly ioy was the soule of Elijah, whiles hee fore-knew, and lookt for this instant happinesse: With what contempt did he cast his eyes vpon that earth which he was now presently to leaue? With what rauishment of an inward pleasure did he looke vpon that heauen which he was to enioy? For a meet farewell to the earth, Elijah will goe visit the Schooles of the Prophets before his departure: These were in his way: Of any part of the earth they were neareſt vnto heauen: In an holy progresse therefore he walks his last round, from Gilgal (neare Iordan) to Bethel, from Bethel to Iericho, from Iericho to Iordan againe. In all these sacred Colleges of Diuines, he meant to leaue the legacie of his loue, counsell, confirmation, blessing. How happy a thing it is, whiles wee are vpon earth to improue our time and gifts to the best behoofe of Gods Church? And after the assurance of our owne blessednesse, to helpe others to the same heauen? But, O God, who can but wonder at the course of thy wise and powerfull administrations? Euen in the midst of the degeneration, and Idolatries of Israel hast thou reserued to thy selfe whole societies of holy Prophets; and out of those sinfull and reuolted Tribes, hast raised the two great miracles of Prophets, Elijah and Elisha, in an immediate succession: Iudah it selfe vnder a religious Iehoshaphat, yeelded not so eminent, and clearely illuminated spirits: The mercy of our prouident God will neither be confined, nor excluded: neither confined to the places of publike profession, nor excluded from the depraued Congregations of his owne people; where hee hath loued, he cannot easily be estranged: Rather, where sinne abounds, his grace aboundeth much more; and raiseth so much stronger helps, as he sees the dangers greater.

Happy was Elisha in the attendance of so gracious a Master, and the more happy that he knows it: Faine would Elijah shake him off at Gilgal; if not there, at Bethel; if not not yet there, at Iericho. A priuate message (on which Elijah must goe alone) is pretended, from the Lord: whether shall we say the Prophet did this for the tryall of the constant affection of his carefull and diligent seruant; or, that it was concealed from Elijah that his departure was reuealed to Elisha: Perhaps hee that knew of his owne reception into heauen, did not know what witnesses would bee allowed to that miraculous act: and now his humble modesty affected a silent and vn-noted passage; Euen Elisha knew something that was hid from his Master, now vpon the threshold of heauen: No meere creature was euer made of the whole counsell of the Highest: Some things haue been disclosed to babes and nouices, that haue been closed vp to the most wise and iudicious: In naturall speculations the greater wit, and deeper iudgement still caries it; but in the reuelations of God, the fauour of his choice swayes all, not the power of our apprehension: The master may both command and intreat his seruants stay, in vaine: Elisha must bee pardoned this holy and zealous disobedience, As the Lord liueth, and as thy soule liueth, I will not leaue thee: His Master may be withdrawne from him, he will not be withdrawne from his Master. He knew that the blessing was at the parting; and if he had diligently attended all his life, and now slacked in the last act, he had lost the reward of his seruice. The euening praises the day, and the chiefe grace of the theater is in the last Scene: Be faithful to the death, and I will giue thee a Crowne of life.

That Elijah should be translated, and what day he should be translated, God would haue no secret: The sonnes of the Prophets at Bethel, at Iericho, both know it, and aske Elisha if he knew it not: Knowest thou that the Lord will take away thy Master from thy head this day? and hee answered, Yea, I know it, hold yee your peace. How familiarly do these Prophets inter-know one another? How kindly do they communicate their visions? Seldome euer was any knowledge giuen to keep, but to impart: The grace of this rich Iewell is lost in concealement. The remouall of an Elijah is so important a businesse, that it is not fit to be done without noise: Many shall haue their share in his losse: he must be missed on the sudden: it was meet therefore that the world should know his rapture should be diuine and glorious. I doe not finde where the day of any naturall death is notified to so many: by how much more wonder there was in this Assumption, by so much more shall it bee fore-reuealed. It is enough for ordinarie occurrents to bee knowne in their euent: supernaturall things haue need of premonition, that mens hearts may bee both prepared for their receit, and confirmed in their certainty. Thrice was Elisha intreated, thrice hath he denied, to stay behinde his now-departing Master; on whom both his eyes and his thoughts are so fixed, that hee cannot giue allowance so much as to the interpellation of a question of his fellow-Prophets: Together therefore are this wonderfull paire come to the last stage of their separation, the bankes of Iordan. Those that were not admitted to bee attendants of the iourney, yet will not bee debarred from being spectators of so maruellous an issue. Fifty men of the sonnes of the Prophets, went and stood to view afarre off; I maruell there were no more: How could any sonne of the Prophets stay within the Colledge walls that day: when hee knew what was meant to Elijah? Perhaps, though they knew that to be the Prophets last day; yet they might thinke his disparition should bee sudden, and insensible; besides, they found how much hee affected secrecie in this intended departure: yet the fifty Prophets of Iericho will make proofe of their eyes, and with much intention assay who shall haue the last sight of Elijah: Miracles are not purposed to silence and obscuritie: God will not worke wonders without witnesses; since hee doth them on purpose to winne glory to his name, his end were frustrate without their notice. Euen so, O Sauiour, when thou hadst raised thy selfe from the dead, thou wouldest bee seene of more then fiue hundred brethren at once; and when thou wouldest raise vp thy glorified bodie from earth into Heauen, thou didst not ascend from some close valley, but from the Mount of Olives; not in the night, nor alone, but in the cleare day, in the view of many eyes; which were so fixed vpon that point of thine heauen, that they could ſcarce bee remoued by the checke of Angels.

Iordan muſt be croſſed be Elijah in his way to heauen: There muſt be a meet parallel betwixt the two great Prophets, that ſhall meet Chriſt vpon Tabor; Moſes and Elias; Both receiued viſions on Horeb, to both God appeared there in fire, and other formes of terrour; both were ſent to Kings, one to Pharaoh, the other to Ahab: Both prepared miraculous Tables, the one of Quailes and Manna in the Deſert, the other of meale and Oyle in Sarepta: Both opened heauen, the one for that nouriſhing dew, the other for thoſe refreſhing ſhowers: Both reuenged Idolatries with the ſword, the one vpon the worſhippers of the golden Calfe, the other vpon the foure hundred Baalites: Both quenched the drought of Iſrael, the one out of the Rocke, the other out of the Cloud: Both diuided the waters, the one of the Red Sea, the other of Iordan: Both of them are forewarned of their departure: Both muſt be fetcht away beyond Iordan; The body of Elijah is tranſlated, the body of Moſes is hid: What Moſes doth by his Rod, Elijah doth by his Mantle; with that hee ſmites the Waters, and they (as fearing the diuine power which wrought with the Prophet) runne away from him, and ſtand on heapes, leauing their dry channell for the paſſage of thoſe awfull feet: It is not long ſince he mulcted them with a generall exſiccation: now hee onely bids them ſtand aſide, and giue way to his laſt walke; that he might with dry feet mount vp into the celeſtiall chariot.

The waters doe not now firſt obey him: they know that Mantle of old; which hath oft giuen lawes to their falling, riſing, ſtanding: they are paſt ouer; and how when Elijah finds himſelfe treading on his laſt earth, hee profers a munificent boone to his faithfull ſeruant, Aske what I ſhall doe for thee before I am taken from thee. I doe not heare him ſay, Aske of me when I am gone; In my glorified condition, I ſhall bee more able to beſtead thee; but, aske before I goe. Wee haue a communion with the Saints departed, not a commerce: when they are inabled to doe more for vs, they are leſſe apt to be ſollicited by vs. It is ſafe ſuing where we are ſure that we are heard. Had not Elijah receiued a peculiar inſtinct for this profet, he had not been thus liberall: It were preſumption to be bountifull on anothers coſt, without leaue of the owner: The mercy of our good God allowes his fauourites not onely to receiue, but to giue: not onely to receiue for themſelues, but to conuey bleſſings to others: What can that man want that is befriended of the faithfull?

Eliſha needs not goe farre to ſeeke for a ſuit; It was in his heart, in his mouth: Let a double portion of thy ſpirit be vpon me. Euery Prophet muſt be a ſonne to Elijah; but Eliſha would be his heire, and craues the happy right of his primogeniture, the double ſhare to his brethren: It was not wealth, nor ſafety, nor eaſe, nor honour, that Eliſha cares for, the world lies open before him, hee may take his choice: the reſt he contemneth: nothing will ſerue him but a large meaſure of his maſters ſpirit: No carnall thought was guilty of this ſacred ambition: Affectation of eminence was too baſe a conceit to fall into that man of God: He ſaw that the times needed ſtrong conuictions, he ſaw that he could not otherwiſe weild the ſucceſſion to ſuch a Maſter, therefore he ſues for a double portion of ſpirit; the ſpirit of propheſie to fore-know, the ſpirit of power to worke: We cannot bee too couetous, too ambitious of ſpirituall gifts, ſuch eſpecially as may inable vs to win moſt aduantage to God in our vocations. Our wiſhes are the true touch-ſtone of our eſtate; ſuch as we wiſh to be, we are: worldly hearts affect earthly things; ſpirituall, diuine: wee cannot better know what we are indeed; then by what we would be.

Elijah acknowledges the difficultie, and promiſes the grant of ſo great a requeſt: ſuſpended yet vpon the condition of Eliſhes eye-ſight. If thou ſee me when I am taken from thee, it ſhall be ſo vnto thee; but if not, it ſhall not be: What are the eyes to the furniture of the ſoule? What power is there in thoſe viſiue beames to draw downe a double portion of Elijahs Spirit? God doth not alwaies look at efficacy & merit in the conditions of our actions, but at the freedome of his own appointments: The eye was

onely to be imployed as the ſeruant of the heart; that the deſires might bee ſo much more intended with the ſight: Vehemence is the way to ſpeed both in earth and in Heauen: If but the eye-lids of Elisha fall, if his thoughts ſlacken, his hopes are daſhed: There muſt bee fixednesſe and vigilance, in thoſe that deſire double graces.

Elijah was going on, and talking, when the Charet of heauen came to fetch him: Surely, had not that conference been needfull and diuine, it had giuen way to meditation: and Elijah had beene taken vp rather from his knees, then from his feet. There can be no better poſture, or ſtate, for the meſſenger of our diſſolution to finde vs in, then in a diligent proſecution of our calling. The buſie attendance of our holy vocation is no leſſe pleaſing to God, then an immediate deuotion: Happy is the ſeruant whom the maſter (when he comes) ſhall finde ſo doing.

Oh the ſingular glory of Elijah! What mortall creature euer had this honour to bee viſibly fetched by the Angels of God to his heauen? Euery ſoule of the elect is attended and caried to bleſſednesſe by thoſe inuiſible meſſengers, but, what fleſh and blood was euer graced with ſuch a conuoy? There are three bodily Inhabitants of Heauen; Henoch, Elijah, our Sauiour Chriſt. The firſt before the law, the ſecond vnder the Law, the third vnder the Goſpell; All three in a ſeuerall forme of tranſlation: Our bleſſed Sauiour raiſed himſelfe to and aboue the heauens, by his own immediate power: he aſcended as the Sonne, they as ſeruants: hee as God, they as creatures: Elijah aſcended by the viſible miniſterie of Angels; Henoch inſenſibly: Wherefore, O God haſt thou done thus, but to giue vs a taſte of what ſhall be? to let vs ſee that heauen was neuer ſhut to the faithfull: to giue vs aſſurance of the future glorification of this mortall and corruptible part?

Euen thus, O Sauiour, when thou ſhalt deſcend from heauen with a ſhout, with the voice of an Archangell, and with the trumpet of God, we that are aliue & remaine, ſhall be caught vp together with the raiſed bodies of thy Saints, into the clouds, to meet thee in the ayre, to dwell with thee in glory.

Many formes haue thoſe celeſtiall ſpirits taken to themſelues in their apparitions to men: but of all other, moſt often hath the Almighty made his meſſengers a flame of fire: neuer more properly then here: How had the ſpirit of GOD kindled the hot fires of zeale in the breſt of Elijah? How had this Prophet thrice commanded fire from heauen to earth? How fitly now at laſt doe theſe Seraphicall fires carie him from earth to heauen?

What doe wee ſee in this rapture of Elijah, but violence and terrour, whirlewinde and fire? two of thoſe fearfull repreſentations which the Prophet had in the Rocke of Horeb: Neuer any man entred into glory with eaſe: Euen the moſt fauourable change hath ſome equiualency to a naturall diſſolution. Although doubtleſſe to Elijah this fire had a lightſomneſſe and reſplendance, not terrour; this whilewinde had ſpeed, not violence: Thus haſt thou, O Sauiour, bidden vs when the Elements ſhall be diſſolued, and the heauens ſhall be flaming about our eares, to lift vp our heads with ioy, becauſe our redemption draweth nigh. Come death, come fire, come whirlewinde, they are worthy to be welcome that ſhall carie vs to immortalitie.

This arreption was ſudden, yet Eliſha ſees both the Charet, and the horſes, and the aſcent; and cries to his now-changed Maſter, betweene heauen and earth, My father, my father, the charet of Iſrael, and the horſemen thereof. Shophat of Abel-meholah, hath yeelded this title to Elijah, the naturall father of Eliſha, to the ſpirituall; neither of them may bee neglected, but, after the yoake of oxen killed at the farewell, wee heare of no more greetings, no more bewaylings of his bodily parent; and now that Elijah is taken from him, hee cries out like a diſtreſſed Orphane, My father, my father; and when hee hath loſt the ſight of him, he rends his choathes in peeces, according to the faſhion of the moſt paſſionate mourners: That Eliſha ſees his maſter halfe-way in heauen, cannot take away the ſorrow of his loſſe: The departure of a faithfaithfull Prophet of God is worthy of our lamentation: Neither is it priuate affection that muſt ſway our griefe, but reſpects to the publike: Eliſha ſayes not onely, My father, but the charet and horſemen of Iſrael. That we haue forgone a father, ſhould not ſo much trouble vs as that Iſrael hath loſt his guard. Certainely, the view of this heauenly charet and horſes that came for Elijah, puts Eliſha in minde of that charet and horſemen, which Elijah was to Iſrael. Theſe were Gods charets, Elijah was theirs: Gods charet and theirs are vpon the ſame wheeles mounted into heauen: No forces are ſo ſtrong as the ſpirituall; the prayers of an Elijah are more powerfull, then all the Armies of fleſh: The firſt thing that this Seer diſcernes, after the ſeparation of his Maſter, is, the nakednesſe of Iſrael in his loſſe. If we muſter Souldiers, and leeſe zealous Prophets, it is but a wofull exchange.

Elijahs Mantle fals from him in the riſing; there was no vſe of that, whither hee was going, there was, whence he was taken: Eliſha iuſtly takes vp this deare monument of his glorified maſter: A good ſupply for his rent garments: This was it which (in preſage of his future right) Elijah inueſted him withall, vpon the firſt ſight, when he was ploughing with the twelue yoke of oxen; now it fals from heauen to his poſſeſſion: I doe not ſee him adore ſo precious a relique, I ſee him take it vp, and caſt it about him: Penſiue and maſterleſſe doth hee now come backe to the bankes of Iordan, whoſe ſtreame hee muſt paſſe in his returne to the Schooles of the Prophets. Ere while hee ſaw what way that riuer gaue to the Mantle of Elijah; hee knew that power was not in the cloth, but in the ſpirit of him that wore it: to try therefore whether hee were no leſſe the heire of that ſpirit, then of that garment, he tooke the mantle of Elijah and ſmote the waters, and ſaid, Where is the Lord God of Elijah? Eliſha doth not expoſtulate, and challenge, but pray; As if hee ſayd, Lord God, it was thy promiſe to mee by my departed maſter, that if I ſhould ſee him in his laſt paſſage, a double portion of his Spirit ſhould be vpon mee: I followed him with my eyes in that fire, and whirlewinde; now therefore, O God, make good thy gracious Word to thy ſeruant; ſhew ſome token vpon mee for good; make this the firſt proofe of the miraculous power wherewith thou ſhalt indue mee: Let Iordan giue the ſame way to me as it gaue to my maſter. Immediately the ſtreame (as acknowledging the ſame Mantle, though in another hand) diuides it ſelfe, and yeelds paſſage to the ſucceſſor of Elijah.

The fifty ſonnes of the Prophets hauing bin farre off witneſſes of theſe admirable euents, doe well ſee that Elijah (though tranſlated in body) hath yet left his Spirit behinde him; they meete Eliſha, and bow themſelues to the ground before him: It was not the outſide of Elijah which they had wont to ſtoope vnto, with ſo much veneration, it was his Spirit; which ſince they now finde in another ſubiect, they entertaine with equall reuerence: No enuy, no emulation raiſeth vp their ſtomacks againſt Elijahs ſeruant, but where they ſee eminent graces, they are willingly proſtrate. Thoſe that are truly gracious, doe no leſſe reioyce in the riches of others gifts, then humbly vnder-value their own. Theſe men were trained vp in the ſchooles of the Prophets, Eliſha at the plough and cart, yet now they ſtand not vpon tearmes of their worth, and his meanneſſe, but meekely fall downe before him whom God will honour: It is not to be regarded who the man is, but whom God would make him. The more vnlikely the meanes is, the more is the glory of the workman: It is the prayſe of an holy ingenuity, to magnifie the graces of God where euer it findes them.

Theſe young Prophets are no leſſe full of zeale, then reuerence, zeale to Elijah, reuerence to Eliſha: They ſee Elijah caried vp in the ayre; they knew this was not the firſt time of his ſupernaturall remouall; Imagining it therefore poſſible that the Spirit of God had caſt him vpon ſome remote mountaine, or valley, they proteſt the labour of their ſeruants to ſeeke him: In ſome things euen profeſſed Seers are blinde: Could they thinke God would ſend ſuch a Charet and horſes for a leſſe voyage then heauen.

Eliſha (knowing his maſter beyond all the ſphere of mortalitie) forbids them: Good will makes them vnmannerly; their importunitie vrges him till he is aſhamed; not his appro-approbation but their vehemence carries at last a condescent: Else hee might perhaps haue seemed enuiously vnwilling to fetch backe so admired a Master: and loth to forgoe that mantle. Some things may be yeelded for the redeeming of our owne vexation, and auoidance of others mis-construction, which out of true iudgement we see no cause to affect.

The messengers tyred with three dayes search, turne backe as wise as they went: some men are best satisfied, when they haue wearied themselues in their owne wayes: nothing will teach them wit, but disappointments. Their painfull errour leades them to a right conceit of Eliahs happier transportation: Those that would find Eliah, let them aspire to the heauenly Paradise: Let them follow the high steps of his sincere faithfulnesse, strong patience, vndaunted courage, feruent zeale, shortly, let them walke in the wayes of his holy and constant obedience: at last God shall send the fiery charet of death to fetch them vp to that heauen of heauens, where they shall triumph in euerlasting ioyes.

IT is good making vse of a Prophet whiles we haue him. Elisha stayed some-while at Iericho; The Citizens resort to him with a common suit: Their structure was not more pleasant, then their waters vnwholesome, and their soile by those corrupt waters: They sue to Elisha for the remedie: Why had they not all this while, made their mone to Eliah? Was it that they were more awed with his greater austerity? Or was it that they met not with so fit an opportunity of his commoration amongst them? It was told them what power Elisha had exercised vpon the waters of Iordan, and now they ply him for theirs: Examples of beneficence easily moue vs to a request, and expectation of fauours.

What ailed the waters of Iericho? Surely, originally they were not ill affected: No men could be so foolish as to build a city, where neither earth nor water were vsefull: Meere prospect could not cary men to the neglect of health, and profit. Hiel the Bethelite would neuer haue reedified it with the danger of a curse, so lately as in the dayes of Ahab, if it had beene of old notorious for so foule an annoyance: Not therefore the ancient malediction of Iosua, not the neighbourhood of that noysome lake of Sodome, was guilty of this disease of the soyle, and waters, but the late sinnes of the inhabitants. He turneth the riuers into a wilderneſſe, and water-ſprings into a dry ground; a fruitfull land into barrenneſſe, for the wickedneſſe of them that dwell therein: How oft haue wee seene the same field both full and famishing? How oft the same waters both safe, and by some irruption or new tincture hurtfull? Howsoeuer naturall causes may concurre, heauen and earth, and ayre, and waters follow the temper of our soules, of our liues, and are therefore indisposed because we are so: Iericho began now to make it selfe capable of a better state, since it was now become a receptacle of Prophets: Elisha is willing to gratifie his hosts; It is reason that any place should fare the better for the presence of Diuines. The medicine is more strange then the disease. Bring mee a new Cruſe, and put ſalt therein. Why a Cruse? why new? why Salt in that new Cruse? How should Salt make water potable? Or, if there were any such vertue in it, what could a Cruse-full doe to a whole current? Or, if that measure were sufficient, what was the age of the Cruse to the force of the Salt? Yet Elisha calls for Salt in a new Cruſe. God (who wrought this by his Prophet) is a free agent; as hee will not binde his power to meanes, ſo will he by his power binde vnlikely meanes to performe his will.

Naturall proprieties haue no place in miraculous works: No leſſe eaſie is it for God to worke by contrary, then ſubordinate powers.

The Prophet doth not caſt the Salt into the channel, but into the ſpring of the waters: If the fountaine bee redreſſed, the ſtreames cannot bee faulty; as contrarily, the purity and ſoundneſſe of the ſtreame auayles nothing to the redreſſe of the fountaine: Reformation muſt begin at the well-head of the abuſe: The order of being is a good guide to the method of amending. Vertue doth not runne backward: Had Eliſha caſt the Salt into the brookes and ditches, the remedy muſt haue ſtriuen againſt the ſtreame, to reach vp to the ſpring: now it is but one labour to cure the fountaine: Our heart is a Well of bitter and venomous water, our actions are the ſtreames: In vaine ſhall we cleanſe our hands, whiles our hearts are euill.

The Cruſe and the Salt muſt bee their owne: The act muſt bee his; the power, Gods: He caſt the Salt into the ſpring, and ſaid, Thus ſaith the Lord, I haue healed theſe waters; there ſhall not bee from thence any more death, or barrennesſe. Farre was it from Eliſha to challenge ought to himſelfe: Before, when hee ſhould diuide the waters of Iordan, he did not ſay, Where is the power of Eliſha, but, Where is the Lord God of Eliah? and now, when he ſhould cure the waters of Ieritho, hee ſaies not, Thus ſayes Eliſha, but thus ſaith the Lord, I haue healed theſe waters. How carefull is the man of God that no part of Gods glory ſhould ſticke to his owne fingers. Ieritho ſhall know to whom they owe the bleſſing, that they may duely returne the thankes. Eliſha profeſſes he can doe no more of himſelfe then that Salt, then that Cruſe; onely God ſhall worke by him, by it: and what euer that Almighty hand vndertakes, cannot faile, yea is already done: neither doth he ſay, I will heale, but I haue healed: Euen ſo, O God, if thou caſt into the fountaine of our hearts, but one Cruſe-full of the Salt of thy Spirit, we are whole, no thought can paſſe betweene the receit and the remedy.

As the generall viſitor of the Schooles of the Prophets, Eliſha paſſeth from Ieritho to that other Colledge at Bethel. Bethel was a place of ſtrange compoſition: there was at once the golden Calfe of Ieroboam, and the Schoole of GOD: True religion and Idolatry found a free harbour within thoſe walls: I doe not maruell that Gods Prophets would plant there; there was the moſt need of their preſence, where they found the ſpring head of corruption: Phyſitians are of moſt vſe where diſeaſes abound: As he was going vp by the way, there came forth little children out of the City, and mocked him, and ſaid to him, Goe vp thou bald-head; Goe vp thou bald-head. Euen the very boyes of Bethel haue learned to ſcoffe at a Prophet; The ſpight of their Idolatrous parents is eaſily propagated; Children are ſuch as their inſtitution; Infancy is led altogether by imitation, it hath neither words nor actions, but infuſed by others; If it haue good or ill language, it is but borrowed, and the ſhame or thanke is due to thoſe that lent it them.

What was it that theſe ill-taught children vpbraided to the Prophet, but a ſleight naturall defect, not worthy the name of a blemiſh, the want of a little haire, at the beſt, a comely excrement, no part of the body; Had there beene deformity in that ſmoothneſſe of the head, which ſome great wits haue honoured with prayſes, a faultleſſe and remedileſſe eye-ſore had beene no fit matter for a taunt: How ſmall occaſions will be taken to diſgrace a Prophet? If they could haue ſayd ought worſe, Eliſha had not heard of this; God had crowned that head with honor, which the Bethelitiſh children loaded with ſcorne. Who would haue thought the rude termes of waggiſh boyes worthy of any thing but neglect? Eliſha looketh at them with ſeuere browes, and (like the heire of him that cald downe fire vpon the two Captaines and their fifties) curſes them in the name of the Lord; Two ſhee-beares out of the Wood haſten to bee his executioners, and teare two and forty of them in peeces. O fearefull example of diuine Iuſtice! This was not the reuenge of an angry Prophet, it was the puniſh-

ment of a righteous Iudge: God and his Seer lookt through these children, at the parents, at all Israel; he would punish the parents mis-nurturing their children (to the contemptuous vsage of a Prophet) with the death of those children, which they had mis-taught: Hee would teach Israel what it was to mis-use a Prophet: And if hee would not endure these contumelies vnreuenged in the mouthes of children, what vengeance was enough for aged persecutors?

Doubtlesse some of the children escaped to tell the newes of their fellowes; what lamentation doe wee thinke there was in the streets of Bethel? how did the distressed mothers wring their hands for this woefull oblation? And now when they came forth to fetch the remnants of their own flesh, what a sad spectacle it was to finde the fields strawed with those mangled carkasses? It is an vnprofitable sorrow that followes a iudgement; Had these Parents beene as carefull to traine vp their children in good discipline, and to correct their disorders, as they are now passionate in bemoaning their losse, this slaughter had neuer beene: In vaine doe wee looke for good of those children, whose education we haue neglected: In vaine do we grieue for those miscariages, which our care might haue preuented.

Elisha knew the successe, yet doth he not balke the City of Bethel: Doe wee not wonder that the furious impatience of those parents, whom the curse of Elisha robbed of their children, did not breake forth to some malicious practice against the Prophet? Would we not thinke the Prophet might misdoubt some hard measure from those exasperated Citizens? There lay this way; hee followes God, without feare of men; as well knowing that either they durst not, or they could not act violence. They knew there were Beares in the wood, and fires in heauen, and if their malice would haue ventured aboue their courage, they could haue no more power ouer Elisha in the streets, then those hungry beasts had in the way. Whither dare not a Prophet goe when God cals him? Hauing visited the schooles of the Prophets, Elisha retires to mount Carmel, and after some holy solitarinesse, returnes to the City of Samaria: He can neuer be a profitable Seer, that is either alwayes, or neuer alone: Carmel shall fit him for Samaria; contemplation for action: That mother City of Israel must needs afford him most worke: Yet is the Throne of Ahaziah succeeded by a brother lesse ill then himselfe, then the parents of both: Ahabs impiety hath not a perfect heire of Iehoram: That son of his hates his Baal, though hee keepes his calues. Euen into the most wicked families it pleaseth God to cast his most powerfull restraints, that all are not equally vicious: It is no newes to see lewd men make scruple of some sins: The world were not to liue in, if all sinnes were affected by all. It is no thanke to Ahab and Iezebel that their sonne is no Baalite: As no good is traduced from parents, so not all euill; there is an Almighty hand that stops the foule current of nature, at his pleasure: No Idolater can say, that his child shall not be a conuerr.

The affinitie betwixt the houses of Israel & Iudah, holds good in succession; Iehoram inherits the friendship, the aid of Iehoshaphat: whose counsell (as is most likely) had cured him of that Baalisme. It was a good warre whereto hee solicits the good King of Iudah. The King of Moab (who had beene an ancient Tributary from the dayes of Dauid) falls now from his homage, and refuses to pay his hundred thousand Lambes, and hundred thousand Rammes with fleeces, to the King of Israel; The backes of Israel can ill misse the wooll of Moab, they will put on iron to recouer their cloth. Iehoshaphat had beene once well chid, well frighted for ioyning with Ahab against Aram; yet doth he not sticke now againe to come into the field with Iehoram against Moab: The case is more fauourable, lesse dangerous; Baal is cast downe: The Images of the false gods are gone, though the false Images of the true God stand still; Beside, this rebellious Moab had ioyned with the Syrians formerly against Iudah, so as Iehoshaphat is interessed in the reuenge.

After resolution of the end, wisely doe these Kings deliberate of the way. It is agreed to passe through Edom; that Kingdome was annexed to the Crowne of Iudah; well might Iehoshaphat make bold with his owne: It was (it seemes) a march farre about about in the measure of the way, but neereſt to their purpoſe: the aſſault would bee thus more eaſie if the paſſage were more tedious: The three Kings of Iſrael, Iudah, Edom, together with their Armies, are vpon foot. They are no ſooner comne into the parching wildes of Edom, then they are ready to die for thirſt; If the channels were farre off, yet the waters were further; the ſcorching beames of the Sun haue dried them vp; and haue left thoſe riuers more fit for walke, then entertainment: What are the greateſt Monarchs of the world, if they want but water to their mouthes? What can their Crownes, and Plumes, and rich Armes auaile them, when they are abridged but of that which is the drinke of beaſts? With drie tongues and lippes, doe they now conferre of their common miſery: Iehoram deplores the calamity, into which they were falne; but Iehoſhaphat askes for a Prophet: Euery man can bewayle a miſery; euery man cannot finde the way out of it: ſtill yet I heare good Iehoſhaphat ſpeake too late: He ſhould haue inquired for a Prophet, ere he had gone forth; ſo had hee auoyded theſe ſtraits: Not to conſult at all with God, is Iehorams ſinne; to conſult late, is Iehoſhaphats; the former is atheous careleſneſſe; the latter, forgetfull ouerſight: The beſt man may ſlacken good duties, the worſt contemnes them.

Not without ſome ſpecialty from God doth Eliſha follow the campe: Elſe, that had beene no Element for a Prophet: Little did the good King of Iudah thinke that God was ſo neere him: Purpoſely, was this holy Seer ſent for the ſuccour of Iehoſhaphat, and his faithfull followers, when they were ſo farre from dreaming of their deliuerie, that they knew not of a danger: It would bee wide with the beſt men, if the eye of diuine prouidence were not open vpon them, when the eye of their care is ſhut towards it: How well did Eliſha in the warres? The ſtrongeſt ſquadron of Iſrael was within that breſt: All their Armour of proofe had not ſo much ſafety and protection, as his Mantle: Though the King of Iſrael would take no notice of the Prophet, yet one of his Courtiers did, Here is Eliſha the ſonne of Shaphat, which powred water on the hands of Elijah; This follower of Iehoram knowes Eliſha by his owne name, by his fathers, by his maſters: The Court of Iſrael was profane, and Idolatrous enough, yet, euen there Gods Prophet had both knowledge, and honour: His very ſeruice to Elijah was enough to win him reuerence: It is better to be an attendant of ſome man, then to be attended by many: That he had powred water on Elijahs hands was inſinuation enough, that hee could powre out water for thoſe three Kings: The three Kings walke downe (by the motion of Iehoſhaphat) to the man of God: It was newes to ſee three Kings going downe to the ſeruant of him, who ranne before the charet of Ahab: Religion and neceſſitie haue both of them much power of humiliation, I know not whether more: Either zeale or need will make a Prophet honored.

How ſharpely dares the man of God to chide his Soueraigne, the King of Iſrael? The libertie of the Prophets was no leſſe ſingular, then their calling: He that would borrow their tongue, muſt ſhew their Commiſſion: As God reproued Kings for their ſakes, ſo did not they ſticke to reproue Kings for his ſake: Thus much freedome they muſt leaue to their ſucceſſors, that wee may not ſpare the vices of them, whoſe perſons we muſt ſpare.

Iuſtly is Iehoram turned off to the Prophets of his father, and the Prophets of his mother: It is but right and equall, that thoſe which wee haue made the comfort, and ſtay of our peace, ſhould be the refuge of our extremity: If our proſperity haue made the world our God, how worthily ſhall our death-bed bee choaked with this exprobration? Neither would the caſe beare an Apology, nor the time an expoſtulation: Iehoram cannot excuſe, he can complaine; he findes that now three Kings, three Kingdomes are at the mercy of one Prophet; it was time for him to ſpeake faire; nothing ſounds from him but lamentations, and intreaties: Nay, for the Lord hath called theſe three Kings together to deliuer them into the hand of Moab: Iehoram hath ſo much grace is to confeſſe the impotency of thoſe, hee had truſted; and the power of that God whom hee had neglected; Euery ſinner cannot ſee, and acknowledge the hand of God in his ſufferings; Already hath the diſtreſſed Prince gained ſomething by this misery; None complaines so much as he; none feeles so much as hee; All the rest suffer for him, and therefore he suffers in them all.

The man of God, who well sees the insufficiency of Iehorams humiliation, layes on yet more load; As the Lord liueth before whom I stand, Surely, were it not that I regard the presence of Iehoshaphat the King of Iudah, I would not looke toward thee, nor see thee; Behold the double Spirit of Elijah; the master was not more bold with the father, then the seruant was with the sonne: Elisha was a subiect; and a Propher; Hee must say that as a Prophet, which hee might not as a subiect; As a Prophet hee would not haue looke at him, whom as a subiect he would haue bowed to: It is one thing when God speaks by him, another, when he speakes of himselfe; That it might well appeare his dislike of sinne stood with his honour of Soueraignty, Iehoshaphat goes away with that respect which Ieboram missed; No lesse doth God and his Propher regard religious sincerity, then they abhorre Idolatry, and profanenesse: What shall not be done for a Iehoshaphat? For his sake shall those two other Princes, and their vast Armies liue, and preuaile; Edom and Israel, whether single or conioyned, had perished by the drought of the desert, by the sword of Moab; One Iehoshaphat gines them both life, and victory: It is in the power of one good man to oblige a world; wee receiue true (though insensible) fauours from the presence of the righteous; Next to being good, it is happy to conuerse with them that are so: if wee bee not bettered by their example, we are blest by their protection.

Who wonders not to heare a Prophet call for a Minstrell, in the middest of that mournfull distresse of Israel and Iudah? Who would not haue expected his charge of reates and prayers, rather then of Musicke? How vnseasonable are songs to an heauy heart? It was not for their eares, it was for his owne bosome, that Elisha called for Musicke: that his spirits after their zealous agitation, might bee sweetly composed, and put into a meet temper, for receiuing the calme visions of God: Perhaps it was some holy Leuite, that followed the Campe of Iehoshaphat, whose minstrelsie was required for so sacred a purpose: None but a quiet breast is capable of diuine Reuelations; Nothing is more powerfull to settle a troubled heart then a melodious harmony; The Spirit of Propheste was not the more inuited, the Prophets Spirit was the better disposed, by pleasing sounds: The same God that will reueale his will to the Propher, suggests this demand, Bring me a Minstrell; How many say thus when they would put God from them? Profane mirth, wanton musicke debauches the soule; and makes no lesse roome for the vncleane spirit, then spirituall melody doth for the Diuine.

No Prophet had euer the Spirit at command; The hand of the Minstrell can doe nothing without the hand of the Lord; Whiles the Musicke sounds in the eare, God speakes to the heart of Elisha, Thus saith the Lord, Make this valley full of ditches; Yee shall not see wind, neither shall ye see raine, yet that valley shall be full of water, &c. To see wind, and raine in the height of that drought, would haue seemed as wonderfull, as pleasing; but, to see abundance of water, without wind or raine, was yet more miraculous; I know not how the sight of the meanes abates our admiration of the effect; Where no causes can be found out, wee are forced to confesse omnipotency; Elijah releeued Israel with water, but it was out of the cloudes; and those cloudes rose from the sea; but whence Elisha shall fetch it, is not more marueilous then secret.

All that euening, all that night must the faith of Israel and Iudah bee exercised with expectation; At the houre of the morning sacrifice no sooner did the blood of that Oblation gush forth, then the streames of waters gushed forth into their new channells, and filled the Countrey with a refreshing moisture: Elijah fetcht downe his fire, at the houre of the euening sacrifice: Elisha fetcht vp his water, at the houre of the morning sacrifice: God giues respect to his owne houres, for the encouragement of our obseruation: If his wisdome hath set vs any peculiar times wee cannot keepe them without a blessing: The deuotions of all true Iewes (all the world ouer) were in that houre combined; How seasonably doth the wisdome of God picke out that inſtant, wherein hee might at once anſwer both Eliſhaes propheſie, and his peoples prayers.

The Prophet hath aſſured the Kings, not of water onely, but of victory; Moab heares of enemies, and is addreſſed to warre; Their owne error ſhall cut their throats; they riſe ſoone enough to beguile themſelues; the beames of the riſing Sunne gliſtering vpon thoſe vaporous. and vnexpected waters, caried in the eyes of ſome Moabites a ſemblance of blood; a few eyes were enough to fill all eares with a falſe noiſe; the deceiued ſenſe miſcaries the imagination; This is blood, the Kings are ſurely ſlaine, and they haue ſmitten one another; now therefore, Moab to the ſpoile: Ciuill broyles giue iuſt aduantage to a common enemy; Therefore muſt the Camps be ſpoiled, becauſe the Kings haue ſmitten each other. Thoſe that ſhall bee deceiued, are giuen ouer to credulity; The Moabites doe not examine either the conceit, or the report; but flie in, confuſedly, vpon the Campe of Iſrael; whom they finde, too late, to haue no enemies but themſelues; As if death would not haue haſtened enough to them, they come to fetch it, they come to challenge it; It ſeizeth vpon them vnauoidably; they are ſmitten, their Cities razed, their Lands marred, their Wells ſtopped, their trees felled; as if God meant to waſte them but once.

No onſets are ſo furious as the laſt aſſaults of the deſperate: The King of Moab now hopeleſſe of recouery, would bee glad to ſhut vp with a pleaſing reuenge, with ſeuen hundred reſolute followers, he ruſhes into the battaile, towards the King of Edom; as if he would bid death welcome, might he but carie with him that deſpighted neighbour; and now, mad with the repulſe, he returnes: and whether as angry with his deſtiny, or as barbarouſly affecting to win his cruell gods with ſo deare a ſacrifice, he offers them with his owne hand the blood of hiseldeſt ſonne in the ſight of Iſrael, and ſends him vp in ſmoake to thoſe helliſh Deities. O prodigious act, whether of rage, or of deuotion! What an hand hath Satan ouer his miſerable vaſſals? What maruell is it to ſee men ſacrifice their ſoules, in an vnfelt oblation, to theſe plauſible tempters, when their owne fleſh and blood hath not beene ſpared? There is no Tyrant to the Prince of darkneſſe.

THE holy Prophets vnder the old Teſtament, did not abhorre the mariage bed; they did not thinke themſelues too pure for an inſtitution of their Maker; The diſtreſſed widow of one of the ſonnes of the Prophets comes to Elijah to bemoane her condition; Her husband is dead, and dead in debt. Death hath no ſooner ſeized on him, then her two ſonnes (the remaining comfort of her life) are to be ſeized on, by his creditors, for bond-men: How thicke did the miſeries of this poore afflicted woman light vpon her; Her husband is loſt, her eſtate clogged with debts, her children ready to be taken for ſlaues: Her husband was a religious, and worthy man; hee paid his debts to Nature, he could not to his Creditors; they are cruell, and rake in the ſcarce-cloſed wound of her ſorrow; paſſing an arreſt, worſe then death, vpon her ſonnes: Widow-hood, pouertie, ſeruitude haue conſpired to make her perfitly miſerable. Vertue and goodneſſe can pay no debts; The holieſt man may be deepe in arearges; and breake the banke: Not through lauiſhneſſe, and riot of expence: (Religion teaches vs to moderate our hands, to ſpend within the proportion of our eſtate) but through either iniquitie of times, or euill caſualties. Ahab and Iezebel were lately in the Throne, who can maruell that a Prophet was in debt? It was well that any good man might haue his breath free, though his eſtate were not: wilfully to ouer-laſh our ability cannot ſtand with wiſedome, and good gouernment; but no prouidence can guard vs from crosses; Holinesse is no more defence against debt, then against death: Grace can keepe vs from vnthriftinesse, not from want. Whither doth the Prophets widow come to bewaile her case, but to Elisha: Euery one would not be sensible of her affliction, or if they would pity, yet could not releeue her; Elisha could doe both; Into his eare doth shee vnload her griefes. It is no small point of wisdome to know where to plant our Lamentation; otherwise, in stead of comfort, we may meet with scorne and insultation.

None can so feelingly compassionate the hard tearmes of a Prophet as an Elisha; He finds that she is not querulously impatient, expressing her sorrow without murmuring, and discontentment; making a louing, and honorable mention of that husband, who had left her distressed; readily therefore doth he incline to her succour: What shall I doe for thee? Tell me what hast thou in thine house? Elisha, when he heares of her debt, askes of her substance; Had her house beene furnished with any valuable commoditie, the Prophet implies the necessity of selling it for satisfaction; Our owne abundance can ill stand with our ingagement to others; It is great iniustice for vs to be full of others purses: It is not our owne which wee owe to another. What is it other then a plausible stealth to feede our riot with the want of the owner? Hee that could multiply her substance, could know it; God and his Prophet loues to heare our necessities out of our owne mouthes (Thine hand-maid hath not any thing in the house saue a pot of oyle.) It is neither newes nor shame for a Prophet to be poore; Griefe and want perhaps hastned his end; both of them are left for the dowry of his carefull widow; Shee had complained, if there had beene any possibility of remedy, at home; bashfulnesse had stopt her mouth thus long, and should haue done yet longer, if the exigence of her childrens seruitude had not opened it; No want is so worthy of releefe, as that which is loathest to come forth. Then he sayd, Goe borrow thee vessels abroad of all thy neighbours, euen emptie vessels, borrow not a few; and when thou art come in, thou shalt shut the doore vpon thee, and vpon thy sons, and shalt powre out into all those vessels, and thou shalt set aside that which is full.

She that owed much, and had nothing, yet must borrow more, that shee may pay all: Pouerty had not so discredited her with her neighbours, that they should doubt to lend her those vessels empty, which they had grudged full: Her want was too well knowne; it could not but seeme strange to the neighbours, to see this poore widow so busily pestring her house with emptie tubs; which they knew shee had nothing to fill; they knew well enough shee had neither field nor vineyard, nor orchard, and therefore must needs maruell at such vnprofitable diligence: If their curiosity would be inquiring after their intentions, shee is commanded secrecy. The doores must be shut vpon her selfe, and her sonnes; whiles the oyle is increasing; No eie shall see the miracle in working, enow shall see it once wrought; This act was no lesse a proofe of her faith, then an improuement of her estate; it was an exercise of her deuotion, as well as of her diligence; it was fit her doores should be shut, whiles her heart and lips were opened in an holy inuocation; Out of one small Iarre was powred out so much oyle, as by miraculous multiplication filled all that empty caske. Scarce had that pot any bottome: At least the bottome that it had, was to bee measured by the brims of all those vessels; this was so deepe, as they were high; Could they haue held more, this pot had not beene emptie: Euen so the bounty of our God giues grace, & glory, according to the capacitie of the receiuer; when he ceaseth to infuse, it is for want of roome in the heart that takes it in; Could we hold more, O God, thou wouldest giue more; If there be any defect, it is in our vessels, not in thy beneficence; How did the heart of this poore widow runne ouer, as with wonder, so, with ioy and thankfulnesse, to see such a riuer of oyle rise out of so small a spring; to see all her vessels swimming full with so beneficiall a liquor; Iustly is shee affected with this sight, shee is not transported from her dutie; I doe not see her run forth into the street, and proclaime her store, nor calling in her neighbours, whether to admire or bargaine; I see her running to the Prophets doore, and gratefully acknowledging the fauour, and humbly depending on his directions, as not daring to dispose of that, which was so wondrously giuen her, without the aduice of him, by whose powerfull meanes shee had receiued it; Her owne reason might haue sufficiently suggested what to doe; shee dares not trust it, but consults with the Oracle of God; If wee would walke surely, wee must doe nothing without a word; Euery action, euery motion must haue a warrant; We can no more erre with this guide, then not erre without him.

The Prophet sets her in a right way; Goe sell the oyle, and pay the debt, and liue, thou, and thy children, on the rest; The first care is of her debts, the next, of her maintenance; It should be grosse iniustice to raise meanes for her selfe, and her charge, ere she haue discharged the arerages of her husband; None of the oyle was hers, till her creditors were satisfied; all was hers that remained; It is but stealth to inioy a borrowed substance; Whiles shee had nothing, it was no sinne to owe; but when once her vessells were full, shee could not haue beene guiltlesse, if shee had not paid, before shee stored. God and his Prophets were bountifull; after the debts paid, they prouide not onely against the thraldome of her charge, but against the want. It is the iust care of a religious heart to defend the widow and children of a Prophet from distresse and penurie.

Behold the true seruant, and successour of Elijah; What hee did to the Sareptan widow, this did to the widow of a Prophet; That increase of oyle was by degrees, this at once; both equally miraculous; this, so much more charitable, as it lesse concerned himselfe.

Hee that giues kindnesses, doth by turnes receiue them; Elisha hath releeued a poore woman, is releeued by a rich. The Shunamite, a religious and wealthy matron, inuites him to her house, and now after the first entertainment, finding his occasions to call him to a frequent passage, that way, moues her husband to set vp, and furnish a lodging for the man of God; It was his holinesse that made her desirous of such a guest; Well might shee hope that such an Inmate would pay a blessing for his house-rent: Oh happy Shunamite that might make her selfe the Hostesse of Elisha! As no lesse dutifull then godly, shee imparts her desire to her husband; whom her sute hath drawne to a partnership in this holy hospitality; Blessed of God is that man, whose bed yeelds him an help to heauen. The good Shunamite desires not to harbour Elisha in one of her wonted lodgings, shee solicites her husband to build him a chamber on the wall apart: shee knew the tumult of a large family vnfit for the quiet meditations of a Prophet: retiredness is most meet for the thoughts of a Seer: Neither would shee bring the Prophet to bare wals, but sets ready for him, a bed, a table, a stoole, and a Candlesticke, and what euer necessary vtensils for his entertainment: The Prophet doth not affect delicacy, shee takes care to prouide for his couenience; Those that are truly pious, and deuout, thinke their houses and their hands cannot bee too open to the messengers of God; and are most glad to exchange their earthly commodities for the others spirituall. Superfluity should not fall within the care of a Prophet, necessitie must: hee that could prouide oyle for the widow, could haue prouided all needfull helpes for himselfe: What roome had there beene for the charity and beneficence of others, if the Prophet should haue alwayes maintained himselfe out of power?

The holy man is so farre sociable as not to neglect the friendly offer of so kinde a benefactor: Gladly doth hee take vp his new lodging: and, as well pleased with so quiet a repose, and carefull attendance, hee sends his seruant Gehezi, with the message of his thankes, with a treaty of retribution: Behold, thou hast beene carefull for vs, with all this care: What is to be done for thee? Wouldst thou bee spoken for to the King, or to the Captaine of the Host? An ingenuous disposition cannot receiue fauours without thoughts of returne: A wise debtor is desirous to retribute in such kinde, as may bee most acceptable to his obligers: without this discretion, wee may offer such requitals, as may seeme goodly to vs, to our friends,

worthlesse: Euery one can chooſe beſt for himſelfe; Eliſha therefore (who had neuer been wanting in ſpirituall duties to ſo hoſpitall a friend) giues the Shunamite the election of her ſuit, for temporall recompence alſo; No man can be a loſer by his fauour to a Prophet. It is a good hearing that an Eliſha is in ſuch grace at the Court, that he can promiſe himſelfe acceſſe to the King, in a friends ſuit: It was not euer thus; the time was, when his maſter heard, Haſt thou found me, O mine enemy: Now the late miracle which Eliſha wrought in gratifying the three Kings, with water, and victorie, hath endeared him to the King of Iſrael; and now, Who but Eliſha? Euen that rough mantle finds reſpect amongſt thoſe ſilkes and tiſſues: As bad as Ieboram was, yet he honored the man of God; He that could not preuaile with an Idolatrous King, in a ſpirituall reformation, yet can cary a ciuill ſuit; Neither doth the Prophet in a ſullen diſcontentment, fly off from the Court, becauſe he found his labours vnprofitable, but ſtill holds good termes with that Prince, whom he cannot reclaime, and will make vſe notwithſtanding of his countenance in matters, whether of courteſie, or iuſtice; Wee may not caſt off our due reſpects euen to faulty authority; but muſt ſtill ſubmit & perſiſt, where wee are repelled: Not to his owne aduancement doth Eliſha deſire to improue the Kings fauour; but to the behoofe, to the releeſe of others; If the Shunamite haue buſineſſe at the Court, ſhe ſhall need no other Solicitor; There cannot be a better office, nor more beſeeming a Prophet, then to ſpeake in the cauſe of the dumbe, to befriend the oppreſſed, to win greatneſſe vnto the protection of innocence.

The good matron needes no ſhelter of the great; I dwell among mine owne people; as if ſhe ſaid; The courteſie is not ſmall in it ſelfe, but not vſefull to mee; I liue here quietly in a contented obſcurity, out of the reach either of the glories, or cares of a Court; free from wrongs, free from enuies: Not ſo high as to prouoke an euill eye, not ſo low as to be trodden on; I haue neither feares, nor ambitions; my neighbours are my friends; my friends are my protectors; and (if I ſhould be ſo vnhappy, as to be the ſubiect of maine iniuries) would not ſticke to be mine Aduocates; This fauour is for thoſe that either affect greatneſſe, or groane vnder oppreſſions; I doe neither, for I liue among my owne people. O Shunamite, thou ſhalt not eſcape enuy! Who can heare of thine happy condition, and not ſay, Why am not I thus? If the world afford any perfect contentment, it is in a middle eſtate, equally diſtant frō penury, from exceſſe; it is in a calme freedome, a ſecure tranquility, a ſweet fruition of our ſelues, of ours; But what hold is there of theſe earthly things? How long is the Shunamite thus bleſſed with peace? ſtay but a while, you ſhall ſee her come on her knees to the King of Iſrael, pitifully complaining that ſhe was ſtripped of houſe, and land: and now Gehezi is faine to doe that good office for her, which was not accepted from his maſter: Thoſe that ſtand faſteſt vpon earth haue but ſlippery footing: no man can ſay that hee ſhall not need friends.

Modeſty ſealed vp the lips of the good Shunamite: ſhee was aſhamed to confeſſe her longing: Gehezi eaſily gueſſed that her barrenneſſe could not but be her affliction, ſhee was childleſſe, her husband old: Eliſha gratifies her with the newes of a ſonne: About this ſeaſon according to the time of life, thou ſhalt embrace a ſonne: How liberall is God, by his Prophet, in giuing beyond her requeſts: not ſeldome doth his bounty ouer-reach our thoughts, and meet vs with thoſe benefits, which we thought too good for vs to aske. Greatneſſe and inexpectation makes the bleſſing ſeeme incredible, Nay, my Lord, thou man of God, doe not lie to thine hand-maid: Wee are neuer ſure enough of what we deſire: We are not more hard to beleeue, then loth to diſtruſt beneficiall euents: She well knew the Prophets holineſſe could not ſtand with wilfull falſhood; perhaps, ſhe might thinke it ſpoken by way of tryall, not of ſerious affirmation; as vnwilling therefore that it ſhould not be, and willing to heare that pleaſing word ſeconded, ſhe ſayes, Doe not lie to thine hand-maid. Promiſes are made good, not by iteration, but by the effect; The Shunamite conceiues, and beares a ſonne, at the ſet ſeaſon: How glad a mother ſhe was, thoſe know beſt, that haue mourned vnder the diſcomfort of a ſad ſterilitie. The childe growes vp, and is now able to finde out his father in the field, amongst his Reapers: His father now grew young againe with the pleasure of his sight; and more ioyed in this spring of his hopes, then in all the crops of his harueſt; But what ſtability is there in theſe earthly delights? The hot beames of the Sunne beat vpon that head which too much care had made tender, and delicate; The child complaines to his father, of his paine; Oh that grace could teach vs, what nature teaches Infants, in all our troubles to bemoane our ſelues to our heauenly father! He ſends him to his mother; vpon her lap, about noone, the child dies; as if he would returne his ſoule into that boſome, from which it was deriued, to his; The good Shunamite hath loſt her ſonne, her faith ſhe had not loſt; Paſſion hath not robbed her of her wiſdome; As not diſtracted with an accident ſo ſudden, ſo ſorrowfull; ſhe layes her dead childe vpon the Prophets bed, ſhee lockes the doore; ſhee hides her griefe, leſt that conſternation might hinder her deſigne; ſhe haſtens to her husband, and (as not daring to bee other then officious in ſo diſtreſſe-full an occaſion) acquaints him with her iourney, (though not with the cauſe) requires of him both attendance, and conueyance; ſhee poſts to mount Carmel; ſhee cannot ſo ſoone finde out the man of God, as hee hath found her; He ſees her afarre off; and like a thankfull gueſt, ſends his ſeruant haſtily to meet her, to inquire of the health of her ſelfe, her husband, her childe; Her errand was not to Gehezi, it was to Eliſha; no meſſenger ſhall interrupt her; no eare ſhall receiue her complaint but the Prophets; Downe ſhee fals paſſionately at his feet, and, forgetting the faſhion of her baſhfull ſtrangeneſſe, layes hold of them, whether in an humble veneration of his perſon, or in a feruent deſire of ſatisfaction. Gehezi, who well knew how vncouth, how vnfit this geſture of ſalutation was, for his maſter, offers to remoue her, and admoniſheth her of her diſtance; The mercifull Prophet eaſily apprehends that no ordinary occaſion could ſo tranſport a graue, and well-gouerned matrone; as therefore pittying her vnknowne paſſion, hee bids, Let her alone, for her ſoule is vexed within her, and the Lord hath hid it from mee, and hath not told mee. If extremitie of griefe haue made her vnmannerly, wiſe and holy Eliſha knowes how to pardon it; Hee dares not adde ſorrow to the afflicted; hee can better beare an vnſeemelineſſe in her greeting, then cruelty in her moleſtation. Great was the familiaritie that the Prophet had with his God; and as friends are wont mutually to impart their counſells to each other, ſo had the Lord done to him; Eliſha was not idle on mount Carmel; What was it that he ſaw not from thence? Not heauen onely, but the world was before him, yet the Shunamites loſſe is concealed from him: neither doth he ſhame to confeſſe it; Oft-times thoſe that know greater matters may yet bee ignorant of the leſſe: It is no diſparagement to any finite creature not to know ſomething. By her mouth will God tell the Prophet, what by viſion hee had not; Then ſhe ſaid, Did I deſire a ſonne of my Lord? Did I not ſay, doe not deceiue me? Deepe ſorrow is ſparing of words; The expoſtulation could not be more ſhort, more quicke, more pithy: Had I begged a ſon, perhaps my importunity might haue been yeelded to, in anger; Too much deſire is iuſtly puniſhed with loſſe. It is no maruell if what we wring from God, proſper not; This fauour to mee was of thine owne motion; Thy ſuit, O Eliſha made me a mother: Couldſt thou intend to torment me with a bleſſing? How much more eaſie had the want of a ſonne beene, then the miſ-cariage? Barrenneſſe then orbation? Was there no other end of my hauing a ſon, then that I might loſe him? O man of God, let mee not complaine of a cruell kindneſſe; thy prayers gaue me a ſon, let thy prayers reſtore him; let not my dutifull reſpects to thee be repaid with an aggrauation of miſery; giue not thine handmaid cauſe to wiſh that I were but ſo vnhapy as thou foundeſt me; Oh wofull fruitfulneſſe, if I muſt now ſay, that I had a ſonne.

I know not whether the mother, or the Prophet were more afflicted, the Prophet for the mothers ſake, or the mother for her owne; Not a word of reply doe wee heare from the mouth of Eliſha, his breath is onely ſpent in the remedy; Hee ſends his ſeruant with all ſpeed, to lay his ſtaffe vpon the face of the childe; charging him to auoyd all the delayes of the way: Had not the Prophet ſuppoſed that ſtaffe of his able to beate away death, why did hee ſend it? and if vpon that ſuppoſition hee ſent it, how was it that it failed of effect? was this act done out of humane conceit; not out of inſtinct from God? Or did the want of the mothers faith hinder the ſucceſſe of that cure? She, not regarding the ſtaffe, or the man, holds faſt to Eliſha; No hopes of his meſſage can looſe her fingers: As the Lord liueth, and as thy ſoule liueth, I will not leaue thee: She imagined that the ſeruant, the ſtaffe might bee ſeuered from Eliſha, ſhe knew that where euer the Prophet was, there was power; It is good relying vpon thoſe helpes that cannot faile vs.

Merit and importunitie haue drawne Eliſha from Carmel to Shunem: Hee findes his lodging taken vp by that pale carkeiſe, hee ſhuts his doore, and fals to his prayers; this ſtaffe of his (what euer became of the other) was long enough (hee knew) to reach vp to Heauen to knocke at thoſe gates, yea to wrench them open; Hee applies his body to thoſe cold and ſenſeleſſe limbs; By the feruour of his ſoule hee reduces that ſoule, by the heat of his body he educeth warmth out of that corps: The child neeſeth ſeuen times; and as if his ſpirit had beene but hid for the time, not departed, it fals to worke afreſh; the eyes looke vp, the lippes and hands moue; The mother is called in to receiue a new life, in her twice-giuen ſonne: ſhe comes in, full of ioy, full of wonder, and bowes her ſelfe to the ground, and fals downe before thoſe feet, which ſhee had ſo boldly layd hold of in Carmel. Oh ſtrong faith of the Shunamite, that could not be diſcouraged with the ſeizure, and continuance of death; raiſing vp her heart ſtill to an expectation of that life, which to the eyes of nature had beene impoſſible, irreuocable; Oh infinite goodneſſe of the Almightie, that would not ſuffer ſuch faith to be fruſtrate, that would rather reuerſe the lawes of nature, in returning a gueſt from heauen, and raiſing a corps from death, then the confidence of a beleeuing heart ſhould be diſappointed.

How true an heire is Eliſha of his maſter, not in his graces onely, but in his actions? Both of them diuided the waters of Iordan, the one as his laſt act, the other as his firſt; Eliahs curſe was the death of the Captaines, and their troupes; Eliſhaes curſe was the death of the children; Eliah rebuked Ahab to his face; Eliſha Iehoram; Eliah ſupplied the drought of Iſrael by raine from heauen; Eliſha ſupplied the drought of the three Kings by waters guſhing out of the earth; Eliah increaſed the oyle of the Sareptan; Eliſha increaſed the oyle of the Prophets widow; Eliah rayled from death the Sareptans ſon; Eliſha the Shunamites: Both of them had one mantle, one ſpirit; both of them climbed vp one Carmel, one heauen.

ELISHA with NAAMAN.

IF the full ſhowers of grace which fell vpon Iſrael and Iudah, yet ſome drops did light vpon their neighbours: If Iſrael bee the worſe for her neereneſſe to Syria, Syria is the better for the vicinity of Iſrael. Amongſt the worſt of Gods enemies ſome are ſingled out for mercy. Naaman was a great Warriour, an honourable Courtier, yet a Leper; no diſeaſe incident to the body is ſo naſty, ſo loathſome, as Leproſie. Greatnes can ſecure no man from the moſt odious and weariſome condition; how little pleaſure did this Syrian Peere take, to be ſtooped to by others, whiles he hated to ſee himſelfe: Euen thoſe that honored him, auoyded him; neither was he other then abhorred of thoſe that flattred him; yea his hand could not moue to his mouth without his owne deteſtation; the baſeſt ſlaue of Syria would not change skins with him, if hee might haue his honour to boot: Thus hath the wiſe God thought meet to ſauce the valour, dignitie, renowne, victories, victories of the famous Generall of the Syrians; Seldome euer was any man ſerued with ſimple fauours; Theſe compoſitions make both our croſſes tolerable, and our bleſſings wholeſome.

The body of Naaman was not more tainted with his lepry, then his ſoule was tainted with Rimmon, and beſides his Idolatry, he was a profeſſed enemy to Iſrael, and ſucceſſfull in his enmity: How farre doth God fetch about his purpoſes? The leproſie, the hoſtility of Naaman ſhall bee the occaſions of his ſaluation; That leproſie ſhall make his ſoule ſound; That hoſtilitie ſhall adopt him a ſonne of God; In ſome proſperous in-rodes, that the Syrians vnder Naamans conduct haue made into the land of Iſrael, a little maid is taken captiue; ſhee ſhall attend on Naamans wife; and ſhall ſuggeſt to her miſtreſſe the miraculous cures of Eliſha. A ſmall chinke may ſerue to let in much light; Her report findes credit in the Court, and begets both a letter from the King and a iourney of his Peere; whiles the Syrians thought of nothing but their booty, they bring happineſſe to the houſe of Naaman; The captiuity of a poore Hebrew girle is a meanes to make the greateſt Lord of Syria, a ſubiect to God; It is good to acquaint our children with the workes of God, with the prayſes of his Prophets. Little doe we know how they may improue this knowledge, and whither they may carie it; perhaps the remoteſt Nations may light their candle at their coale: Euen the weakeſt intimations may not bee neglected: A childe, a ſeruant, a ſtranger may ſay that, which we may bleſſe God to haue heard: How well did it become the mouth of an Iſraelite to extoll a Prophet; to wiſh the cure of her maſter, though an Aramite; to aduiſe that iourney, vnto the man of God, by whom both body and ſoule might be cured: True Religion teacheth vs pious and charitable reſpects to our Gouernours, though Aliens from the Common-wealth of God.

No man that I heare blames the credulity of Naaman; vpon no other ground doth the King of Syria ſend his chiefe Peere, with his letters to the King of Iſrael; from his hands requiring the Cure: The Syrian ſuppoſed, that what euer a ſubiect could doe, a Soueraigne might command; that ſuch a Prophet could neither bee out of the knowledge, nor out of the obedience to his Prince; neuer did he dreame of any exemption, but imagining Iehoram to be no leſſe a King of Prophets, then of people, and Eliſha no leſſe a ſubiect, then a Seer, he writes, Now when this letter is comne to thee, behold, I haue herewith ſent Naaman my ſeruant to thee, that thou mayeſt recouer him of his leproſie. Great is the power of Princes; euery mans hand is theirs, whether for skill, or for ſtrength: Beſides the eminency of their owne gifts, all the ſubordinate excellencies of their ſubiects, are no leſſe at their ſeruice, then if they were inherent in their perſons: Great men are wanting to their owne perfections, if they doe not both know, and exerciſe the graces of their inferiors.

The King of Iſrael cannot read the letter without amazement of heart, without rending of garments, & ſaies; Am I God, to kill & to make aliue, that this man ſends to me, to recouer a man of his leproſie? Wherefore conſider, and ſee, I pray you, how he ſeeketh a quarrell againſt me? If God haue vouchſafed to call Kings, Gods; it well becomes Kings to call themſelues, men; and to confeſſe the diſtance wherein they ſtand to their Maker: Man may kill, man cannot kill and make aliue; yea of himſelfe he can doe neither: with God, a Worme, or a fly may kill a man; without God no Potentate can doe it: much leſſe can any created power both kill, and reuiue: ſince to reſtore life is more then to bereaue it, more then to continue it, more then to giue it: And if leproſie bee a death, what humane power can either inflict, or cure it: It is a trouble to a well-affected heart to receiue impoſſible commands: To require that of an inferiour which is proper to the higheſt, is a derogation from that ſupreame power whoſe property it is: Had Iehoram beene truely religious, the iniury done to his Maker in this motion, (as hee tooke it) had more afflicted him, then the danger of his owne quarrell: Belike, Eliſha was not in the thoughts of the King of Iſrael,: Hee might haue heard that this Prophet had made aliue, one, whom hee killed not: Himſelfe with the two other Kings had beene eye-witneſſes of what Eliſha could doe: yet, now the Calues of Dan and Bethel haue ſo often taken vp his heart, that there is no roome for the memorie of Eliſha; whom hee ſued to in his extremitie, now his proſperity hath forgotten? Carnall hearts (when need driues them) can thinke of GOD, and his Prophet; when their turne is ſerued, can as vtterly neglect them, as if they were not.

Yet cannot good Eliſha repay neglect, and forgetfulneſſe: He liſtens what is done at the Court, and finding the diſtreſſe of his Soueraigne, profers that ſeruice, which ſhould haue beene required; Wherefore haſt thou rent thy cloathes; Let him come now to mee, and hee ſhall know that there is a Prophet in Iſrael. It was no ſmall fright, from which Eliſha deliuers his King: Iehoram was in awe of the Syrians, euer ſince their late victorie, wherein his Father Ahab was ſlaine, Iſrael and Iudah diſcomfited: nothing was more dreadfull to him, then the frownes of theſe ARAMITES: the quarrell which hee ſuſpected to bee hatched by them, is cleared by Eliſha: their Leper ſhall bee healed; both they, and Iſrael ſhall know they haue neglected a GOD, whoſe Prophet can doe wonders: Many eyes, doubtleſſe, are faſtened vpon the iſſue of this meſſage. But what ſtate is this that Eliſha takes vpon him; hee doth not ſay, I will come to him; but, Let him come now to mee: The three Kings came downe once to his Tent, it is no maruell, if hee preuent not the iourney of a Syrian Courtier: It well beſeemes him that will bee a ſuiter for fauour, to bee obſequious: Wee may not ſtand vpon termes of our labour, or dignitie, where wee expect a benefit: Naaman comes richly attended with his troopes of ſeruants and horſes, and waits in his Charet at the doore of a Prophet: I doe not heare ELISHA call him in; for though he were great, yet he was leprous: neither doe I ſee Eliſha come forth to him, and receiue him with ſuch outward courteſies, as might befit for an honourable ſtranger; for in thoſe rich cloathes the Prophet ſaw an Aramite; and perhaps ſome tincture of the late-ſhed blood of Iſrael: Rather, that he might make a perfect triall of the humility of that man, whom he meanes to gratifie, and honour, after ſome ſhort attendance at his doore, hee ſends his ſeruant with a meſſage to that Peere, who could not but thinke the meaneſt of his retinue, a better man then Gehezies Maſter.

WHAT could the Prophet haue done other to the Lacquy of Naamans man? Hee that would bee a meet ſubiect of mercy, muſt bee thoroughly abaſed in his owne conceit: and muſt be willingly pliable to all the conditions of his humiliation: Yet, had the meſſage caried in it either reſpect to the perſon, or probabilitie of effect, it could not haue beene vnwelcome: but now it founded of nothing, but ſullenneſſe, and vnlikelihood: Goe, and waſh in Iordan ſeuen times, and thy fleſh ſhall come againe to thee, and thou ſhalt bee cleane: What wiſe man could take this for any other then a meere ſcorne, and mockery? Goe, waſh? Alas, what can water doe? It can cleanſe from filthineſſe, not from leproſie: And why in Iordan? What differs that from other ſtreames? and why iuſt ſeuen times? What vertue is either in that channell, or in that number? Naaman can no more put off nature then leproſie: In what a chaſe did he fling away from the Prophets doore; and ſayes, Am I comne thus farre to fetch a flout from an Iſraelite? Is this the iſſue both of my iourney, and the Letters of my King? Could this Prophet find no man to play vpon, but Naaman? Had he meant ſeriouſly, why did he thinke himſelfe too good to come forth vnto me? Why did he not touch me with his hand, and bleſſe me with his prayers, and cure me with his bleſſing? Is my miſery fit for his deriſion? If water could doe it, what needed I to come ſo farre for this remedy? Haue I not oft done thus in vaine? Haue we not better ſtreames at home, then any Iſrael can afford? Are not Abana and Pharphar, Riuers of Damaſcus, better then all the waters of Iſrael? Folly and pride ſtriue for place in a naturall heart, and it is hard to ſay whether is more predominant. Folly in meaſuring the power of GODS ordinances by the rule of humane diſcourſe, and ordinary euent: pride, in a ſcornefull valuation of the inſtitutions of GOD, in compariſon of our owne deuices. ABANA and PHARPHAR, two for one: Riuers, not waters; of Damascus, a stately City, and incomparable: Are they not? Who dares deny it? Better, not as good; then the waters, not the riuers; all the waters, Iordan, and all the rest; of Israel, a beggarly region to Damascus. No where shall wee find a truer patterne of the disposition of Nature; how she is altogether led by sense, and reason; how shee fondly iudges of all obiects by the appearance, how shee acquaints her selfe onely with the common rode of Gods proceedings; how she stickes to her owne principles, how she misconstrues the intentions of God, how shee ouer-conceits her owne, how she disdaines the meane conditions of others, how she vpbraids her opposites with the proud comparison of her owne priuiledges.

Nature is neuer but like her selfe: No maruell if carnall mindes despise the foolishnesse of preaching, the simplicity of Sacraments, the homelinesse of ceremonies, the seeming inefficacy of censures: These men looke vpon Iordan with Syrian eyes; One drop of whose water set apart by diuine ordination, hath more vertue, then all the streames of Abana, and Pharphar.

It is a good matter for a man to bee attended with wise and faithfull followers: Many a one hath had better counsell from his heeles, then from his elbowes: Naamans seruants were his best friends: they came to him, and spake to him, and said, My Father, If the Prophet had bid thee doe some great thing, wouldst thou not haue done it? How much rather then, when hee saith to thee, Wash, and bee cleane. These men were seruants, not of the humour, but of the profit of their master: Some seruile spirits would haue cared onely to sooth vp, not to benefit their Gouernour, and would haue encouraged his rage, by their owne: Sir, will you take this at the hand of a base fellow? was euer man thus flouted? Will you let him carie it away thus? Is any harmelesse anger sufficient reuenge for such an insolence? Giue vs leaue at least to pull him out by the eares, and force him to doe that by violence, which hee would not doe out of good manners. Let our fingers teach this saucy Prophet what it is to offer an affront to a Prince of Syria: But these men loued more their masters health, then his passion; and had rather therefore to aduise, then flatter; to draw him to good, then follow him to euill: Since it was a Prophet from whom he receiued this prescription, they perswade him not to despise it; intimating there could be no fault in the sleightnesse of the receit, so long as there was no defect of power in the commander; that the vertue of the cure should be in his obedience, not in the nature of the remedy: They perswade, and preuaile. Next to the Prophet, Naaman may thanke his seruants that he is not a Leper: He goes downe (vpon their intreaty) and dips seuen times in Iordan, his flesh riseth, his Leprosie vanisheth: Not the vniust fury and techinesse of the patient shall crosse the cure: lest whiles God is seuere, the Prophet should be discredited. Long enough might Naaman haue washed there in vaine, if Elisha had not sent him: Many a Leper hath bathed in that streame, and hath come forth no lesse impure: It is the word, the ordinance of the Almighty which puts efficacie into those meanes, which of themselues are both impotent and improbable: What can our Font doe to the washing away of sinne? If Gods institution shall put vertue into our Iordan, it shall scoure off the spirituall leprosies of our hearts; and shall more cure the soule, then clense the face.

How ioyfull is Naaman to see this change of his skinne, this renouation of his flesh, of his life: Neuer did his heart finde such warmth of inward gladnesse, as in this streame.

Vpon the sight of his recouery, he doth not poste home to the Court, or to his family, to call for witnesses, for partners of his ioy; but thankfully returnes to the Prophet, by whose meanes he receiued this mercy: He comes backe with more contentment then he departed with rage: Now will the man of God bee seene of that recouered Syrian, whom he would not see leprous: His presence shall be yeelded to the gratulation which was not yeelded to the suit: Purposely did Elisha forbeare before, that he might share no part of the prayse of this worke with his Maker; that God might be so much more magnified, as the meanes were more weake and despicable.

The miracle hath his due worke. Firſt, doth Naaman acknowledge the GOD that wrought it; then the Prophet, by whom hee wrought it: Behold, now I know there is no God in all the earth, but in Iſrael. Oh happy Syrian, that was at once cured of his leproſie, and his miſ-priſon of God: Naaman was too wiſe, to thinke that either the water had cured him, or the man: hee ſaw a diuine power working in both: ſuch as hee vainely ſought from his Heathen Deities: with the heart therefore he beleeues, with the mouth he confeſſes.

Whiles he is thus thankfull to the author of his cure, hee is not vnmindfull of the inſtrument. Now therefore, I pray thee, take a bleſsing of thy ſeruant. Naaman came richly furniſhed with ten talents of ſiluer, ſixe thouſand peeces of gold, ten changes of raiment: All theſe and many more would the Syrian Peere haue gladly giuen to bee deliuered from ſo noiſome a diſeaſe: no maruell if he importunately offer ſome part of them to the Prophet, now that hee is deliuered; ſome teſtimony of thankfulneſſe did well, where all earthly recompence was too ſhort: The hands of this man were no leſſe full of thankes, then his mouth. Dry and barren profeſſions of our obligations, where is power to requite, are vnfit for noble and ingenuous ſpirits.

Naaman is not more franke in offering his gratuity, then Eliſha vehement in refuſing it, As the Lord liueth, before whom I ſtand, I will receiue none. Not that he thought the Syrian gold impure: Not that hee thought it vnlawfull to take vp a gift, where he hath laid downe a benefit: But the Prophet will remit of Naamans purſe, that hee may win of his ſoule: The man of God would haue his new conuert ſee cauſe to bee more enamoured of true piety; which teacheth her Clients to contemne thoſe worldly riches and glories, which baſe worldlings adore: and would haue him thinke, that theſe miraculous powers are ſo far tranſcending the valuation of all earthly pelfe, that thoſe glittering treaſures are worthy of nothing, but contempt, in reſpect thereof: Hence is it, that he who refuſed not the Shunamites table, and ſtoole, and candleſticke, will not take Naamans preſent: there is much vſe of godly diſcretion in directing vs when to open, when to ſhut our hands.

Hee that will not bee allowed to giue, deſires yet to take: Shall there not, I pray thee, be giuen to thy ſeruant two mules load of earth? For thy ſeruant will henceforth offer neither burnt-offering, nor ſacrifice to other Gods, but vnto the Lord. Iſraelitiſh mold lay open to his cariage, without leaue of Eliſha: but Naaman regards not to take it, vnleſſe it may bee giuen him, and giuen him by the Prophets hand: Well did this Syrian find that the man of God had giuen a ſupernaturall vertue to the water of Iſrael, and therefore ſuppoſed he might giue the like to his earth: Neither would any earth ſerue him but Eliſhaes; elſe the mold of Iſrael had beene more properly craued of the King then the Prophet of Iſrael.

Doubtleſſe it was deuotion that moued this ſuit: The Syrian ſaw GOD had a proprietie in Iſrael, and imagines that he will bee beſt pleaſed with his owne; On the ſudden was Naaman halfe a Proſelyte, ſtill here was a weake knowledge with ſtrong intentions: Hee will ſacrifice to the Lord; but where? in Syria, not in Hieruſalem: Not the mold, but the Altar is that God reſpects; which he hath allowed no where but in his choſen Sion. This honeſt Syrian will be remouing God home to his Country; he ſhould haue reſolued to remoue his home, to God: And though he vowes to offer no ſacrifice to any other God, yet he craues leaue to offer an outward courteſie to Rimmon; though not for the Idols ſake, yet for his maſters: In this thing the Lord pardon thy ſeruant, that when my maſter goeth into the houſe of Rimmon, to worſhip there, and hee leaneth on my hand, and I bow my ſelfe in the houſe of Rimmon, the Lord pardon thy ſeruant in this thing. Naaman goes away reſolute to profeſſe himſelfe an Iſraelite for Religion; all the Syrian Court ſhall know that he ſacrifices vpon Iſraelitiſh earth, to the God of Iſrael: they ſhall heare him proteſt to haue neither heart, not knee for Rimmon: If hee muſt goe into the houſe of that Idoll, it ſhall be as a ſeruant, not as a ſuppliant; his duty to his Maſter ſhall cary him, not this deuotion to his Maſters God: If his maſter goe to worſhip there, not he; neither doth hee ſay,

When

When I bow my ſelfe to the Image of Rimmon; but, in the houſe: hee ſhall bow, to bee leaned vpon, not to adore: yet had not Naaman thought this a fault, hee had not craued a pardon; his heart told him that a perfect conuert ſhould not haue abid the roofe, the ſight, the ayre of Rimmon; that his obſeruance of an earthly maſter ſhould not draw him to the ſemblance of an act of outward obſeruance to the riuall of his maſter in Heauen, that a ſincere deteſtation of Idolatry could not ſtand with ſo vnſeaſonable a courteſie.

Farre therefore is Naaman from being a patterne, ſaue of weakneſſe: ſince hee is yet more then halfe a Syrian; ſince he willingly accuſes himſelfe, and in ſtead of defending, deprecates his offence: It is not for vs to expect a full ſtature in the cradle of conuerſion. As nature, ſo grace riſes by many degrees, to perfection: Leproſie was in Naaman cured at once, not corruption.

The Prophet, as glad to ſee him but thus forward, diſmiſſes him with a ciuill valediction: Had an Iſraelite made this ſuit, he had been anſwered, with a checke: thus much from a Syrian was worthy a kind farewell; They are parted.

Gehezi cannot thus take his leaue; his heart is maled vp in the rich cheſts of Naaman, and now hee goes to fetch it: The Prophet and his man had not looked with the ſame eyes vpon the Syrian treaſure; the one with the eye of contempt, the other with the eye of admiration, and couetous deſire. The diſpoſition of the maſter may not be meaſured by the minde, by the act of his ſeruant: Holy Eliſha may be attended by a falſe Gehezi: No examples, no counſels will preuaile with ſome hearts: who would not haue thought that the follower of Eliſha could bee no other then a Saint? yet, after the view of all thoſe miracles, this man is a mirrour of worldlineſſe. Hee thinkes his maſter either too ſimple, or too kinde, to refuſe ſo iuſt a preſent from a Syrian; himſelfe will be more wiſe, more frugall: Deſire haſtens his pace, he doth not goe, but runne after his booty: Naaman ſees him, and, as true nobleneſſe is euer courteous, alights from his Charet, to meet him: The great Lord of Syria comes forth of his Coach to ſalute a Prophets ſeruant: not fearing that hee can humble himſelfe ouermuch to one of Eliſha's family: Hee greets Gehezi with the ſame word wherewith hee lately was dimitted by his maſter: Is it peace? So ſudden a meſſenger might ſeeme to argue ſome change. Hee ſoone receiues from the breathleſſe bearer newes of his maſters health, and requeſt: All is well, My Maſter, hath ſent mee, ſaying, Behold, euen now there be come to mee from mount Ephraim, two young men of the ſonnes of the Prophets: Giue mee, I pray thee, a talent of ſiluer, and two changes of garments. Had Gehezi craued a reward in his owne name, calling for the fee of the Prophets ſeruant, as the gaine, ſo the offence had beene the leſſe; now, reaching at a greater ſumme, he belies his Maſter, robs Naaman, burdens his owne ſoule. What a ſound tale hath the craft of Gehezi deuiſed? Of the number, the place, the quality, the age of his Maſters gueſts? That hee might ſet a faire colour vpon that pretended requeſt: ſo proportioning the value of his demand, as might both inrich himſelfe, and yet well ſtand with the moderation of his maſter. Loue of money can neuer keepe good quarter with honeſtie, with innocence: Couetouſneſſe neuer lodged in the heart alone; If it finde not, it will breed wickednеſſe. What a mint of fraud there is in a worldly breſt? How readily can it coyne ſubtle falſhood for an aduantage?

How thankfully liberall was this noble Syrian; Gehezi could not be more eager in taking, then he was in giuing; As glad of ſo happy an occaſion of leauing any peece of his treaſure behinde him, hee forces two Talents vpon the ſeruant of Eliſha: and binds them in two bags, and layes them vpon two of his owne ſeruants; his owne trayne ſhall yeeld Porters to Gehezi: Cheerefulneſſe is the iuſt prayſe of our beneficence; Bountifull minds are as zealous in ouer-paying good turnes, as the niggardly are in ſcanting retributions.

What proiects doe we thinke Gehezi had all the way? How did hee pleaſe himſelfe with the waking dreames of purchaſes, of traffique, of riollity? and now, when they

they are comne to the tower, he gladly disburdens, and dismisses his two Syrian attendants, and hides their load, and wipes his mouth, and stands boldly before his Master, whom he had so fouly abused: Oh Gehezi! where didst thou think God was this while? Couldest thou thus long powre water vpon the hands of Elisha, and be eyther ignorant, or regardlesse of that vndeceiueable eye of prouidence, which was euer fixed vpon thy hands, thy tongue, thy heart? Couldest thou thus hope to blinde the eyes of a Seer? Heare then thy inditement, thy sentence, from him, whom thou thoughtest to haue mocked with thy concealment; Whence commest thou Gehezi? Thy seruant went no whither. He that had begunne a lye to Naaman, ends it to his Master: who so lets his tongue once loose to a wilfull vntruth, soone growes impudent in multiplying falsehoods. Of what metall is the forehead of that man, that dares lye to a Prophet? What is this, but to out-face the senses? Went not my heart with thee, when the man turned backe from his chariot to meet thee? Didst thou not (till now) know, O Gehezi, that Prophets haue spirituall eyes, which are not confined to bodily prospects? Didst thou not know, that their hearts were often, where they were not? Didst thou not know that thy secretest wayes were ouer-looked by inuisible witnesses? Heare then and be conuinced: Hither thou wentest, thus thou saidst, thus thou didst, thus thou spedst: What answer was now here but confusion? Miserable Gehezi, how didst thou stand pale and trembling before the dreadfull tribunall of thy seuere Master, looking for the wofull sentence of some grieuous iudgement for so haynous an offence? Is this a time to receiue money, and to receiue garments, and (which thou hadst already purchased in thy conceit) Oline-yards, and Vineyards, and Sheepe, and Oxen, and Men-seruants, and Maid-seruants? Did my mouth refuse, that thy hands might take? Was I so careful to win honour to my God, and credit to my profession, by denying these Syrian presents, that thou mightst dash both in receiuing them? Was there no way to inrich thy selfe, but by belying thy Master; by disparaging this holy function in the eyes of a new conuert? Since thou wouldest needs therefore take part of Naamans treasure, take part with him in his Leprosie, The leprosie of Naaman, shall cleaue vnto thee, and vnto thy seed for euer. Oh heauy talents of Gehezi! Oh the horror of this one vnchangeable suit, which shall neuer be but loathsomely white, noysomely vncleane! How much better had beene a light purse, and an homely coat, with a sound body, a cleare soule? Too late doth that wretched man now finde, that he hath loaded himselfe with a curse, that he hath clad himselfe with shame: His sinne shall bee read euer in his face, in his seed; All passengers, all posterities shall now say, Behold the characters of Gehezies couetousnesse, fraud, sacriledge! The act ouer-takes the word, Hee went out of his presence a Leper as white as snow. It is a wofull exchange that Gehezi hath made with Naaman; Naaman came a Leper, returned a Disciple; Gehezi came a Disciple, returned a Leper: Naaman left behinde both his disease and money; Gehezi takes vp both his money and his disease. Now shall Gehezi neuer looke vpon himselfe, but he shall thinke of Naaman whose skinne is transferred vpon him with those Talents; and shall weare out the rest of his dayes in shame, and paine, and sorrow: His teares may wash off the guilt of his sinne, shall not (like another Iordan) wash off his Leprosie, that shall euer remaine as an hereditary monument of diuine seuerity. This sonne of the Prophets shall more loud and liuely preach the Iustice of God by his face, then others by their tongue. Happy was it for him, if whiles his skinne was snow-white with Leprosie, his humbled soule were washed white as snow with the water of true repentance.

THere was no losse of Gehezi; when he was gone, the Prophets increased: an ill man in the Church, is but like some shrubbie tree in a Garden, whose shade keeps better plants from growing: A blanke doth better in a roome, than an ill filling: The view of Gods iust iudgements doth rather draw clients vnto him, then alienate them. The Kings of Israel had succeeded in Idolatry, and hate of sincere Religion; Yet the Prophets multiply: Persecution enlargeth the bounds of the Church. These very tempestuous showers bring vp flowers and herbs in abundance. There would haue beene neyther so many, nor so zealous Prophets in the languishments of peace: Besides, What maruell is it, if the immediate succession of two such noble Leaders, as Elijah and Elisha, established, and augmented Religion, and bred multitudes of Prophets. Rather who cannot maruell, vpon the knowledge of all their miracles, that all Israel did not prophesie? It is a good hearing, that the Prophets want elbow-roome; out of their store, not out of the enuy of neighbours, or incompetency of prouision: Where vision failes, the people perish; they are blessed, where it abounds.

When they found themselues straitned, they did not presume to carue for themselues, but they craued the leaue, the counsell of Elisha: Let vs goe, we pray thee, vnto Iordan, and take thence euery man a beame, and let vs make vs a place where wee may dwell. And he said, Goe ye. It well becomes the Sonnes of the Prophets, to enterprise nothing without the allowance of their Superiours. Here was a building towards, none of the curiousest: I doe not see them making meanes for the procurement of some cunning artificers, nor for the conquisition of some costly marbles, and Cedars, but euery man shall hew, and square, and frame his owne beame. No nice termes were stood vpon by these sonnes of the Prophets. Their thoughts were fixed vpon the perfection of a spirituall building: As an homely roofe may serue them, so their owne hands shall raise it. The fingers of these contemplatiue men did not scorne the Axe, and Mallet, and Chesell: It was better being there then in Obadiahs Caue; and they that dwell now contentedly vnder rude stickes, will not refuse the squared stones, and polished contignations of better times. They shall be ill teachers of others, that haue not learned both to want, and to abound.

The Master of this sacred Societie, Elisha, is not stately, not austere: he giues not onely passage to this motion of his Collegiates, but assistance. It was fit the sonnes of the Prophets should haue conuenience of dwelling, though not pompe, not costlinesse. They fall to their worke; No man goes slackly about the building of his owne house: One of them more regarding the tree then the toole, lets fall the head of the Axe into the riuer: Poore men are sensible of small losses: Hee makes his mone to Elisha, Alas, Master, for it was borrowed; Had the Axe beene his owne, the trouble had beene the lesse to forgoe it; therfore doth the miscariage afflict him, because it was of a borrowed Axe. Honest mindes are more carefull of what they haue by loane then by proprietie: In lending there is a trust, which a good heart cannot disappoint without vexation. Alas poore nouices of the Prophet, they would bee building, and were not worth their axes: if they would giue their labour, they must borrow their instruments.

Their wealth was spirituall: Outward pouertie may well stand with inward riches: He is rich, not that hath the world, but that can contemne it.

Elisha loues and cherishes this iust simplicitie; rather will hee worke a miracle, then a borrowed axe shall not be restored: It might easily be imagined, hee that could raise vp the iron out of the bottome of the water, could tell where it fell in; yet euen that powerfull hand calls for direction: In this one point, the sonne of the Prophet

Prophet knowes more then Elisha: The notice of particularities is neyther fit for a creature, nor communicable: a meane man may best know his owne case: This Noüice better knowes where his axe fell, then his master: his master knowes better how to get it out, then he. There is no reason to be giuen of supernaturall actions. The Prophet borrowes an axe to cut an helue for the lost axe: Why did he not make vse of that handle which had cast the head? Did hee hold it vnworthy of respect, for that it had abandoned the metall wherewith it was trusted? Or did he make choice of a new stick, that the miracle might be the more cleare and vnquestionable? Diuine power goes a contrary way to Art: Wee first would haue procured the head of the axe, and then would haue fitted it with an helue: Elisha fits the head to the helue, and causeth the wood, which was light and knew not how to sinke, to fetch vp the iron, which was heauy, and naturally vncapable of supernatation. Whether the metall were stripped of the naturall waight, by the same power which gaue it being; or whether retaining the wonted poise, it was raised vp by some spirituall operation, I enquire not: Onely I see it swimme like corke vpon the streame of Iordan, and moue towards the hand that lost it. What creature is not willing to put off the properties of nature at the command of the God of nature? O God, how easie is it for thee, when this hard and heauy heart of mine is sunke downe into the mud of the world, to fetch it vp againe by thy mighty Word, and cause it to float vpon the streames of life, and to see the face of heauen againe?

Yet still doe the sides of Israel complaine of the thornes of Aram; The children of Ahab rue their fathers vniust mercy: From an enemie, it is no making question whether of strength or wyle: The King of Syria consults with his Seruants, where to encampe for his greatest aduantage; their opinion is not more required, then their secresie. Elisha is a thousand scouts: he sends word to the King of Israel of the proiects, of the remoues of his enemie. More than once had Iehoram saued both his life, and his Hoast, by these close admonitions. It is well that in something yet a Prophet may bee obeyed. What strange State-seruice was this which Elisha did, besides the spirituall? The King, the people of Israel owe themselues, and their safety to a despised Prophet. The man of God knew, and felt them Idolaters, yet how carefull and vigilant is he for their rescue. If they were bad, yet they were his owne: If they were bad, yet not all; God had his number amongst their worst: If they were bad, yet the Syrians were worse. The Israelites mis-worshipped the true God, the Syrians worshipped a false. That (if it were possible) he might winne them, hee will preserue them; and if they will needs be wanting to God, yet Elisha will not be wanting to them; their impietie shall not make him vndutifull.

There cannot bee a iuster cause of displeasure, then the disclosing of those secret counsels, which are laid vp in our eare, in our brest. The King of Syria, not without reason, stomackes this supposed treachery. What Prince can beare, that an aduerse power should haue a party, a Pensionary in his owne Court? How famous was Elisha euen in forraine Regions? Besides Naaman, others of the Syrian Nobilitie take notice of the miraculous faculties of this Prophet of Israel; He is accused for this secret intelligence: No words can escape him, though spoken in the bed-chamber. O Syrian, whosoeuer thou wert, thou saidst not enough: If thy master doe but whisper in thine eare, if he smother his words within his owne lips; if he doe but speake within his owne bosome, Elisha knowes it from an infallible information. What counsell is it, O God, that can be hid from thee? What counsell is it that thou wilt hide from thy Seer? Euen this very word that accuseth the Prophet, is knowne to the accused. He heares this tale whiles it is in telling; he heares the plot for his apprehension. How ill doe the proiects of wicked men hang together? They that confesse Elisha knowes their secretest words, doe yet conferre to take him. There are spies vpon him, whose espials haue moued their anger, and admiration. He is descryed to be in Dothan, a small towne of Manasses; A whole Armie is sent thither to surprise him: The opportunitie of the night is chosen for the exploit. There shall be no want eyther in the number, or valour, or secrecie of theſe conſpired troupes: and now when they haue fully girt in the village with a ſtrong and exquiſite ſiege, they make themſelues ſure of Eliſha, and pleaſe themſelues to think how they haue incaged the miſerable Prophet, how they ſhould take him at vnawares in his bed, in the midſt of a ſecure dreame; how they ſhould carry him fettered to their King; what thankes they ſhould haue for ſo welcome a priſoner.

The ſucceſſor of Gehezi riſeth early in the morning, and ſees all the Citie encompaſſed with a fearfull hoaſt, of foot, horſe, charets. His eye could meet with nothing but woods of pikes, and walls of harneſſe, and luſtre of metalls; and now he runs in affrighted to his Maſter: Alas, my maſter, what ſhall we doe? He had day enough to ſee they were enemies that enuironed them, to ſee himſelfe helpleſſe, and deſperate; and hath onely ſo much life left in him, as to lament himſelfe to the partner of his miſery. Hee cannot flee from his new Maſter, if he would; he runnes to him with a woſull clamour Alas, my Maſter, what ſhall we doe?

Oh the vndaunted courage of faith! Eliſha ſees all this, and ſits in his chamber ſo ſecure, as if theſe had onely beene the guard of Iſrael, for his ſafe protection. It is an hard precept that he giues his ſeruant, Feare not: As well might he haue bid him, not to ſee, when he ſaw, as not to feare, when he ſaw ſo dreadfull a ſpectacle: The operations of the ſenſes are no leſſe certaine, then thoſe of the affections, where the obiects are no leſſe proper: But the taske is eaſie if the next word may finde beleefe, [For there are moe with vs, then with them.] Multitude, and other outward probabilities doe both lead the confidence of naturall hearts, and fixe it. It is for none but a Dauid to ſay, I will not be afraid of ten thouſands of people that haue ſet themſelues againſt me round about. Fleſh and blood riſeth, and falleth, according to the proportion of the ſtrength, or weakneſſe of apparent meanes.

Eliſhaes man lookt about him, yet his Maſter prayes, Lord open his eyes that they may ſee. Naturally wee ſee not, whiles we doe ſee: Euery thing is ſo ſeene, as it is. Bodily eyes diſcerne bodily obiects, only ſpirituall can ſee the things of God. Some men want both eyes and light. Eliſhaes ſeruant had eyes, wanted illumination: No ſooner were his eyes open, then he ſaw the mountaine full of horſes, and charets of fire round about Eliſha. They were there before, (neyther doth Eliſha pray that thoſe troups may be gathered, but that they may be ſeene) not till now were they deſcryed. Inviſible armies guard the ſeruants of God, whiles they ſeeme moſt forſaken of earthly aide, moſt expoſed to certaine dangers: If the eyes of our faith be as open as thoſe of our ſenſe, to ſee Angels as well as Syrians, wee cannot be appalled with the moſt vnequall termes of hoſtilitie. Thoſe bleſſed Spirits are ready eyther to reſcue our bodies, or to carry vp our ſoules to bleſſedneſſe, whether euer ſhall be enioyned by their Maker: there is iuſt comfort in both, in eyther.

Both thoſe Charets that came to fetch Eliah, and thoſe that came to defend Eliſha, were fiery: God is not leſſe louely to his owne, in the midſt of his iudgements, then he is terrible to his enemies, in the demonſtration of his mercies. Thus guarded, it is no maruell if Eliſha dare walke forth into the midſt of the Syrians. Not one of thoſe heauenly Preſidiaries ſtrucke a ſtroke for the Prophet; neither doth hee require their blowes, onely he turnes his prayer to his God, and ſayes, Smite this people, I pray thee, with blindneſſe. With no other then deadly intentions did theſe Aramites come downe to Eliſha, yet doth not he ſay, Smite them with the Sword, but, Smite them with blindneſſe: All the euill he wiſheth to them, is their repentance; There was no way to ſee their errour, but by blindneſſe. He that prayed for the opening of his Seruants eyes, to ſee his ſafe-guard, prayes for the blinding of the eyes of his enemies, that they might not ſee to doe hurt.

As the eyes of Eliſhaes Seruant were ſo ſhut, that they ſaw not the Angels, when they ſaw the Syrians: ſo the eyes of the Syrians ſhall be likewiſe ſhut, that when they ſee the man, they ſhall not ſee the Prophet. To all other obiects their eyes are cleare, onely to Eliſha they ſhall be blinde, blinde not through darkneſſe, but through miſknowledge: They ſhall ſee, and miſtake both the perſon and the place. He that made the ſenſes, can either hold, or delude them at pleaſure: how eaſily can hee offer to the ſight other repreſentations, then thoſe which ariſe from the viſible matter, and make the heart to beleeue them?

Iuſtly now might Eliſha ſay, This is not the way, neither is this the Citie, wherein Eliſha ſhall bee deſcried. He was in Dothan, but not as Eliſha; hee ſhall not be found but in Samaria; neither can they haue any guide to him, but himſelfe. No ſooner are they come into the ſtreets of Samaria, then their eyes haue leaue to know both the place and the Prophet. The firſt ſight they haue of themſelues, is in the trap of Iſrael, in the iawes of death: thoſe ſtately Palaces, which they now wonder at vnwillingly, carie no reſemblance to them, but of their graues: Euery Iſraelite ſeemes an executioner; euery houſe a layle; euery beame a Gibbet; and now, they looke vpon Eliſha tranſformed from their guide, to their common murderer, with horror and paleneſſe: It is moſt iuſt with God to intangle the plotters of wickedneſſe, in their owne ſnare.

How glad is a mortall enemy to ſnatch at all aduantages of reuenge? Neuer did the King of Iſrael ſee a more pleaſing ſight, then ſo many Syrian throats at his mercy: and, as loth to loſe ſo faire a day, (as if his fingers itched to bee dip't in blood) hee ſaies, My father, ſhall I ſmite, ſhall I ſmite them? The repetition argued deſire, the compellation, reuerence: Not without allowance of a Prophet, would the King of Iſrael lay his hand vpon an enemy, ſo miraculouſly trained home: His heart was ſtill foule with idolatry, yet would he not taint his hand with forbidden blood: Hypocriſie will bee ſtill ſcrupulous in ſomething, and in ſome awfull reſtraints is a perfect counterfeit of conſcience.

The charitable Prophet ſoone giues an angry prohibition of ſlaughter; Thou ſhalt not ſmite them: Wouldeſt thou ſmite thoſe whom thou haſt taken captiue, with thy ſword, and with thy bow? As if he ſaid, Theſe are Gods captiues, not thine; and if they were thine owne, their blood could not bee ſhed without cruelty: though in the hot chaſes ſo warre, executions may be iuſtifiable; yet in the cooleneſſe of deliberation, it can bee no other then inhumane, to take thoſe liues which haue beene yeelded to mercy: But here, thy bow and thy ſword are guiltleſſe of the ſucceſſe; onely a ſtrange prouidence of the Almighty hath caſt them into thine hands, whom neither thy force, nor thy fraud could haue compaſſed: If it bee victory thou aimeſt at, ouercome them with kindneſſe: Set bread and water before them, that they may eate and drinke: Oh noble reuenge of Eliſha, to feaſt his perſecutors! To prouide a Table for thoſe, who had prouided a graue for him: Theſe Syrians came to Dothan full of bloody purpoſes to Eliſha: he ſends them from Samaria full of good cheare, and iollity. Thus, thus ſhould a Prophet puniſh his purſuers: No vengeance but this is heroicall, and fit for Chriſtian imitation: If thine enemy hunger, giue him bread to eate; if hee thirſt, giue him water to drinke: For thou ſhalt heape coales of fire vpon his head; and the Lord ſhall reward thee: Be not ouercome with euill, but ouercome euill with good.

The King of Iſrael hath done that by his feaſt, which hee could not haue done by his ſword: The bands of Syria will no more come by way of ambuſh, or incurſion, into the bounds of Iſrael. Neuer did a charitable act goe away without the retribution of a bleſſing: In doing ſome good to our enemies, wee doe moſt good to our ſelues; God cannot but loue in vs this imitation of his mercy, who bids his Sunne ſhine, and his raine fall where he is moſt prouoked; and that loue is neuer fruitleſſe.

NOt many good turnes are written in Marble: ſoone haue theſe Syrians forgotten the merciſull beneficence of Iſrael: After the forbearance of ſome hoſtile inroade, all the forces of Syria are muſtered againſt Iehoram: That very Samaria which had releeued the diſtreſſed Aramites, is by the Aramites beſieged, and is affamiſhed by thoſe, whom it had fed. The famine within the walles was more terrible then the ſword without. Their worſt enemy was ſhut within; and could not be diſlodged of their owne bowels: Whither hath the Idolatry of Iſrael brought them? Before, they had beene ſcourged with warre, with drought, with dearth, as with ſingle cords; they remaine incorrigible, and now God twiſts two of theſe bloody laſhes together, and galls them euen to death: there needs no other executioners then their owne mawes. Thoſe things which in their nature were not edible, (at leaſt, to an Iſraelite) were now both deare, and dainty. The Aſſe was (beſides the vntoothſomneſſe) an impure creature: that which the law of Ceremonies had made vncleane, the law of neceſſity had made delicate and precious: the bones of ſo carrion an head could not bee picked for leſſe then foure hundred peeces of ſiluer: neyther was this ſcarcitie of victualls only, but of all other neceſſaries for humane vſe; that the belly might not complaine alone, the whole man was equally pinched.

The King of Iſrael is neyther exempted from the iudgement, nor yet yeelds vnder it: Hee walkes vpon the walls of his Samaria, to ouer-ſee the Watches ſet, the Engines ready, the Guards changed, together with the poſture of the enemy; when a woman cryes to him out of the Citie, Help my Lord, O King: Next to God what refuge haue wee in all our neceſſities, but his Anointed? Earthly Souëraignty can aide vs in the caſe of the iniuſtice of men; but what can it doe againſt the iudgements of God? If the Lord doe not help thee, whence ſhall I help thee? out of the barne floore, or out of the winepreſſe? Euen the greateſt powers muſt ſtoope to afflictions in themſelues, how ſhould they be able to preuent them in others? To ſue for aide where is an vtter impotence of redreſſe, is but to vpbraid the weakneſſe, and aggraiuate the miſery of thoſe whom wee implore. Iehoram miſtakes the ſuit: The ſuppliant calls to him for a wofull peece of iuſtice: Two mothers haue agreed to eate their ſonnes; the one hath yeelded hers to be boyled and eaten; the other, after ſhee hath taken her part of ſo prodigious a banquet, with-drawes her childe, and hides him from the knife; Hunger and enuy make the Plaintiffe importunate; and now ſhee craues the benefit of Royall Iuſtice. Shee that made the firſt motion, with-holds her part of the bargaine, and flyes from that promiſe, whoſe truſt had made this mother childleſſe. Oh the direfull effects of famine, that turnes off all reſpects of nature, and giues no place to horror, cauſing the tender mother to lay her hands, yea, her teeth vpon the fruit of her owne body; and to receiue that into her ſtomacke, which ſhee hath brought forth of her wombe: What ſhould Iehoram doe? The match was monſtrous: The challenge was iuſt, yet vnnaturall: This complainant had purchaſed one halfe of the liuing childe, by the one halfe of hers, dead. The mother of the ſuruiuing Infant is preſſed by couenant, by hunger; reſtrained by nature. To force a mother to deliuer vp her childe to voluntary ſlaughter, had beene cruell: To force a debtor to pay a confeſſed arerage, ſeemed but equall: If the remaining childe be not dreſſed for food, this mother of the deuoured childe is both robbed, and affamiſhed: If he be, innocent blood is ſhed by authoritie. It is no maruell if the queſtion aſtoniſhed the Iudge; not ſo much for the difficultie of the demand, as the horror of the occaſion: to what lamentable diſtreſſe did Iehoram find his people driuen?

Not

Not without cauſe did the King of Iſrael rend his garments, and ſhew his ſackcloth; well might he ſee his people branded with that ancient curſe which God had denounced againſt the rebellious: The Lord ſhall bring a Nation againſt thee of a fierce countenance, which ſhall not regard the perſon of the old, nor ſhew fauour to the yong; And he ſhall beſiege thee in all thy gates; And thou ſhalt eate the fruit of thine owne body, the fleſh of thy ſonnes, and of thy daughters: The tender and delicate woman, her eyes ſhall be euill towards her young one that commeth out from betweene her feet, and toward the children which ſhee ſhall beare, for ſhe ſhall eate them for want of all things ſecretly in the ſiege and ſtraitneſſe. He mournes for the plague, he mournes not for the cauſe of this plague, his ſinne, and theirs: I finde his ſorrow, I find not his repentance. The worſt man may grieue for his ſmart, onely the good heart grieues for his offence: In ſtead of being penitent, Iehoram is furious, and turnes his rage from his ſinnes, againſt the Prophet: God doe ſo to me, and more alſo, if the head of Eliſha, the ſon of Shaphat, ſhall ſtand on him this day: Alas, what hath the righteous done? Perhaps Eliſha (that wee may imagine ſome colours of this diſpleaſure) fore-threatned this iudgement; but they deſerued it; perhaps hee might haue auerted it by his prayers; their vnrepentance diſabled him: Perhaps he perſwaded Iehoram, to hold out the ſiege; though through much hardneſſe, he fore-ſaw the deliuerance. In all this how hath Eliſha forfeited his head? All Iſrael did not afford an head ſo guiltleſſe, as this that was deſtined to ſlaughter. This is the faſhion of the world; the lewd blames the innocent, and will reuenge their owne ſins vpon others vprightneſſe.

In the midſt of all this ſad eſtate of Samaria, and theſe ſtormes of Iehoram, the Prophet ſits quietly in his owne houſe, amongſt his holy Conſorts; bewailing no doubt both the ſinnes, and miſery of their people; and propheticall conferring of the iſſue; when ſuddenly God reueales to him the bloody intent, and meſſage of Iehoram, and he at once reueales it to his fellowes. See yee how this ſonne of a murderer hath ſent to take away mine head. Oh the vnimitable libertie of a Prophet! The ſame God that ſhewed him his danger, ſuggeſted his words; He may be bold, where we muſt be awfull: Still is Naboths blood layd in Iehorams diſh: The foule fact of Ahab blemiſheth his Poſterity, and now when the ſonne threats violence to the innocent, murder is obiected to him as hereditary.

He that fore-ſaw his owne perill, prouides for his ſafety; [Shut the doore and hold him faſt at the doore.] No man is bound to tender his throat to an vniuſt ſtroke: This bloody commiſſion was preuented by a propheticall fore-ſight: The ſame eye that ſaw the executioner comming to ſmite him, ſaw alſo the King haſting after him, to ſtay the blow: The Prophet had beene no other then guilty of his owne blood, if hee had not reſerued himſelfe a while, for the reſcue of authority: Oh the inconſtancy of carnall hearts! It was not long ſince Iehoram could ſay to Eliſha, My father, ſhall I ſmite them? now he is ready to ſmite him as an enemy, whom he honoured as a father: Yet againe, his lippes had no ſooner giuen ſentence of death againſt the Propher, then his feet ſtirre to recall it: It ſhould ſeeme that Eliſha, vpon the challenges & expoſtulations of Iehorams meſſenger, had ſent a perſwaſiue meſſage to the King of Iſrael, yet a while to wait patiently vpon God for his deliuerance: The diſcontented Prince flies off in an impotent anger, Behold, this euill is of the Lord, what ſhould I wait for the Lord any longer? Oh the deſperate reſolutions of impatient mindes! They haue ſtinted God both for his time and his meaſure; if he exceed either, they either turne their backs vpon him, or fly in his face: The poſition was true, the inference deadly: All that euill was of the Lord; they deſerued it, he ſent it: What then? It ſhould haue beene therefore argued, Hee that ſent it, can remoue it: I will wait vpon his mercy, vnder whoſe iuſtice I ſuffer: Impatience and diſtruſt ſhall but aggrauate my iudgement: It is the Lord, let him doe what he will: But now to deſpaire becauſe God is iuſt, to defie mercy becauſe it lingers, to reiect God for correction, it is a preſumptuous madneſſe, an impious pettiſhneſſe.

Yet in ſpight of all theſe prouocations both of King, and people, Eliſha hath good newes for Iehoram: Thus ſaith the Lord, To morrow about this time ſhall a meaſure

of fine flowre be ſold for a Shekel, and two meaſures of Barly for a Shekel in the gate of Samaria: Miſerable Iſrael now ſees an end of this hard triall; One dayes patience ſhall free them both of ſiege, and famine. Gods deliuerances may ouer-ſtay our expectation, not the due period of his owne counſels. Oh infinite mercy, when man ſayes, No longer, God ſayes, To morrow: As if he would condeſcend where hee might iudge; and would pleaſe them who deſerued nothing but puniſhment. The word ſeemed not more comfortable, then incredible: A Lord, on whoſe hand the King leaned, anſwered the man of God, and ſaid, Behold, if the Lord would make windowes in heauen, might this thing be? Propheſies, before they be fulfilled, are riddles; no ſpirit can areed them, but that by which they are deliuered. It is a fooliſh and iniurious infidelity to queſtion a poſſibility, where wee know the meſſage is Gods: How eaſie is it for that omnipotent hand to effect thoſe things, which ſurpaſſe all the reach of humane conceit? Had God intended a miraculous multiplication, was it not as eaſie for him to increaſe the corne or meale of Samaria, as the widowes oyle? was it not as eaſie for him to giue plenty of victuals without opening the windowes of heauen, as to giue plenty of water without wind or raine? The Almighty hates to be diſtruſted: This Peere of Iſrael ſhould rue his vnbeleefe: Behold, thou ſhalt ſee it with thine eyes, but ſhalt not eate thereof: The ſight ſhall be yeelded for conuiction, the fruition ſhall bee denied for puniſhment: Well is that man worthy to want the benefit which hee would not beleeue: Who can pity to ſee Infidelity excluded from the bleſſings of earth, from the glory of heauen?

How ſtrange a choyce doth God make of the intelligencers of ſo happy a change: Foure Lepers ſit at the entring of the Gate, they ſee nothing but death before them, famine within the wals, the enemy, without: The election is wofull, at laſt they reſolue vpon the leſſer euill: Famine is worſe then the Syrian; In the famine there is certaintie of periſhing; amongſt the Syrians, hazzard: Perhaps the enemy may haue ſome pity, hunger hath none: and, were the death equally certaine, it were more eaſie to dye by the ſword, then by famine: vpon this deliberation they come downe into the Syrian campe, to finde either ſpeed of mercy, or diſpatch. Their hunger would not giue them reſpight till morning: By twi-light are they falne vpon the vttermoſt tents: Behold, there was no man; They maruell at the ſilence, and ſolitude; they looke, and liſten; the noyſe of their owne feet affrighted them; their guilty hearts ſupplied the Syrians; and expected fearefully thoſe which were as fearfully fled: How eaſily can the Almighty confound the power of the ſtrong, the policie of the wiſe? God puts a Pannick terror into the hearts of the proud Syrians; he makes them heare a noiſe of charets, and a noyſe of horſes, euen the noyſe of a great hoaſt; They ſay one to other, Loe the King of Iſrael hath hired againſt vs the Kings of the Hittites, and the Kings of the Egyptians, to come vpon vs: they ariſe therefore in a confuſed rout, and leauing all their ſubſtance behinde them, flee for their liues. Not long before, Eliſhaes ſeruant ſaw charets and horſes, but heard none; Now, theſe Syrians heare charets and horſes, but ſee none; That ſight comforted his heart, this ſound diſmaied theirs: The Iſraelites heard no noyſe within the wals, the Lepers heard no noiſe without the gates; Onely the Syrians heard this noiſe in their campe: What a ſcorne doth God put vpon theſe preſumptuous Aramites? He will not vouchſafe to vſe any ſubſtantiall ſtratagem againſt them; nothing but an empty ſound ſhall ſcatter them, and ſend them home empty of ſubſtance, laded with ſhame, halfe-dead with feare; the very horſes that might haue haſtened their flight, are left tyed in their Tents; their very garments are a burden: all is left behind, ſaue their very bodies, and thoſe breathleſſe for ſpeed.

Doubtleſſe theſe Syrians knew well to what miſerable exigents the incloſed Iſraelites were brought by their ſiege; and now made full account to ſacke, and ranſacke their Samaria; already had they diuided, and ſwallowed the prey: when ſuddenly God puts them into a ridiculous confuſion; and ſends them to ſeeke ſafety in their heeles; no booty is now in price with them but their life, and happy is hee that can runne faſteſt.

Thus

Thus the Almighty laughs at the deſignes of inſolent men, and ſhuts vp their counſels in ſhame.

The feare of the foure Lepers began now to giue way to ſecuritie; they fill their bellies, and hide their treaſures, and paſſe from one Tent to another, in a faſtidious choice of the beſt commodities; they who ere-while would haue held it happineſſe enough to haue beene bleſſed with a cruſt, now wantonly roue for dainties, and from neceſſitie leape into exceſſe.

How farre ſelfe-loue carries vs in all our actions, euen to the neglect of the publike? Not till their owne bellies, and hands, and eyes were filled, did theſe Lepers thinke of imparting this newes to Iſrael: at laſt, when themſelues are glutted, they begin to remember the hunger of their brethren, and now they finde roome for remorſe, We doe not well, this day is a day of good tydings, and we hold our peace. Nature teaches vs that it is an iniury to ingroſſe bleſſings: and ſo to minde the priuate, as if we had no relation to a communitie; we are worthy to be ſhut out of the Citie-gates for Lepers, if the reſpects to the publique good doe not ouer-ſway vs in all our deſires, in all our demeanure; and well may we with theſe couetous Lepers feare a miſchiefe vpon our ſelues, if we ſhall wilfully conceale bleſſings from others.

The conſcience of this wrong and danger ſends backe the Lepers into the Citie; they call to the Porters, & ſoone tranſmit the newes to the Kings houſhold; The King of Iſrael complaines not to haue his ſleepe broken with ſuch intelligence; He ariſeth in the night, and not contemning good newes, though brought by Lepers, conſults with his ſeruants of the buſineſſe.

Wee cannot be too iealous of the intentions of an enemie; Ichoram wiſely ſuſpects this flight of the Syrians to be but ſimulatory, and politicke, onely to draw Iſrael out of their Citie, for the ſpoile of both. There may be more perill in the backe of an enemy, then in his face: the cruelleſt ſlaughters haue beene in retiring; eaſily therefore is the King perſwaded to aduenture ſome few for-lorne Scouts for further aſſurance. The word of Eliſha is out of his head, out of his heart, elſe there had beene no place for this doubt: Timorous hearts neuer thinke themſelues ſure, thoſe that haue no faith, had need of much ſenſe.

Thoſe few horſes that remaine, are ſent forth for diſcouery, they finde nothing but monuments of frightfulneſſe, pledges of ſecuritie. Now Iſrael dares iſſue forth to the prey; There (as if the Syrians had comne thither to inrich them) they finde granaries, wardrobes, treaſures, and what euer may ſerue either for vſe or oſtentation: Euery Iſraelite goes away filled, laden, wearyed with the wealthy ſpoile.

As ſcarcitie breeds dearth, ſo plentie cheapneſſe. To day a meaſure of fine flower is lower rated, then yeſterday of dung.

The diſtruſtfull Peere of Iſrael ſees this abundance, according to the word of the Prophet, but enioyes it not: hee ſees this plenty can come in at the gate, though the windowes of heauen be not open. The gate is his charge: the affamiſhed Iſraelites preſſe in vpon him, and beare him downe in the throng: Extreame hunger hath no reſpect to greatneſſe. Not their rudeneſſe, but his owne vnbeleefe hath trampled him vnder feet. Hee that abaſed the power of God by his diſtruſt, is abaſed worthily to the heeles of the multitude: Faith exalts a man aboue his ſphere, Infidelitie depreſſes him into the duſt, into Hell: He that beleeues not is condemned already.

TO THE HIGH AND MIGHTIE MONARCH, CHARLES,

By the Grace of God King of Great Britaine, France and Ireland, Defender of the FAITH, &c.

My dread Soueraigne Lord And Master.

May it pleaſe your MAIESTIE:

NOw at laſt (thankes be to my good God) I haue finiſhed the long Taske of my Meditations vpon the Hiſtoricall part of the Old Teſtament; A Worke that I foreſaw muſt be the iſſue both of time, and thoughts; It preſumed to intitle it ſelfe at firſt, to your Gracious name, in ſucceſſion to your immortall Brothers; and now, it brings to your Royall hands, a due account of an happie diſpatch.

Beſides my owne publique ingagement, the incouragements of many worthie Diuines, both at home, and abroad, drew me on, in this pleasing, though busie, labour; and made me beleeue the seruice would not bee of more paine, then vse.

I humbly present it to your Maiestie; not fearing to say, that in regard of the subiect, it is not so fit for any eyes as Princely; For what doth it else but comment vpon that, which God hath thought good to say of Kings; what they haue done, what they should haue done; how they sped in good, in euill? Certainely there can be none such miroir of Princes vnder heauen, as this, which God hath made for the faces of his Deputies of on earth. Neither can the eyes of Soueraigne Greatnesse be better taken vp then with this sacred reflection. If my defects haue not beene notorious, the matter shall enough commend the worke; which together with the vnworthie Authour, humbly casts it selfe at the feete of your Maiestie, with the best vowes of fidelitie and obseruance, from him, that prides himselfe in nothing more, then in the style of

most faithfully

IOS: HALL.

The SHVNAMITE suing to IEHORAM; ELISHA conferring with HAZAEL.

How royally hath Elisha paid the Shunamite for his lodging! To him alreadie she owes the life of her sonne, both giuen, and restored; and now againe (after so many yeares, as might well haue worne out the memorie of so small a courtesie) her selfe, her sonne, her family owe their liues to so thankfull a guest. That table, and bed, and stoole, and candlesticke was well bestowed: That candlesticke repaid her the light of her future life and condition, that table the meanes of maintenance, that stoole a seat of safe abode, that bed a quiet rest from the common calamities of her nation: He is a niggard to himselfe, that scants his beneficence to a Prophet, whose very cold water shall not go vnrewarded. Elijah preserued the Sareptan from famine; Elisha the Shunamite; he, by prouision of oyle and meale; this, by premonition: Arise, and go, thou and thine houshold, and sojourne wheresoeuer thou canst sojourne. The Sareptan was poore, and driuen to extremes, therefore the Prophet prouides for her, from hand to mouth: The Shunamite was wealthy, and therefore the Prophet sends her to prouide for her selfe: The same goodnesse that relieues our necessitie, leaues our competencie to the hand of our owne counsell; in the one, he will make vse of his owne power, in the other, of our prouidence.

The very Prophet aduises this holy Client to leaue the bounds of the Church and to seeke life, where she should not find Religion: Extremitie is for the time a iust dispensation with some common rules of our outward demeanure, and motions, euen from better to worse. All Israel and Iudah shall be affamished; The bodie can be preserued no where, but where the soule shall want; Sometimes the conueniences of the soule must yeeld to bodily necessities. Wantonnesse and curiositie can finde no aduantage from that which is done out of the power of need.

It is a long famine that shall afflict Israel; He vpon whom the spirit of Elijah was doubled, doubled the iudgement inflicted by his Master; Three yeares and an halfe did Israel gaspe vnder the drought of Elijah; seauen yeares dearth shall it suffer vnder Elisha: The tryals of God are many times not more grieuous for their sharpenesse, then for their continuance.

This scarcitie shall not come alone; God shall call for it: what euer be the second cause, he is the first. The executioners of the Almightie (such are his iudgements) stand readie waiting vpon his iust Throne; and do no sooner receiue the watchword, then they flie vpon the world, and plague it for ſinne; Onely the cry of our ſinnes moues God to call for vengeance: And if God once call, it muſt come; How oft, how earneſtly are we called to repentance, and ſtirre not? The meſſengers of Gods wrath flie forth at the leaſt becke; and fulfill the will of his reuenge vpon thoſe, whoſe obedience would not fulfill the will of his command.

After ſo many proofes of fidelitie the Shunamite cannot diſtruſt the Prophet; not ſtaying therefore to be conuicted by the euent, ſhee remoues her family into the Land of the Philiſtins: No nation was more oppoſite to Iſrael, none more worthily odious; yet, there doth the Shunamite ſeeke and find ſhelter; Euen the ſhade of thoſe trees that are vnwholſome, may keepe vs from a ſtorme; Euery where will God finde roome for his owne. The fields of Philiſtins flouriſh, whiles the ſoyle of Iſrael yeelds nothing but weeds and barrenneſſe: Not that Iſrael was more ſinfull, but that the ſinne of Iſrael is more intolerable. The offers of grace are ſo many aggrauations of wickedneſſe: In equall offences thoſe doe iuſtly ſmart more, who are more obliged. No peſtilence is ſo contagious as that which hath taken the pureſt aire.

Theſe Philiſtine neighbours would neuer haue endured themſelues to be peſtered with forrainers; eſpecially Iſraelites, whom they hated (beſides Religion) for their vſurpation: neither were they in all likelihood preſſed with multitude: The reſt of Iſrael were led on with hopes; preſuming vpon the amends of the next harueſt, till their want grew deſperate, and irremediable; onely the forwarned Shunamite preuents the miſchiefe; now ſhe finds what it is to haue a Prophet her friend: Happie are thoſe ſoules that vpon all occaſions conſult with Gods Seers; they ſhall be freed from the plagues, wherein the ſecure blindneſſe of others is heedleſly ouertaken.

Seuen yeares had this Shunamite ſoiourned in Paleſtine, now ſhe returnes to her owne; and is excluded: She that found harbour among Philiſtines, findes oppreſſion and violence among Iſraelites: Thoſe of her kinred, taking aduantage of her abſence, had ſhared her poſſeſſions. How oft doth it fall out that the worſt enemies of a man are thoſe of his owne houſe? All went by contraries with this Shunamite; In the famine ſhe had enough, in the common plentie ſhe was ſcanted; Philiſtines were kinde vnto her, Iſraelites cruell: Both our feares, and our hopes do not ſeldome diſappoint vs; It is ſafe truſting to that ſtay which can neuer faile vs; who can eaſily prouide vs both of friendſhip in Paleſtine, and of iuſtice in Iſrael. We may not iudge of the Religion by particular actions; A verie Philiſtine may be mercifull, when an Iſraelite is vniuſt; The perſon may be faultie, when the profeſſion is holy.

It was not long ſince the Prophet made that friendly offer to the Shunamite, out of the deſire of a thankfull requitall; VVhat is to be done for thee? wouldeſt thou be ſpoken for to the King, or to the Captaine of the Hoſt? and ſhe anſwered; I dwell among my brethren. Little did ſhe then thinke of this iniurious meaſure; elſe ſhe might haue ſaid; I dwell among mine enemies, I dwell among robbers. It is like they were then friendly, who were now cruell, and oppreſſiue; There is no truſt to be repoſed in fleſh and bloud: How ſhould their fauors be conſtant, who are in their nature, and diſpoſition, variable? It is the ſureſt way to relie on him, who is euer like himſelfe; the meaſure of whoſe loue is eternitie.

Whither ſhould the Shunamite goe to complaine of her wrong, but to the Court? There is no other refuge of the oppreſſed, but publike authoritie: All Iuſtice is deriued from Soueraignitie: Kings are not called Gods for nothing; They doe both ſentence and execute for the Almightie.

Doubtleſſe, now the poore Shunamite, thought of the courteous proffer of Eliſha; and miſſing a friend at the Court, is glad to be the preſenter of her owne petition.

How happily doth God contriue all euents for the good of his! This ſuppliant ſhall fall vpon that inſtant for her ſuit, when the King ſhall be talking with Gehezi; when Gehezi ſhall be talking of her to the King; the words of Gehezi, the thoughts of the King, the deſires of the Shunamite ſhall be all drawne together by the wiſe prouidence dence of God into the center of one moment, that his oppreſſed ſeruant might receiue a ſpedie iuſtice. Oh the infinite wiſedome, power, mercy of our God, that inſenſibly orders all our wayes, as to his owne holy purpoſes; ſo to our beſt aduantage.

What doth Iehoram the King talking with Gehezi the Leaper? That very preſence was an eyeſore.

But if the cohabitation with the infectious were forbidden, yet not the conference. Certainely, I begin to thinke of ſome goodneſſe in both theſe: Had there not beene ſome goodneſſe in Iehoram, he had not taken pleaſure to heare, euen from a leprous mouth, the miraculous acts and praiſes of Gods Prophet; Had there not beene ſome goodneſſe in Gehezi, he had not after ſo fearefull an infliction of iudgement, thus ingenuouſly recounted the praiſes of his ſeuere Maſter; He that told that deare-bought lye to the Prophet, tells now all truths of the Prophet, to the King: Perhaps his leproſie had made him cleane; If ſo: Happie was it for him that his forehead was white with the diſeaſe, if his ſoule became hereupon white with repentance. But we may well know that the deſire, or report of hiſtoricall Truths, doth not alwayes argue grace. Still Iehoram, after the iniquitie of the Prophets miracles, continues his Idolatry. He that was curious to hearken after the wonders of Eliſha, is not carefull to follow his doctrine; Therefore are Gehezi and the Shunamite met before him, that he may be conuicted, who will not be reformed: Why was it elſe that the preſence of the perſons ſhould thus inexpectedly make good the relation, if God had not meant the inexcuſableneſſe of Iehoram, whiles he muſt needs ſay within himſelfe; Thus potent is the Prophet of that God, whom I obey not, Were not Eliſhaes, the true God, how could he worke ſuch wonders? And if he be the true God, why is he not mine? But what? Shall I change Ahabs God for Iehoſaphats? No; I cannot denie the miracles, I will not admit of the Author: Let Eliſha be powerfull, I will be conſtant. O wretched Iehoram; how much better had it beene for thee neuer to haue ſeene the face of Gehezi, and the ſonne of the Shunamite; then to go away vnmoued with the vengeance of leproſie in the one, with the mercifull reſuſcitation of the other? Therefore is thy iudgement fearefully aggrauated, becauſe thou wouldeſt not yeeld to what thou couldſt not oppoſe. Had not Ahabs obduratenes bin propagated to his ſon, ſo powerfull demonſtrations of diuine power could not haue bin vneffectuall. Wicked hearts are ſo much worſe by how much God is better; This anuile is the harder by being continually beaten vpon, whether with iudgements or mercie.

Yet this good vſe will God haue made of this report, and this preſence, that the poore Shunamite ſhall haue iuſtice; That ſonne, whoſe life was reſtored, ſhall haue his inheritance reuiued; His eſtate ſhall fare the better for Eliſhaes miracles: How much more will our mercifull God ſecond his owne bleſſings, when the fauors of vniuſt men are therefore drawne to vs, becauſe we haue beene the ſubiects of diuine beneficence.

It was a large, and full a ward, that this occurrence drew from the King; Reſtore all that was hers, and all the fruits of the field, ſince the day that ſhe left the land, euen vntil now. Not the preſent poſſeſſion onely is giuen her, but the arerages.

Nothing hinders, but that outward iuſtice may ſtand with groſſe Idolatry. The Widdow may thanke Eliſha for this; His miracle wrought ſtill; and puts this new life in her dead eſtate; his abſence did that for the preſeruation of life, which his preſence did for the reſtoring it from death. She that was ſo readie to expoſtulate with the man of God, vpon the loſſe of her ſonne, might perhaps haue beene as readie to impute the loſſe of her eſtate to his aduice; Now, that for his ſake ſhe is inriched with her owne; how doth ſhe bleſſe God for ſo happy a gueſt? When we haue forgotten our owne good turnes, God remembers and crownes them: Let vs doe good to all whiles we haue time, but eſpecially to the houſhold of faith.

Could Iſrael haue beene ſenſible of their owne condition, it was no ſmall vnhappineſſe to loſe the preſence of Eliſha: Whether, for the Idolatries, or for the famine of Israel, the Prophet is gone into Syria; No doubt Naaman welcomd him thither; and now would force vpon him thankes for his cure, which the man of God would not receiue at home.

How famous is he now growne that was taken from the Teame? His name is not confined to his owne Nation; forraine countries take notice of it; and Kings are glad to listen after him, and wooe him with presents: Benhadad the King of Syria, whose counsells he had detested, reioyceth to heare of his presence; and now, as hauing forgotten that he had sent a whole host, to besiege the Prophet in Dothan, sends an honorable messenger to him, laden with the burden of fortie Camels, to consult with this Oracle, concerning his sicknesse, and recouery.

This Syrian belike in his distresse dares not trust to his owne gods; but hauing had good proofe of the power of the God of Israel, both in Naamans cure, and in the miraculous defeats of his greatest forces, is glad to send to that seruant of God, whom he had persecuted. Wicked men are not the same in health and in sickenesse: their affliction is worthy of the thankes, if they be well minded; not themselues.

Doubtlesse the errand of Benhadad was not onely to inquire of the issue of his disease, but to require the prayers of the Prophet for a good issue: Euen the worst man doth so loue himselfe, that he can be content to make a beneficiall vse of those instruments, whose goodnesse he hateth.

Hazael the chiefe Peere of Syria is designed to this message; The wealth of his present striues with the humilitie of his carriage, and speech: Thy sonne Benhadad King of Syria hath sent me to thee, saying, Shall I recouer of this disease? Not long since, Iehoram King of Israel had said to Elisha, My father, shall I smite them; and now Benhadad King of Syria, sayes, My father shall I recouer: Loe how this poore Meholathite hath Kings to his sonnes: How great is the honour of Gods Prophets with Pagans, with Princes? Who can be but confounded to see Euangelicall Prophets despised by the meanest Christians.

It is more then a single answer that the Prophet returnes to this message: One answer he giues to Benhadab, that sent it; another he giues to Hazael, that brings it: That to Benhadad, is, Thou maist surely recouer; That to Hazael, The Lord hath shewed me that he shall surely die: What shall we say then? Is there a lye, or an equiuocation in the holy mouth of the Prophet? God forbid: It is one thing what shall be the nature and issue of the disease; Another thing what may outwardly befall the person of Benhadad: The question is moued of the former; whereto the answer is direct; The disease is not mortall; But withall an intimation is giuen to the bearer, of an euent beyond the reach of his demand; which he may know, but either needs not, or may not returne: The Lord hath shewed me that I shall surely dye; by another meanes, though not by the disease.

The Seer of God descries more in Hazael, then he could see in himselfe; he fixes his eyes therefore stedfastly in the Syrians face, as one that in those lines read the bloudy story of his life.

Hazael blushes, Elisha weepes, The intention of those eyes did not so much amaze Hazael, as the teares; As yet he was not guiltie to himselfe of any wrong that might straine out this iuyce of sorrow: Why weepeth my Lord.

The Prophet feares not to foretell Hazael all the villanies which he should once do to Israel; How he should fire their forts, and kill their yong men, and rip the mothers, and dash their children. I maruell not now at the teares of those eyes which foresaw this miserable vastation of the inheritance of God; The verie mention whereof is abhorred of the future author: What is thy seruant a dog, that I should do this great thing? They are sauage cruelties whereof thou speakest; It were more fit for me to weepe that thou shouldest repute me so brutish; I should no lesse condemne my selfe for a beast, if I could suspect my owne degeneration so farre. Wicked men are caried into those heights of impietie, which they could not in their good mood haue possibly beleeued; Nature is subiect to fauorable opinions of it selfe; and will rather

miſtruſt a Prophet of God, then her owne good diſpoſition: How many from honeſt beginnings, haue riſen to incredible licentiouſneſſe, whoſe liues are now ſuch, that it were as hard for a man to beleeue they had euer beene good, as to haue perſwaded them once they ſhould proue ſo deſperately ill.

To giue ſome ouertute vnto Hazael of the oportunitie of this enſuing miſchiefe; the Prophet foretells him from God, that he ſhall be the King of Syria.

He that ſhewes the euent, doth not appoint the meanes; Farre was it from the ſpirit of Gods Prophet to ſet, or encourage a treaſon: whiles he ſaid therefore, Thou ſhalt be King of Syria; he ſaid not, Goe home, and kill thy Maſter: The wicked ambition of Hazael drawes this damnable concluſion out of holy premiſes; and now hauing fed the hopes of his Soueraigne with the expectation of recouery; the next day he ſmothers his Maſter. The impotent deſire of rule brookes no delay: Had not Hazael beene graceleſly cruell, after he had receiued this prediction of the Seer, he ſhould haue patiently awaited for the crowne of Syria, till lawfull meanes had ſet it vpon his head; now, he will by a cloſe execution make way to the throne; A wet cloth hath ſtopt the mouth of his ſicke Soueraigne; No noyſe is heard; the carcaſſe is faire; who can complaine of any thing but the diſeaſe?

O Hazael, thou ſhalt not thus eaſily ſtop the mouth of thine owne conſcience; that ſhall call thee Traytor, euen in thy chaire of ſtate; and ſhall checke all thy royall triumphes, with, Thou haſt founded thy throne in bloud. I am deceiued if this wet cloth ſhall not wipe thy lips in thy iollieſt feaſts, and make thy beſt morſells vnſauorie: Soueraignitie is painefull vpon the faireſt termes; but vpon treacherie, and murder, tormenting: Wofull is the caſe of that man whoſe publike cares are aggrauated with priuate guiltineſſe; and happie is he, that can inioy a little with the peace of an honeſt heart.

IEHV with IEHORAM and IEZEBEL.

YEt Hazael began his crueltie with loſſe: Ramoth Gilead is won from him; Ieboram the ſonne hath recouered that, which Ahab his father attempted in vaine; That Citie was dear-bought of Iſrael; it coſt the life of Ahab, the bloud of Ieboram; Thoſe wounds were healed with victorie; The King tends his health at Iezreel, whiles the Captaines were enioying, and ſeconding their ſucceſſe at Ramoth. 2. Kings 9.

Old Eliſha hath neither cottage nor foote of land, yet ſitting in an obſcure corner he giues order for Kingdomes; Nor by way of authoritie (this vſurpation had beene no leſſe proud, then vniuſt) but by way of meſſage, from the God of kings; Euen a meane Herald may go on a great errand: The Prophets of the Goſpell haue nothing to do but with ſpirituall Kingdomes; To beate downe the kingdomes of ſinne and Satan; to tranſlate ſoules to the Kingdome of heauen.

He that renewed the life of the Shunamites ſonne, muſt ſtoope to age; That blocke lies in his way to Iehu; The aged Prophet imployes a ſpeedier meſſenger, who muſt alſo gird vp his loynes, for haſte: No common pace will ſerue vs when we go on Gods meſſage; The very loſſe of minutes may be vnrecouerable. This great Seer of God well ſaw a preſent concurrence of all oportunities: The Captaines of the Hoſt were then readily combined for this exploit: the Armie was on foote; Ieboram abſent; a ſmall delay might haue troubled the worke; the diſperſion of the Captaines, and Hoſt, or the preſence of the King, might either haue defeated, or ſlacked the diſpatch: He is prodigall of his ſucceſſe, that is ſlow in his execution.

The directions of Eliſha to the yong Prophet, are full, and punctuall: whether to go; what to carrie; what to do; where to do it; what to ſay, what ſpeede to make, in his act, in his returne: In the buſineſſes of God it matters not how little is left to our diſcretion; There is no important buſineſſe of the Almightie, wherein his precepts are not ſtrict, and expreſſe; Looke how much more ſpecialtie there is in the charge of God, ſo much more danger is in the violation,

The young Prophet is curiouſly obedient; in his haſte; in his obſeruation and carriage: and finding Iehu, according to Eliſhaes prediction, ſet amongſt the Captaines of the Hoſt, he ſingles him forth, by a reuerent compellation; I haue an errand to thee, O Captaine; Might not the Prophet haue ſtayed till the table had riſen, and then haue followed Iehu to his lodging? Surely, the wiſedome of God hath purpoſely pitcht vpon this ſeaſon, that the publique view of a ſacred meſſenger, and the haſtie euocation of ſo noted a perſon, to ſuch a ſecrecie, might prepare the hearts of thoſe Commanders of Iſrael, to the expectation of ſome great deſigne.

The inmoſt roome is but cloſe enough for this act; Ere many houres, all Iſrael ſhall know that, which yet may not be truſted with one eye; The goodneſſe of God makes wiſe prouiſion for the ſafetie of his meſſengers, and whiles he employes their ſeruice, preuents their dangers.

But how is it that of all the Kings of the Ten tribes, none was euer anointed but Iehu? Is it for that the God, who would not countenance the erection of that vſurped throne, would countenance the alteration? Or is it, that by this viſible teſtimonie of diuine ordination, the courage of the Iſraelitiſh Captaines might be raiſed vp to ſecond the high and bold attempt of him, whom they ſaw deſtin'd from heauen to rule?

Together with the oyle of this vnction, here was a charge of reuenge; A reuenge of the bloud of the Prophets, vpon Iezebel; of wickednеſſe and idolatry, vpon Ahab: neither was the extirpation of this lewd family fore-prophеſied only to Iehu, but inioyned.

Eliya foretold, and the world expected ſome fearefull account of the abhominable crueltie, and impietie of that accurſed houſe; Now it is called for, when it ſeemed forgotten: Ahab ſhall haue no poſteritie, Iezebel ſhall haue no toomb, but the doggs. This wofull doome is committed to Iehues execution.

Oh the ſure, though patient, iuſtice of the Almightie: not onely Ahab and Iezebel had beene bloudie, and idolatrous, but Iſrael was drawne into the partnerſhip of their crimes; All theſe ſhall ſhare in the iudgement: Eliyahs complaint in the caue now receiues this late anſwer Hazael ſhall plague Iſrael; Iehu ſhall plague the houſe of Ahab and Iezebel; Eliſhaes ſeruant thus ſeconds Eliſhaes Maſter: When wickednеſſe is ripe in the field, God will not let it ſheed to grow againe, but cuts it vp by a iuſt, and ſeaſonable vengeance: Ahabs drouping vnder the threat hath put off the iudgement from his owne dayes; now it comes, and ſweepes away his wife, his iſſue; and falls heauie vpon his ſubiects. Pleaſe your ſelues, O ye vaine ſinners, in the ſlow pace of vengeance; it will be neither leſſe certaine, nor more eaſie for the delay; rather it were to pay for that leaſure in the extremitie.

The Prophet hath done his errand, and is gone. Iehu returnes to his fellowes, with his head not more wet with oyle, then buſied with thoughts: no doubt, his face bewrayed ſome inward tumults, and diſtractions of imagination; neither ſeem'd hee to returne the ſame he went out. They aske therefore, Is all well? Wherefore came this mad fellow to thee? The Prophets of God were to theſe idolatrous Iſraelites, like comets; who were neuer ſeene without the portendement of a miſchiefe: When the prieſt of their Baal were quietly ſacrificing, all was well; but now when a Prophet of God comes in ſight, their guiltineſſe askes, Is all well? All would bee well

Iſrael was come to a good paſſe, when the Prophets of God went with them for mad men: Oh ye Baalitiſh Ruffians, whither hath your impietie and profaneneſſe caried you, that ye ſhould thus blaſpheme the ſeruants of the liuing God? Ye that run on madding after vaine Idols, taxe the the ſober guides of true worſhip, for madneſſe. Thus it becomes the godleſſe enemies of truth, the heralds of our patience, to miſ-call our innocence, to reuile our moſt holy profeſſion: What wonder is it that Gods meſſengers are mad men vnto thoſe, to whom the wiſedome of God is fooliſhneſſe?

The meſſage was not deliuered to Iehu for a concealement, but for publication: Silence could not effect the word that was told him; common notice muſt; Yee know the man, and his communication: The habit ſhowes you the man; the calling ſhowes you his errand: Euen Prophets were diſtinguiſhed by their clothes; Their mantle was not the common weare; why ſhould not this ſacred vocation be knowne by a peculiar attyre? Theſe Captaines had not calld him a mad-man, if they had not knowne him a Prophet: By the man therefore they might gueſſe at his meſſage; Prophets do not vſe to appeare, but vpon ſerious errands; whether of reproofe, or of prediction.

Nice ciuilities of denialls were not then knowne to the world; They ſaid, It is falſe, tell vs now: Amongſt theſe Captaines no combat, no vnkindneſſe followes vpon a word ſo rudely familiar.

Iehu needs not tell them, that the man was a Prophet; he tels them the propheſie of the man; what he had ſaid, whet he had done.

Their eyes had no ſooner ſeene the oyle; their eares had no ſooner heard, Thus ſaith the Lord, I haue anointed thee King ouer Iſrael, then they riſe from their ſeates, as rapt with a tempeſt, and are hurled into armes; So do they haſte to proclaime Iehu, that they ſcarce ſtay to ſnatch vp their garments, which they had perhaps left behind them for ſpeed, had they not meant with theſe rich abiliments to garniſh a ſtate for their new Soueraigne; To whom hauing now erected an extemporall Throne, they do by the ſound of Trumpets giue the ſtile of Royaltie, Iehu is King.

So much credit hath that mad fellow with theſe gallants of Iſrael, that vpon his word they will preſently aduenture their liues, and change the Crowne. God giues a ſecret authoritie to his deſpiſed ſeruants; ſo as they which hate their perſon, yet reuerence their truth: Euen very ſcorners cannot but beleeue them; If when the Prophets of the Goſpell tell vs of a ſpirituall Kingdome, they be diſtruſted of thoſe which profeſſe to obſerue them, how ſhamefull is the diſproportion? how iuſt ſhall their iudgement be?

Yet I cannot ſay whether meere obedience to the Prophet, or perſonall diſlikes of Iehoram, or partiall reſpects to Iehu, drew the Captaines of Iſrael; The will of God may be done thankleſly, when fulfilling the ſubſtance, we faile of the intention, and erre in circumſtance.

Onely Ramoth is conſcious of this ſudden Inauguration; This new princedome yet reaches no further then the ſound of the trumpet: Iehu is no leſſe ſubtile, then valiant; he knew that the notice of this inexpected change might worke a buſie, and dangerous reſiſtance; he therefore giues order that no meſſenger of the newes may preuent his perſonall execution, that ſo he might ſurpriſe Iehoram in his palace of Izreel, whether tending his late wounds, or ſecurely feaſting his friends, and dreaming of nothing leſſe then danger; and might be ſeene, and felt at once. Secreſie is the ſafeſt gard of any deſigne; diſcloſed proiects are either fruſtrated, or made needleſly difficult.

Neither is Iehu more cloſe, then ſwift; That verie trumpet with the ſame wind ſounds his march; from the toppe of the ſtaires, he ſteps downe into his charet: That man meanes to ſpeed, who can be at once reſerued in his counſels, and reſolute and quicke in his performances.

Who

Who could but pity the vnhappy and vnſeaſonable viſitation of the grand-child of Iehoſaphat, were it not that he was degenerate into the family of Ahab? Ahaziah King of Iudah is comne to viſite Iehoram King of Iſrael; the knowledge of his late receiued wounds hath drawne thither this kind ill-matched allie: Hee who was partner of the warre, cannot but be a viſitor of the wounds.

The two Kings are in the height of their complement, and entertainements, when the watch-man of the Tower of Izreel eſpies a troupe, a farre off. For ought was knowne, there was nothing but peace in all the Land of Iſrael; and Iudah was now ſo combined with it, that both their Kings were feaſting vnder one roofe; yet, in the midſt of this ſuppoſed ſafetie, the watch-tower is not vnfurniſhed with heedie eyes: No ſecuritie of peace can free wiſe Gouernors from a carefull ſuſpition of what may come, and a prouidence againſt the worſt. Euen whiles we know of no enemies, the watch-tower of due intelligence may not be emptie.

In vaine are dangers fore-ſeene, if they bee not premoniſhed; It is all one to haue a blind and a mute watch-man; This ſpeakes what he ſees; I ſee a companie.

Doubtleſſe Iehorams head was, now full of thoughts; neither knew he what conſtruction to put vpon this approching troupe; Perhaps, the Syrians (hee thinkes) may haue recouered Ramoth; and chaſed the gariſon of Iſrael; neither can he imagine whether theſe ſhould be hoſtile victors, or vanquiſhed ſubiects, or conſpiring rebells. Euery way this rout was dreadfull. Oh Iehoram, thou beginſt thy feares too late; Hadſt thou beene afraid to prouoke the God of Iſrael, thine innocencie had yeelded no roome to theſe terrors.

An horſeman is diſpatcht to diſcouer the meaning of this deſcried concourſe: He meets them, and inquires of peace; but receiues a ſhort anſwer. What haſt thou to do with peace? turne thee behind me? A ſecond is addreſſed; with the ſame ſucceſſe: Both attend the traine of Iehu in ſtead of returning; Indeed, it is not for priuate perſons to hope to rectifie the publike affaires, when they are growne to an height of diſorder, and from thence to a ripeneſſe of mil-carriage: Sooner may a well-meaning man hurt himſelfe, then redreſſe the common danger.

Theſe meſſengers were now within the mercy of a multitude, had they but indeuored to retire, they had periſhed as wilfully, as vainely: Whoſoeuer will bee ſtriuing againſt the torrent of a iuſt iudgement, muſt needs be carried downe in the ſtreame: Sometimes there is as much wiſedome in yeelding, as courage in reſiſtance.

Had this troupe beene farre off, the watchman could not haue deſcried the arriuall of the meſſengers, their turning behind, the manner of the march; Iehu was a noted Captaine, his carriage and motion was obſerued more full of fire, then his fellowes; The driuing is like Iehues, for he driueth furiouſly: God makes choyce of fit inſtruments, as of mercie, ſo of reuenge; Theſe ſpirits were needfull for ſo tragicall a ſcene, as was now preparing in Iſrael.

Iehoram and Ahaziah, as netled with this forced patience of expectation, can no longer keepe their ſeates, but will needs haſten their charets; and fetch that coſtly ſatisfaction, which would not be ſent, but giuen.

They are infatuated, which ſhall periſh; otherwiſe Iehoram had beene warned enough by the forceable retention of his meſſengers, to expect none but an enemie. A friend, or a ſubiect could not haue beene vnwilling to be knowne, to be lookt for; Now, forgetting his wounds, he will go to fetch death.

Yet when he ſees Iehu, whom hee left a ſubiect, hopes ſtriue with his doubts, Is it peace, Iehu? what may be the reaſon of this ſudden iourney? Is the army foyled by the Syrians? Is Ramoth recouered? or hath the flight of the enemie left thee no further worke? or is ſome other ill newes guiltie of thy haſte? What meanes this vnwiſhed preſence, and returne?

There

There needs no ſtay for an anſwer; the verie face of Iehu, and thoſe ſparkling eyes of his ſpake furie, and death to Iehoram; which yet his tongue angerly ſeconds: What peace, ſo long as the whordomes of thy mother Iezebel, and her witchcrafts are ſo many?

Wicked Tyrant, what ſpeak'ſt thou of peace with men, when thou haſt thus long waged warre with the Almightie? That curſed mother of thine hath nurſed thee with bloud, and trained thee vp in abominable Idolatries.

Thou art not more hers, then her ſinne is thine; thou art polluted with her ſpirituall whoredomes, and inchanted with her helliſh witchcrafts: Now that iuſt God whom thou, and thy parents haue ſo hainouſly deſpited, ſends thee by me this laſt meſſage of his vengeance; which whiles he ſpake, his hand is drawing vp that deadly arrow, which ſhall cure the former wounds with a worſe.

Too late now doth wretched Iehoram turne his charet, & flee; and crie Treaſon, O Ahaziah; There was treaſon before, O Iehoram; thy treaſon againſt the Maieſtie of God, is now reuenged by the treaſon of Iehu againſt thee.

That fatall ſhaft, notwithſtanding the ſwift pace of both the charets, is directed to the heart of Iehoram; there is no erring of thoſe feathers which are guided by the hand of deſtinie.

How iuſt are the iudgements of God! It was in the field of Naboth, wherein Iehoram met with Iehu; That very ground called to him for bloud; And now this new auenger remembers that propheſie which he heard from the mouth of Eliiah, in that very place, following the heeles of Ahab; and is carefull to performe it. Little did Iehu thinke, when he heard that meſſage of Eliiah, that his hands ſhould act it; now, as zealous of accompliſhing the word of a Prophet; he giues charge to Bidkar his Captaine, that the bleeding carkaſſe of Iehoram ſhould bee caſt vpon that verie plat of Naboth: Oh Naboths bloud well paid for! Ahabs bloud is licked by dogs, in the very place where thoſe dogs lickt Naboths; Iehorams bloud ſhall manure that ground, which was wrung from Naboth; and Iezebel ſhall adde to this compoſt. Oh garden of hearbes dearely bought, royally dunged.

What a reſemblance there is betwixt the death of the father, and the ſonne; Ahab and Iehoram? Both are ſlaine in their charet; Both with an arrow; Both repay their bloud to Naboth; and how perfit is this retaliation? Not onely Naboth miſcaried in that cruell iniuſtice, but his ſonnes alſo; elſe the inheritance of the vineyard had deſcended to his heires, notwithſtanding his pretended offence; and now not onely Ahab forfeits his bloud to this field, but his ſonne Iehoram alſo: Face doth not more anſwer to face, then puniſhment to ſinne.

It was time for Ahaziah King of Iuda, to flee: Nay it had beene time long before to haue fled from the ſinnes, yea from the houſe of Ahab; That brand is fearefull which God ſets vpon him; He did euill in the ſight of the Lord as did the houſe of Ahab; for he was the ſonne in law of the houſe of Ahab; Affinitie is too often guilty of corruption; The ſonne of good Iehoſaphat is loſt in Ahabs daughter. 2. Kings 27.

Now he payes for his kind alliance; accompanying the ſonne of Ahab in his death, whom he conſorted with in his Idolatries: Yong Ahaziah was ſcarce warme in his throne, when the miſ-matched bloud of Athaliah is required from him; Nothing is more dangerous then to be imped in a wicked family; this relation too often drawes in a ſhare both of ſinne and puniſhment.

Who would not haue lookt that Iezebel hearing of this bloudie end of her ſon; and purſuit of her allie; and the fearefull proceedings of this proſperous conſpiracie, ſhould haue put her ſelfe into ſack-cloth and aſhes; and now finding no meanes either of defence, or eſcape, ſhould haue caſt her ſelfe into ſuch a poſture of humiliation, as might haue moued the compaſſion of Iehu; Her proud heart could not ſuddenly learne to ſtoope: rather ſhe recollects her high ſpirits, and inſtead of humbling her ſoule by repentance; and addreſſing her ſelfe for an imminent death; ſhe prankes vp her old carkaſſe, and paints her wrinkled face, and as one that vainely hopes to daunt the courage of an vſurper, by the ſudden beames of Maieſtie; ſhe lookes out, and thinkes to fright him with the challenge of a traitor, whoſe either mercie, or iuſtice could not be auoided: Extremitie findes vs ſuch as our peace leaues vs; Our laſt thoughts are ſpent vpon that we care moſt for; thoſe that haue regarded their face more then their ſoule, in their latter end are more taken vp with deſire of ſeeming faire, then being happie: It is no maruell if an heart obdured with the cuſtome of ſinne ſhut vp graceleſly. Counterfeit beautie agrees well with inward vncleanneſſe.

Iehues reſolution was too ſtrongly ſetled to be remoued with a painted face, or an opprobrious tongue; He lookes vp to the window, and ſayes, Who is on my ſide, who? There want not thoſe euery where, which will be readie to obſerue preuailing greatneſſe: Two or three Eunuchs looke out; he bids them, Throw her downe: They inſtantly lay hold on their lately-adored Miſtris, and notwithſtanding all her ſhrieks and prayers, caſt her downe headlong into the ſtreet.

What heed is to be taken of the deepe profeſſed ſeruices of hollow-hearted followers; Al this while they haue humble with ſmiles, & officious deuotions fawned vpon their great Queene; now vpon the call of a proſperous enemie they forget their reſpects, her royaltie; and caſt her downe, as willing executioners, into the iawes of a fearefull death: It is hard for greatneſſe to know them whom it may truſt: Perhaps the faireſt ſemblance is from the falſeſt heart; It was a iuſt plague of God vpon wicked Iezebel, that ſhe was inwardly hated of her owne; He whoſe ſeruants ſhe perſecuted, raiſed vp enemies to her from her owne elbow.

Thus muſt pride fall; Inſolent, idolatrous, cruell Iezebel be ſprinkles the walls, and pauement with her bloud; and now thoſe braines that deuiſed miſchiefe againſt the ſeruants of God, are ſtrawed vpon the ſtones; and ſhe that inſulted vpon the Prophets, is trampled vpon by the horſes heeles: The wicked is kept for the day deſtruction, and ſhall be brought forth to the day of wrath. Iobe 21.

Death puts an end commonly to the higheſt diſpleaſure. He that was ſeuere in the execution of the liuing, is mercifull in the ſepulture of the dead; Goe ſee now this curſed woman, and burie her, for ſhe is a Kings daughter; She that vpbraided Iehu with the name of Zimri, ſhall be interred by Iehu as Omries daughter in law, as a Sydonian Princeſſe; Somewhat muſt be yeelded to humanitie; ſomewhat to State.

The dogs haue preuented Iehu in this purpoſe, and haue giuen her a liuing toomb more ignoble, then the worſt of the earth; Onely the ſcull, hands, and feete of that vaniſhed carkaſſe yet remaine; The ſcull which was the roofe of all her wicked deuices, the hands and feete which were the executioners; theſe ſhall remaine as the monuments of thoſe ſhamefull exequies: that future times ſeeing theſe fragments of a body, might ſay, the dogges were worthy of the reſt; Thus Iezebel is turned to dung, and dogges meat; Eliah is verified, Naboth is reuenged! Izreel is purged, Iehu is zealous, and in all, God is iuſt.

IEHV killing the ſonnes of AHAB, and the Prieſts of BAAL.

THere were two prime Cities of the Ten Tribes, which were the ſet Courts of the Kingdome of Iſrael; Samaria and Iezreel; The chiefe palace of the kingdome was Iezreel; the mother City ie of the Kingdome, was Samaria; Iehu is poſſeſſed of the one, without any ſword drawne againſt him Iezreel willingly changes the maſter, yeelding it ſelfe to the victor of two Kings, to the auenger of Iezebel; the next care is Samaria; Either pollcie, or force ſhall fetch in that head of the Tribes. 2. Kings 10.

The plentifull iſſue of Princes is no ſmall aſſurance to the people; Ahab had ſonnes enough to furniſh the Thrones of all the neighbour nations, to mainetaine the hopes of ſucceſſion, to all times; How ſecure did he thinke the perpetuation of his poſteritie, when he ſaw ſeuentie ſons from his owne loynes? Neither was this Royall iſſue truſted, either to weake walls, or to one roofe; but to the ſtrong bulwarkes of Samaria, and therein to the ſeuerall guards of the chiefe Peeres; It was the wiſe care of their parents not to haue them obnoxious to the danger of a common miſ-cariage, or, of thoſe emulations which wait vpon the cloyedneſſe of an vndiuided conuerſation; but to order their ſeperation ſo, as one may reſcue others from the perill of aſſault, as one may reſpect other out of a familiar ſtrangeneſſe: Had Ahab and Iezebel beene as wiſe for their ſoules, as they were for their ſeed, both had proſpered.

Iehu is yet but in his firſt act; If all the ſonnes of Ahab bleed not, the propheſie is vnanſwered; There ſhall be no need of his ſword, his penne ſhall worke all this ſlaughter. He writes a Challenge to Samaria, and therein to the guardians of the ſons of Ahab; daring them, out of the confidence in their defenced Citie, in their charets, and horſes, in their aſſociats and armes, to ſet vp the beſt of their maſters ſonnes, on his fathers throne, and to fight for his ſucceſſion.

All the Gouernours of Ahabs children conſpire in one common feare; no doubt there wanted not in that numerous brood of Kings, ſome great ſpirits that if, at leaſt they attained to the notice of this deſigne, longed for a reuenge, and ſuggeſted counſels of reſolution to their cowardly guardians; Shall an audacious vſurper runne thus away with the Crowne of Iſrael? Shall the bloud of Iezebel bee thus traitrouſly ſpilt, thus willfully forgotten? O Iſraelites, can you be ſo baſe, as to be ruled by my fathers ſeruant? Where are the merits of Ahab, and Iehoram? What is become of the loyall courage of Iſrael? Doubtleſſe, ye ſhall not want able ſeconds to your valour; Do ye thinke the royall and potent alliances of our mother Iezebel; and the remaining heyres of Iudah, can draw backe their hands from your aide? Will they indure to ſwallow ſo cruell an indignitie? Stir vp your aſtoniſhed fortitude, O ye Nobles of Iſrael; redeeme your bleeding honour, reuenge this trecherous conſpirator, and eſtabliſh the right of the vndoubted heires of your Soueraignes; But as warme clothes to a dead man, ſo are the motions of valour to a fearefull heart: Behold two Kings ſtood not before him, how then ſhall we ſtand.

Feare affrights it ſelfe rather then it will want bugs of terror: It is true: Two Kings fell before Iehu; but, two Kings vnarmed, vnguarded; Had not the ſurprizall of Iehu taken aduantage of the vnſuſpitious nakedneſſe of theſe two Princes, his victorie had not beene thus successefull, thus easie. Halfe one of those two Kings, vpon aduertisement and preparation, had abated the furie of that hot Leader. It is the fashion of feare to represent vnto vs alwayes the worst, in euery euent: not looking at the inequalitie of the aduantages, but the miserie of the successe: as contrarily, it is the guise of faith, and valour, by the good issue of one enterprise to raise vp the heart to an expectation and assurance of more.

These mens hearts are dead with their Kings, neither dare entertaine the hope of a safe and prosperous resistance, but basely returne, We are thy seruants, and will do all that thou shalt bid vs, he will not make any King; doe thou that which is good in thine eyes.

Well may Iehu thinke, these men which are thus disloyall to their charge, cannot be faithfull to me; It is their feare that drawes them to this obseruation: Were they not cowards, they would not be traitors to their Princes, subiects to me: I may vse their hands, but I will not trust them: It is a thankelesse obedience that is grounded vpon feare; there can be no true fidelitie without loue, and reuerence. Neither is it other betwixt God and vs; if out of a dread of hell we be officious, who shall thanke vs for these respects to our selues?

As one that had tasted alreadie the sweetnesse of a resolute expedition, Iehu writes backe instantly, If ye be mine, and if ye will hearken vnto my voyce; take ye the heads of the men your Masters sonnes, and come to me to Iezreel to morrow this time. Valiant Iehu was so well acquainted with the nature of feare, that he well knew this passion once growne desperate, would be readie to swallow all conditions: so farre therefore doth his wisedome improue it, as to make these Peeres his executioners; who presently vpon the receit of his charge turne cruell, and by a ioynt consent fetch off the seuentie heads of those Princes, whom they vndertooke to guard, whom they had flattered with the hopes of greater honour.

No doubt, but amongst so many sonnes of Ahab, some had so demeaned themselues, that they had won zealous professions of loue from their guardians: Except perhaps death stole vpon them in sleepe, what teares, what intreaties, what coniurations must here needs haue beene?

What haue wee done, O ye Peeres of Israel, that might deserue this bloudie measure? We are the sonnes of Ahab, therefore haue ye hitherto professed to obserue vs; what change is this? why should that which hath hitherto kept you loyall, now make you cruell? If this the reward of the long peaceable gouernement of of our father? are these the Trophees of Ahabs victories against Benhadad, Iehorams against Hazael? If wee may not raigne, yet at least, let vs liue: Or if wee must die; why will your hands be imbrued in that bloud, which ye had wont to terme royall, and sacred? Why will ye of Tutors turne murtherers? All pleas are in vaine to them that are deafned with their owne feares. Perhaps these expostulations might haue fetched some dewes of pitie from the eyes, and kisses from the lips of these vnfaithfull Tutors, but cannot preuent the stroke of death; These Crocodiles weepe vpon those, whom they must kill: and if their owne sonnes had beene in the place of Ahabs, doubtlesse they had beene sacrificed to the will of an vsurper, to the parents safetie: It is ill relying vpon timorous natures; vpon euery occasion those crazie reeds will breake, and runne into our hands. How worthy were Ahab and Iezebel of such friends? They had beene euer false to God, how should men be true to them? They had sould themselues to worke wickednesse, and now they are requited with a mercenarie fidelitie: for a few lines haue these men sold all the heads of Ahabs posteritie: could euer the policy of Iezebel haue reacht so farre, as to suspect the possibilitie of the extirpation of so ample an issue in one night, by the hands of her trustiest subiects?

Now she that by her letter sent to the Elders of Iezreel, shed the bloud of Naboth and his sonnes, hath the bloud of all her sonnes shed by a letter sent from

Iezerel to the Elders of Samaria. At laſt, God will be ſure to come out of the debt of wicked ſinners, and will pay them with that coyne, which is both moſt proper, and leaſt lookt for.

Early in the morning, in that gate of Iezreel where Ahab had paſſed many an vniuſt ſentence, is preſented vnto Iehu, the fearefull pledge of his ſoueraignte, ſeuentie gaſtly heads of the ſonnes of Ahab.

Some carnall eye that had ſeene ſo many young and ſmooth faces beſmeared with bloud, would haue melted into compaſſion, bemoning their harmeleſſe age, their vnlooked end: It is not for the iuſtice of God to ſtand at the barre of our corrupted iudgement. Except we include ſome grandchildren of Ahab within this number, none of theſe died before they were ſeaſoned with horrible Idolatrie; or if they had, they were in the loynes of Ahab when he ſold himſelfe to worke wickedneſſe; and now it is iuſt with God to puniſh Ahabs wickedneſſe in this fruit of his loynes. The holy ſeueritie of God in the reuenge of ſinne ſometimes goes ſo farre that our ignorance is readie to miſtake it for crueltie.

The wonder and horror of thoſe two heapes hath eaſily drawne together the people of Iezreel: Iehu meets them in that ſeat of publique iudgement; and finding much amazednеſſe and paſſionate confuſion in their faces; he cleares them, and ſends them to the true originall of theſe ſudden and aſtoniſhing maſſacres.

Howeuer his owne conſpiracie, and the cowardly treacherie of the Princes of Iſrael had beene (not without their hainous ſinne) the viſible meanes of this iudgement, yet he directs their eyes to an higher authoritie; the iuſt decree of the Almightie, manifeſted by his ſeruant Eliah; who euen by the willing ſinnes of men can moſt wiſely, moſt hoſtilely fetch about his moſt righteous and bleſſed purpoſes.

If the Peeres of Samaria out of a baſe feare, if Iehu out of an ambition of raigning ſhed the foule bloud of Ahabs poſteritie; the ſinne is their owne, but in the meane time the act is no other then what the infinite iuſtice of God would iuſtly worke by their miſ-intentions. Let theſe Iſraelites but looke vp from earth to heauen, theſe tragicall changes cannot trouble them; thither Iehu ſends them; wiping off the enuie of all this bloud, by the warrant of the diuine preordination: In obedience whereunto he ſends after theſe heires of Ahab, all his kinsfolkes, fauorites, prieſts that remained in Iezreel: and now hauing cleared theſe coaſts, he haſts to Samaria: whom ſhould he meet with, in the way, but the brethren of Ahaziah, King of Iudah; they are going to viſit their cozens the ſonnes of Ahab: This young troupe was thinking of nothing but iollitie, and courtly entertainement, when they meet with death: So ſuddenly, ſo ſecretly had Iehu diſpatched theſe bold executions, that theſe Princes could imagine no cauſe of ſuſpition: How could they thinke it might be dangerous to be knowne for the brethren of Ahaziah, or friends to the brethren of Iehoram? The iuſt prouidence of the Almightie hath brought all this coule vnder one net; Iehu thinkes it not ſafe to let go ſo many auengers of Ahaziahs bloud; ſo many corriuals of his Soueraignte. The vnhappie affinitie of Iehoſophat with Ahab is no leſſe guiltie of this ſlaughter, then Iehues ambition; This match by the inoculation of one bud, hath tainted all the ſap of the houſe of Iudah. The two and fortie brethren of Ahaziah are therefore ſent after the ſeuentie ſonnes of Ahab; that they may ouertake them in death, whom they came to viſit; God will much leſſe brooke Idolatrie from the loines, of a Iehoſophat: Our entireneſſe with wicked men feoffes vs both in their ſinnes and iudgements.

Doubtleſſe, many Iſraelites that were deuoted to the family and allies of Ahab, lookt (what they durſt) awry at this common effuſion of royall bloud; yet in the worſt of the depraued neſſe of Iſrael, there were ſome which both drouped vnder the deplored Idolatry of the times, and congratulated to Iehu this ſeuere vindication of Gods inheritance: Amongſt the reſt, Ionadab the ſonne of Rechab was moſt most eminent. That man was by descent deriued from Iethro; a Midianite by nation, but incorporated into Israel; a man, whose pietie, and strict conuersation did both teach, and shame those twelue Tribes to which he was ioyned; Hee was the author of an austere rule of ciuilitie to his prosteritie; to whom he debarred the vse of wine, cities, possessions: This old and rough friend of Iehu, (out of his mouing habitations) meets him, and applauds his successe; He that allowed not wine to his seed, allowes the bloud of Ahabs seed poured out, by the hand of Iehu; He that shun'd the citie, is carried in Iehues charet, to the palace of Samaria.

How easily might Iehu haue beene deceiued? Many a one professes vprightnesse, who yet is all guile: Ionadabs carriage hath beene such, that his word merits trust: It is a blessing vpon the plaine-hearted, that they can be beleeued. Honest Ionadab is admitted to the honor of Iehues seat; and called (in stead of manie) to witnesse the zeale of the new annointed King of Israel.

Whiles Iehu had to do with Kings, his cunning and his courage held equall pace together; but now that he is to deale with idolatrous priests, his wile goes alone, and preuailes: He calls the people together, and dissembling his intentions, sayes, Ahab serued Baal a little, but Iehu shall serue him much: Now therefore call vnto me all the Prophets of Baal, all his seruants, and all his priests, let none bee wanting: for I haue a great sacrifice to doe to Baal: whosoeuer shall be wanting, hee shall not liue.

What a dead paleneſſe was there now in the faces of those few true-hearted Israelites, that looked for an happie restauration of the Religion of God? How could they chooſe but thinke; Alas, how are we fallen from our hopes? Is this the change we lookt for? was it onely ambition that hath set this edge vpon the sword of Iehu? It was not the person of Ahab that we disliked but the sinnes: If those must still succeed; what haue we gained? Woe be to vs, if onely the author of our miserie be changed, not the condition, not the cause of our misery.

On the other side, what insultations and triumphs sounded euery where of the ioyfull Baalites? what glorying of the truth of their profession, because of the successe? what scornes of their deiected opposites? what exprobrations of the disappointed hopes, and predictions of their aduerse Prophets? what promises to themselues of a perpetuitie of Baalisme? How did the dispersed priests of Baal now flocke together, and applaud each others happinesse, and magnifie the deuotions of their new Soueraigne? Neuer had that Idoll so glorious a day as this for the pompe of his seruice; Before, hee was adored singlely in corners, now solemne sacrifices shall be offered to him by all his clients, in the great Temple of the mother Citie of Israel. I can commend the zeale of Iehu, I cannot commend the fraud of Iehu; We may come to our end euen by crooked wayes: He that bad him to smite for him, did not bid him to lie for him: Falsehood, though it bee but tentatiue, is neither needed, nor approued by the God of truth: If policy haue allowed officious vntruths, Religion neuer.

By this deuice, the house of Baal is well furnished, well filled; not one of his Chemarim either might, or would be absent: not one of those which were present, might be vnrobed: False Gods haue euer affected to imitate the true. Euen Baal hath Temples, Alters, Priests, vestments: All religions haue allotted peculiar habits to their highest douotions. Those Vestments which they mis-called sacred are brought forth, and put on for the glorie of this seruice.

Iehu and Ionadab are first carefull that this separation be exact; they search, and see that no seruant of the Lord be crept into that throng: What should a religious Israelite do in the Temple of Baal? Were any such there, hee had deserued their smart, who would partake with their worship; but if curiosity should haue drawne any thither, the mercy of Iehu seekes his rescue: How much more fauorable is the God of mercies in not taking aduantage of our infirmities.

Well might this search haue bred suspition, were it not that in all those Idolatrous

Idolatrous ſacrifices, the firſt care was to auoid the profane: Euen Baal would admit no mixture, how ſhould the true God abide it.

Nothing wanted now, but the ſacrifice: No doubt whole heards and flockes were readie for a pretence of ſome royall hecatombs; whereof ſome had now alreadie ſmoked on their Altars. O Iehu what meanes this dilation? If thou abhorreſt Baal, why didſt thou giue way to this laſt ſacrifice? why didſt thou not cut off theſe Idolaters before this vpſhot of their wickedneſſe? Was it that thou mightſt be ſure of their guiltineſſe? Was it that thier number, together with their ſinne, might be compleate? What acclamations were here to Baal, what ioy in the freedome of their reuiued worſhip: When all on the ſudden, thoſe that had ſacrificed, are ſacrificed; The Souldiers of Iehu by his appointment ruſh in with their ſwords drawne, and turne the temple into a ſlaughter-houſe. How is the tune now changed? What ſhrieking was here? what out-cries? what running from one ſword, to the edge of another? what ſcrambling vp the walls and pillars? what climbing into the windowes? what vaine indeuors to eſcape that death which would not be ſhunned? whether running, or kneeling or proſtrate, they muſt die.

The firſt part of the ſacrifice was Baals, the latter is Gods: The bloud of beaſts was offered in the one, of men in the other; the ſhedding of this was ſo much more acceptable to God, by how much theſe men were more beaſts, then thoſe they ſacrificed. Oh happie obedience; God was pleaſed with a ſacrifice from the houſe of Baal; The Idolaters are ſlaine, the Idols burnt, the houſe of Baal turn'd to a draught (tho euen thus leſſe vncleane, leſſe noyſome, then in the former perfumes;) and in one word, Baal is deſtroyed out of Iſrael.

Who that had ſeene all this zeale for God, would not haue ſaid; Iehu is a true Iſraelite. Yet, hee that rooted out Ahab, would not be rid of Ieroboam: He that deſtroyed Baal, maintained the two Calues of Dan and Bethel. That Idolatrie was of a lower ranke; as being a miſ-worſhip of the true God, whereas the other was a worſhip of the falſe: Euen the eaſier of both is hainous; and ſhall rob Iehu of the praiſe of his vprightneſſe.

A falſe heart may laudably quit it ſelfe of ſome one groſſe ſinne, and in the meane time hugge ſome leſſer euill that may condemne it: As a man recouerd of a Feuer,, may die of a Iaundis, or a Dropſie. Wee looſe the thanke of all, if we wilfully fault in one.

It is an entire goodneſſe that God cares for: Perhaps (ſuch is the bountie of our God) a partiall obedience may be rewarded with a temporall bleſſing; (as Iehues ſeueritie to Ahab ſhall carrie the crowne to his ſeed for foure generations) but we can neuer haue any comfortable aſſurance of an eternall retribution, if our hearts and wayes be not perfit with God. Woe be to vs, O God, if we be not all thine: we cannot but euerlaſtingly depart from thee, if wee depart not from euery ſinne: Thou haſt purged our hearts from the Baal of our groſſe Idolatries, oh cleare vs from the golden Calues of our pettie-corruptions alſo; that thou maiſt take pleaſure in our vprightneſſe; and may reape the ſwete comforts of thy glorious remuneration.

ATHALIAH.

Athaliah and Ioash.

2. Kings 11., & 12. And 2. Chron. 23. & 24.

OH the wofull ruines of the house of good Iehoſaphat: Iehu hath ſlaine two and fortie of his iſſue; Athaliah hopes to root out the reſt: This daughter of Ahab was not like to be other then fatall to that holy Line; One drop of that wicked bloud was enough both to impure, and ſpill all the reſt which affinitie had mixed with it.

It is not vnlike that Ahaziah betaking himſelfe to the ſocietie of Iehorams warres, committed the ſway of his Scepter to his mother Athaliah. The daughter of Iezebel cannot but be plotting: when ſhe heares of the death of Ahaziah, and his brethren, inflicted by the heauie hand of Iehu, ſhe ſtraight caſts for the Kingdome of Iudah: The true heires are infants, their minoritie giues her both colour of rule, and oportunitie of an eaſie extirpation. Perhaps, her ambition was not more guiltie then her zeale of Baaliſme: ſhe ſaw Iehu out of a deteſtation of Idolatrie, trampling on the bloud of Iehoram, Iezebel, Aaziah, the ſonnes of Ahab, the brethren of Ahaziah, the prieſts and prophets of Baal; and in one word, triumphing in the deſtruction both of Ahab, and his Gods out of Iſrael: and now ſhe thinkes, Why ſhould not I deſtroy Iehoſaphat, and his God out of Iudah?

Who euer ſaw an Idolater that was not cruell? Athaliah muſt needs let out ſome of her owne bloud, out of the throat of Ahaziahs ſonnes; yet ſhee ſpares not to ſhed it out of a thirſt of ſoueraigntie. O God how worthy of wonder are thy iuſt and mercifull diſpenſations? In that thou ſuffereſt the ſeed of good Iehoſaphat to be deſtroyed by her hand, in whoſe affinitie he offended, and yet ſaueſt one branch of this ſtocke of Iehoſaphat, for the ſake of ſo faithfull a progenitor.

Wicked Athaliah, couldſt thou thinke God would ſo farre forget his Seruant Dauid (though no other of thoſe loynes had ſeconded his vertues) as to ſuffer all his ſeed to be rooted out of the earth? This vengeance was for thy father Ahab; The man according to Gods owne heart ſhall haue a lineall heire to ſucceed in his Throne, when thou and thy fathers houſe ſhall haue vaniſhed into forgetfulneſſe.

For this purpoſe hath the wiſe prouidence of God ordained a Iehoſheba, and matcht her in the prieſtly Tribe: Such reuerence did Iehoram, King of Iudah (though degenerated into the Idolatry of his father in law Ahab) beare to this ſacred function, that he marries his daughter to Iehoiada the Prieſt. Euen Princeſſes did not then ſcorne the bed of thoſe that ſerued at Gods Altar: Why ſhould the Goſpel poure contempt vpon that which the Law honoured?

That good Lady had too much of Iehoſaphat in her, to ſuffer the vtter extirpation of that royall ſeed; She could not doubtleſſe, without the extreme danger of her owne life, ſaue the life of her nephew Ioaſh; With what a louing boldneſſe doth ſhe aduenture to ſteale him from amongſt thoſe bleeding carkaſſes, in the chamber of death? Her match gaue her oportunitie to effect that, which both nature, and Religion moued her to attempt: neither know I, whether more to wonder at the cunning of the deuice, or the courage of the enterpriſe, or the ſecreſie of the concealement, or the happineſſe of the ſucceſſe: Certainly, Athaliah was too cruelly-carefull to forget this ſo late borne ſonne of Ahaziah; of all the reſt, his age would not ſuffer him to be out of her eye: In all likelihood therefore, ſhee muſt needs needs haue miſſed ſo noted a corps, had there not beene a ſubſtitution of ſome other dead child in his roome: In that age, the fauour is not ſo diſtinguiſhable, eſpecially of a dead face. Without ſome pious deceit this worke could neuer haue beene effected; Elſe, had the child beene ſecretly ſubduced, and miſſed by his bloudie grand-mother, her perpetuall iealouſie had both expected a ſuruiuing heire, and continued a curious, and vnauoidable ſearch: both which were now ſhunned at once, whilſt Athaliah reckons him for dead, whom Iehoſheba hath preſerued. Miſchiefe ſometimes failes of thoſe appointments, wherein it thinkes to haue made the ſureſt worke; God laughes in heauen at the plots of Tyrants; and befooles them in their deepeſt proiects. He had ſaid to Dauid, Of the fruit of thy body will I ſet vpon thy ſeate; In vaine ſhall earth and hell conſpire to fruſtrate it.

Sixe yeares hath Ioaſh, and his nurſe beene hid in a cloſe cell of the Temple: Thoſe roomes were deſtin'd onely to the holy Tribe; yet now reioyce to harbour ſuch a gueſt; The rigour of the ordinary Law muſt yeeld to caſes of ſo important neceſſitie.

All this could not poſſibly be done and continued without the priuitie of manie faithfull Prieſts and Leuites; who were as carefull to keepe this counſell, as hopefull of the iſſue of it: It is not hard for many honeſt hearts to agree in a religious ſecreſie; Needs muſt thoſe lips beſhut, which God hath ſealed vp.

Iudah had not beene vſed to ſuch a yoke; long had it groned vnder the tyrannie not of a woman onely, but an Idolatrous Sydonian: If any of that ſexe might haue claimed that Scepter, none had ſo much right to it, as Iehoſheba her ſelfe; But good Iehoiada the Prieſt, who had rather to be a loyall guardian to the King, then an husband to a Queene, now findes time to ſet on foot the iuſt title of Ioaſh; and to put him into the miſ-vſurped throne of his father Ahaziah.

In the ſeuenth yeare, therefore, he ſends for the Captaines, and the Guard; and hauing ſworne them ſecrecie; by vndoubted witneſſes makes faith vnto them of the truth of their natiue Prince, thus happily reſcued from the bloudie knife of his mercileſſe Grandmother; marſhals the great buſineſſe of his Inauguration; giues euery one his charge; ſets euery one his ſtation; and ſo diſpoſes of his holy forces, as was moſt needfull for the ſafetie of the King, the reuenge of the Vſurper, the preuention of tumults, the eſtabliſhment of the Crowne vpon the owners head in Peace and Ioy.

There was none of all theſe agents who did not hold the buſineſſe to be his owne; Euery true ſubiect of Iudah was feelingly intereſſed in this ſeruice; neither was there any of them, who was not ſecretly heart-burned all this while, with the hatefull gouernement of this Idolatrous Tyranneſſe: And now this inward fire is glad to find a vent; How gladly do they addreſſe themſelues to this welcome imploiment? The greateſt part of this ſecret band were Leuites, who might therefore both meet together with leaſt ſuſpition, and be more ſecurely truſted by Iehoiada, vnder whom they ſerued; Euen that holy Prieſt of God in ſtead of teaching the Law, ſets the guard, orders the Captaines, ranges the troupes of Iudah; and in ſtead of a Cenſer, brings forth the Speares and Shields of Dauid; the Temple is for the preſent, a Field, or an Artillery-yard; and the Ephods are turned into harneſſe. That houſe, in the rearing whereof not the noyſe of an hammer might be heard, now admits of the claſhing of armour, and the ſecret murmurs of ſome militarie atchieuement. No circumſtances either of place, or calling, are ſo punctuall, as that publique neceſſitie may not diſpenſe with their alteration.

All things are now ready for this ſolemnitie: Each man reioyces to fixe vpon his owne footing; and longs to ſee the face of their long-concealed Soueraigne; and vowes his bloud to the vindication of the common libertie, to the puniſhment of a cruell intruder: Now Iehoiada brings forth vnto them the Kings Sonne, and preſents him to the Peeres, and people; Hardly can the multitude containe it ſelfe from ſhouting out too ſoone: one ſees in his countenance the features of his father, Ahaziah; another of his Grand-father, Iehoram; a third profeſſes to diſcerne in him ſome lines, and faſhion of his great grand-father Iehaſaphat; all find in his face the naturall impreſſions of Maieſtie; and reade in it the hopes, yea the propheſies of their future happineſſe. Not with more ioy, then ſpeed, doth Iehoiada accompliſh all the rites of the Coronation. Before that young King could know what was done to him, he is anointed, crowned, preſented with the booke of the Law: Thoſe ceremonies were inſtructiue; and no doubt, Iehoiada failed not to comment vpon them in due time, to that royall Pupill.

The Oyle, wherewith he was anointed, ſignified his deſignation to that high ſeruice; and thoſe indowments from heauen that might inable him to ſo great a function.

The Crowne, wherewith he was adorned, ſignified that glorie and maieſtie which ſhould both incourage, and attend his Princely cares.

The booke of the Teſtimonie ſignified the diuine rules and directions, whereto he muſt frame his heart and actions, in the weilding of that Crowne, in the improuement of that oyle.

Theſe three, the Oyle, the Crowne, the Teſtimonie, that is, inward powers, outward magnificence, true pietie and iuſtice make vp a perfect Prince; None of theſe may be wanting; If there be not a due calling of God; and abilities meet for that greatneſſe, the Oyle faileth: If there be not a Maieſticke grace and royaltie, that may command reuerence, the Crowne is miſſing; If there bee not a carefull reſpect to the Law of God, as the abſolute guide of all counſels, and determinations, the Teſtimonie is neglected; all of them concurring, make both King and people happy.

Now, it is time for the people to clap their hands; and by their lowd acclamations to witneſſe their ioy; which muſt needs breake forth with ſo much more force, by how much it was longer, vpon feares and policie, ſuppreſſed.

The Court and Temple were neere together; Howeuer it was with Athaliah, and the late reuolted Princes of Iudah, according to the common word, the neerer to the Church, the further from God; their religious predeceſſors held it the greateſt commoditie of their houſe, that it neighboured vpon the houſe of God; From her palace might Athaliah eaſily heare the ioyfull ſhouts of the multitude, the lowd noiſe of the Trumpets; and as aſtoniſhed with this new tumult of publike gratulations, ſhe comes running into the Temple: Neuer had her foot trod vpon that holy pauement, till now that ſhe came to fetch a iuſt reuenge from that God whoſe worſhip ſhe had contemned.

It fell out well, that her ſudden amazednesſe called her forth, without the attendance of any ſtrong guard; whoſe ſide-taking might haue made that quarrell mutually bloudie: She ſoone heares and ſees what ſhe likes not; her eare meets with, God ſaue the King; her eye meets with the vnlooked for heire of the Kingdome, ſitting on his throne, crowned, and robed, in the royall faſhion; guarded with the Captaines and ſouldiers, proclaimed by the Trumpeters, acclamed and applauded by the people.

Who can ſay whether this ſight draue her more neere to frenzie, or death? How could it be otherwiſe, when thoſe great ſpirits of hers, that had beene long vſed to an vncontrolled ſoueraignty, find themſelues ſo inexpectedly ſuppreſſed.

She now rends her cloathes, and cryes, Treaſon, treaſon, as if that voyce of hers could ſtill command all hearts, all hands; as if one breath of hers were powerfull enough to blow away all theſe new deſignes: Oh Athaliah, to whom doſt thou complaine thy ſelfe? they are thy iuſt executioners wherewith thou art incompaſſed; If it be treaſon to ſet vp the true heire of Ahaziah, thou appealeſt to thy Traitors. The treaſon was thine, theirs is iuſtice; The time is now come of thy reckonings for all thy royall bloud of Iudah, which thine ambition ſhed; wonder rather at thy patience of this long forbearance, then the rigor of this execution.

There needs no formall ſeat of Iuſtice in ſo apparent offence, Iehoiada paſſes the ſentence of death vpon her; Haue her forth of the ranges; Let her not be ſlaine in the houſe of the Lord; and him that followeth her, kill with the ſword.

Had not this vſurpation beene palpable, Iehoiada would not haue preſumed to intermedle; Now being both the Prieſt of God, and Vnckle and Protector to the lawfull King, he doth that, out of the neceſſitie of the ſtate, which his infant Soueraigne (if he could haue beene capable of thoſe thoughts) would haue deſired.

Violent hands are laid vpon Athaliah, whom no doubt a proud and furious diſdaine of ſo quicke a charge, and of ſo rough an vſage made miſerably impatient; Now ſhe frownes, and cals, and ſhrieks and commands, and threatens, and reuiles, and intreats in vaine; and dies with as much ill will from her ſelfe, as ſhe liued with the ill will of her repining ſubiects.

I ſee not any one man of all her late flatterers, that followes her, either for pittie, or reſcue; Euery man willingly giues her vp to iuſtice; Not one ſword is drawne in her defence; Not one eye laments her. Such is the iſſue of a tyrannicall miſ-gouernment; that which is obeyed not without ſecret hate, is loſt not without publique ioy.

How like is Athaliah to her mother Iezebel, as in conditions and carriage, ſo euen in death: Both killed violently both killed vnder their owne walles; both ſlaine with Treaſon in their mouthes; both ſlaine in the entrance of a changed gouernment: One trod on by the horſes, the other ſlaine in the horſe-gate. Both paid their owne bloud for the innocent bloud of others.

How ſuddenly, how eaſily is Iudah reſtored to it ſelfe, after ſo long, and ſo fearefull a deprauation; The people ſcarce beleeue their owne eyes, for the wonder of this happie change; neither know I whether they be more ioyed in the ſight of their new King, thus ſtrangely preſerued, or in the ſight of Iehoiada, that had preſerued him.

No man can enuie the protection of the young King vnto him, by whoſe meanes he liues and raignes: That holy man cares onely to improue his authoritie, to the common good: He makes a couenant betweene the Lord, and the King; and the people: and after ſo long and dangerous a disjunction, reunites them to each other. Their reuiued zeale beſtirs it ſelfe, and breakes downe the Temples, and Altars, and Images of Baal, and ſacrifices his idolatrous Prieſt; Shortly, both Ahab, and Baal is deſtroyed out of Iudah.

The Scepter of Iudah is changed from a woman, to a child; but, a Child trained vp, and tutored by Iehoiada; This minoritie ſo guided was not inferior to the mature age of many predeceſſors. Happie is that land, the non-age of whoſe Princes falls into holy and iuſt hands. Yet euen theſe holy and iuſt hands came ſhort of what they might haue done; The high places remained ſtill: Thoſe altars were erected to the true God, but in a wrong place: It is maruell if there be not ſome blemiſhes found in the beſt gouernment: I doubt Iehoiada ſhall once abuy it deare that he did not his vtmoſt.

But for the maine, all was well with Iudah, in all the dayes of Iehoiada; euen after that Ioaſh was growne paſt his pupillage: He that was the Tutor to his infancie, was the councellor of his ripe age; and was equally happie in both: How pleaſing was it to that good High Prieſt, to be commanded by that charge of his in the buſines of God? The yong King giues order to the Prieſts, for the collection of large ſummes, to the repayring of the breaches of Gods houſe. It becomes him well to take care of that, which was the nurſerie of his infancie: And now, after three and twentie yeares hee expoſtulates with his late Guardian,

Oh gracious and happie viciſſitude; Iehoiada the Prieſt had ruled the infancie of King Ioaſh in matters of ſtate; and now Ioaſh the king commands aged Iehoiada the Prieſt in matter of deuotion. In the affaires of God, the action is the Prieſts, the ouer-ſight and coaction is the Princes: By the carefull indeuor of both, Gods houſe is repaired, his ſeruice flouriſheth.

But alas, that it may too well appeare, that the ground of this motion was not altogether inward, no ſooner doth the life of Iehoiada ceaſe, then the deuotion of Ioaſh begins to languiſh: and after ſome languour, dyes.

The benefit of a truly religious Prelate, or Statſ-man, is not knowne till his loſſe.

Now ſome idolatrous Peeres of Iudah haue ſoone miſ-carried the King from the Houſe of the Lord God of their Fathers, to ſerue Groues and Idols. Yea, whether goe we wretched men, if we be left by our Maker? King Ioaſh is turned, not idolater onely, but perſecutor; yea, (which is yet more horrible to conſider) perſecutor of the ſonne of that Iehoiada to whom he owes his owne life, Zechariah his Coſen german, his foſter-brother, the holy iſſue of thoſe parents, by whom Ioaſh liues, and raignes, for the conſcionable rebuke of the idolatry of Prince and people, is vniuſtly, and cruelly murthered by that vnthankfull hand: How poſſible is it for faire and Saint-like beginnings to ſhut vp in monſtrous impieties? Let him that thinkes he ſtands, take heed leſt he fall. When did God euer put vp ſo foule ingratitude to himſelfe, to his ſeruants? O Ioaſh, what eyes can pittie the fearefull deſtruction of thee and thy Iudah?

If ye haue forgotten the kindneſſe of Iehoiada, your vnkindneſſe to Iehoiada ſhall not be forgotten: A ſmall armie of Syrians came vp againſt Iudah and Ieruſalem, and deſtroyed all the Princes of the people, and ſent all the ſpoyle of them to Damaſcus. Now Hazael reuenges this quarrell of God, and his anointed; and plagues that people which made themſelues vnworthy to be the Lords inheritance.

And what becomes of Ioaſh? He is left in great diſeaſes, when his owne ſeruants conſpired againſt him for the bloud of the ſonnes of Iehoiada, and ſlew him on his bed, and hee died; and they buried him not in the Sepulcher of the Kings. Dying Zechariah had ſaid in the bitterneſſe of his departing ſoule, The Lord looke vpon it, and require it: I confeſſe I had rather to haue heard him ſay, The Lord paſſe it ouer and remit it; ſo ſaid Steuen; ſuch difference there is betweene a Martyre of the Law, and of the Goſpell: although I will hope the zeale of iuſtice, not the vncharitable heate of reuenge drew forth this word: God heares it, and now giues an account of his notice; Thus doth the Lord require the bloud of Iehoiadaes ſonne; euen by the like vnthankfull hand of the obliged ſeruants of Ioaſh He that was guiltie of abhominable Idolatry, yet (as if God meant to waue that challenge) is called to reckoning for his cruell vnthankfulneſſe to Iehoiada; This crime ſhall make him odious aliue, and ſhall abandon him dead from the ſepulcher of his fathers; as if this laſt royaltie were too good for him, who had forgotten the law of humanitie. Some vices are ſuch, as Nature ſmiles vpon, though frowned at by diuine Iuſtice: Others are ſuch, as euen Nature it ſelfe abhorres; ſuch is this of ingratitude, which therefore carries ſo much more deteſtation from God, as it is more odious euen to them that haue blotted out the image of God.

Ioash with Elisha dying.

THe two Kingdomes of Iudah and Israel how euer diuided both in gouernement, and affection, yet loued to interchange the names of their Kings; Euen Israel also had their Ioash, no better then that of Iudah; he was not more the father of a later Ieroboam, then (in respect of mis-worship) he was the sonne of the first Ieroboam, who made Israel to sinne; Those Calues of Dan and Bethel, out of a politicke mis-deuotion, besotted all the succession of the ten vsurped Tribes: yet euen this Idolatrous King of Israel comes downe to visit the sicke bed of Elisha, and weepes vpon his face. 2. Kings 13.

That holy Prophet was neuer any flatterer of Princes, neither spared he inuectiues against their most plausible sinnes: yet King Ioash, that was beaten by his reproofes, washes that face with the teares of loue, and sorrow, which had often frowned vpon his wickednesse.

How much difference there was betwixt the Ioash of Israel, and the Ioash of Iudah? That of Iudah hauing beene preserued and nurtured by Iehoiada the Priest, after all professions of dearenesse shuts vp in the vnkinde murther of his sonne; and that meerely for the iust reproofe of his owne Idolatry: This of Israel hauing beene estranged from the Prophet Elisha, and sharply rebuked for the like offence, makes loue to his dying reprouer, and be-dewes his pale face with his teares: Both were bad enough, but this of Israel was, how euer vicious, yet good-natur'd: That of Iudah added to his wickednesse, an ill disposition, a dogged humor, There are varieties euen of euill men; some are worse at the root, others at the branch; some more ciuilly harmelesse, others fouler in moralitie, According to the exercise of the restraining grace, naturall men doe either rise, or fall in their ill.

The longest day must haue his euening: Good Elisha, that had liued some nintie yeares, a wonder of Prophets, and had out-worne many successions in the thrones of Israel, and Iudah, is now cast vpon the bed of his sicknesse, yea, of his death: That very age might seeme a disease; which yet is seconded with a languishing distemper: It is not in the power of any holinesse to priuiledge vs from infirmitie of bodie, from finall dissolution: He that stretched himselfe vpon his bed, ouer the dead carkasse of the Shunamites sonne, and reuiued it; must now stretch out his owne limbes vpon his sicke bed, and die: He saw his Master Eliah rapt vp suddenly from the earth, and fetcht by a fiery chariot from this vale of mortalitie; himselfe must leasurely wait for his last pangs, in a lingering passage to the same glory. There is not one way appointed to vs, by the diuine prouidence, vnto one common blessednesse: One hath more paine, another hath more speed: Violence snatcheth away one, another by an insensible pace drawes euery day neerer to his terme: The wisedome and goodnesse of God magnifies it selfe in both: Happie is he that after due preparation, is past through the gates of death, ere he be aware; Happie is he that by the holy vse of long sicknesse is taught to see the gates of death a farre off, and addressed for a resolute passage: The one dies like Eliah, the other like Elisha, both blessedly,

The time was, when a great King sent to Elisha to know if he should recouer; now

now the King of Iſrael, as knowing that Eliſha ſhall not recouer (ſo had his conſumption ſpent him) comes to viſit the dying Prophet; and when his teares would giue him leaue; breakes forth into a paſſionate exclamation, O my father, my father, the chariot of Iſrael and the horſemen thereof. Yet the Calues of Dan and Bethel haue left ſome goodneſſe in Ioaſh; As the beſt man hath ſomething in him worthy of reproofe; ſo the faultieſt hath ſomething commendable. Had not the Spirit of God himſelfe told vs, that Ioaſh did that which was euill in the ſight of the Lord, we had admired this pietie, this reuerent reſpect to the Prophet. The holieſt man could not haue ſaid more: It is poſſible for the clients of a falſe worſhip, to honour (out of another regard) the profeſſors of Truth; From the hand of Eliſha had Iehu the grand-father of Ioaſh receiued his vnction to the Kingdome: this fauour might not be forgotten.

Viſitation of the ſick is a dutie required both by the law of humanitie, and of Religion; Bodily infirmitie is ſad; and comfortleſſe; and therefore needs the preſence, and counſell of friends to relieue it; Although, when wee draw the curtaines of thoſe that are eminently gracious, we do rather fetch (with Ioaſh) then bring a bleſſing.

How ſenſible ſhould we be of the loſſe of holy men, when a Ioaſh ſpends his teares vpon Eliſha? If we be more affected with the foregoing of a naturall friend, or kinſman, then of a noted and vſefull Prophet, it argues more loue to our ſelues, then to the Church of God, then to God himſelfe.

What vſe there was of chariots and horſemen in thoſe warres of the Ancient, all Hiſtories can tell vs: All the ſtrength of the battell ſtood in theſe: There could be neither defence, nor offence, but by them: ſuch was Eliſha vnto Iſrael; The greateſt ſafegard to any nation is the ſanctitie, and faithfulneſſe of their Prophets; without which the Church and State lyes open to vtter deſolation.

The ſame words that Eliſha ſaid of his maſter Eliah, when hee ſaw him taken vp from the earth, doth Ioaſh now ſpeake of Eliſha, neere his diſſolution: O my father, my father, the charets of Iſrael, and the horſemen thereof. The words were good; the teares were pious; but where are the actions? O Ioaſh, if the Prophet were thy father, where was thy filiall obedience? he cri'd downe thy Calues, thou vpheldſt them; he counſell'd thee to good, thou didſt euill in the ſight of the Lord.

If the Prophet were the charets and horſemen of Iſrael, why didſt thou fight againſt his holy doctrine? If thou weepeſt for his loſſe, why didſt thou not weepe for thoſe ſinnes of thine, that procured it?

Had thine hand anſwered thy tongue, Iſrael had beene happie in Eliſha; Eliſha had beene happie in Iſrael, and thee; Words are no good triall of profeſſion: The worſt men may ſpeake well: Actions haue onely the power to deſcry hypocrites.

Yet euen a Ioaſh thus complying, ſhall not goe away vnbleſſed: This outward kindneſſe ſhall receiue an outward retribution; Theſe few drops of warme water ſhed vpon the face of a Prophet, ſhall not loſe their reward; The ſpirit of prophecie forſakes not the death-bed of Eliſha; He calls for bow, and arrowes, and puts them into the hand of Ioaſh, and putting his hands vpon the Kings hand, he bids to ſhoot Eaſtward: and whiles the ſhaft flyes, and lights, he ſayes, The arrow of the Lords deliuerance from Syria; for thou ſhalt ſmite the Syrians in Aphek, till thou haue conſumed them: If the weake and withered hand of the Prophet had not beene vpon the youthfull, and vigorous hand of the King, this bow had beene drawne in vaine; the ſtrength was from the hand of the King, the bleſſing from the hand of the Prophet: He whoſe reall parable hath made the earth to be Syria, the arrow, reuenge, the archer, Ioaſh, hath obtained for his laſt boone from God to Iſrael, that this archer ſhall ſhoot this arrow of reuenge, into the heart of Syria, and wound it to death. When then the hand of the King,

King, and of the Prophet drawes together, there cannot chooſe but ſucceſſe muſt follow.

How readily doth Elisha now make good the words of Ioash? How truly is hee the Charets, and Horſemen of Israel? Israel had not fought without him, much leſſe had beene victorious; If theirs be the indeauour, the ſucceſſe is his: Euen the dying Prophet puts life, and ſpeed into the Forces of Israel, and whiles he is digging his owne graue, is raiſing Trophees to Gods people.

He had receiued kindneſſe from the Syrians; amongſt them was he harbour'd in the dearth; and from ſome of their Nobles, was preſented with rich gifts; but their enmitie to Israel drownes all his priuate reſpects; hee cannot but profeſſe hoſtilitie to the publique enemies of the Church: Neither can he content himſelfe with a ſingle prediction of their ruine. Hee bids Ioash to take the arrowes, and ſmite vpon the ground; he ſets no number of thoſe ſtrokes; as ſuppoſing the frequence of thoſe blowes, which Ioash might well (vpon his former parabolicall act) vnderſtand to be ſignificant. The ſlacke hand of the King ſmites but thriſe. So apt we are to be wanting to our ſelues; ſo coldly do wee execute the commands of God: The ſicke Prophet is not more greeued, then angry at this dull negligence; Doubtleſſe God had reuealed to him (for his laſt gratification) that vpon his feruent prayers, ſo oft as Ioash ſhould voluntarily (after his generall charge) ſmite the earth, ſo oft ſhould Israel ſmite Syria. Eliſhaes zeale doth not languiſh with his body: with a fatherly authoritie he chides him, who had ſtiled him father; not fearing to ſpend ſome of his laſt winde in a milde reproofe, Thou ſhouldeſt haue ſmitten fiue or ſixe times, then thou hadſt ſmitten Syria till thou hadſt conſumed it, whereas now thou ſhalt ſmite Syria but thriſe. Not that the vnchangeable decree of the Almightie meant to ſuſpend it ſelfe vpon the vncertaine iſſue of Ioaſhes will; but, hee that puts this word into the mouth of his Prophet, puts this motion into the hand of the King, which did not more willingly ſtay, then neceſſarily obey that prouidence whereby it was ſtirred. Euen whiles we haue our freeſt choyce, we fall vpon thoſe actions and circumſtances, whereby the iuſt and holy will of our God is brought about. Our verie neglects, our ignorances ſhall fulfill his eternall councells.

Eliſha dies, and is buried; his miracles doe not ceaſe with his life: Who can maruell that his liuing prayers raiſed the ſonne of the Shunamite, when his dead bones raiſe the carkaſſe that touched them. God will be free in his workes; hee that muſt die himſelfe, yet ſhall reuiue another; the ſame power might haue continued life to him, that gaue it by his bones. Israel ſhall well ſee that hee liues, by whoſe vertue, Eliſha was both in life, and death, miraculous: Whiles the Prophet was aliue, the impetration might ſeeme to be his, though the power were Gods; now that he is dead, the bones can challenge nothing, but ſend the wandring Iſraelites to that almightie Agent, to whom it is all one to worke by the quicke, or dead. Were not the men of Israel more dead then the carkaſſe thus buried, how could they chooſe but ſee in this reuiued corps, an embleme of their owne condition? How could they chooſe but thinke, If we adhere to the God of Eliſha, he ſhall raiſe our decaied eſtates, and reſtore our nation to the former glory.

The Sadduces had as yet no being in Israel, with what face could that hereſie euer after looke into the world, when before the birth of it, it was ſo palpably conuinced, with an example of the reſurrection? Intermiſſion of time, and degrees of corruption adde nothing to the impoſſibilitie of our riſing: The bodie that is once cold in death, hath no more aptitude to a reanimation, then that which is moldred into duſt; Onely the diuine power of the Maker muſt reſtore either, can reſtore both: When we are dead, and buried in the graue of our ſinne; it is onely the touch of Gods Prophets, applying vnto vs the death and reſurrection of the Sonne of God, that can put new life into vs; No leſſe true, though

ſpirituall, is the miracle of our raiſing vp from an eſtate of inward corruption, to a life of grace.

Yet all this preuailes not with Iſrael: No bones of Eliſha could raiſe them from their wicked Idolatry: and, notwithſtanding their groſſe ſinnes, Ioaſh their King proſpers: Whether it were for the ſake of Iehu, whoſe grand-child he was; or for the ſake of Eliſha, whoſe face he wept vpon, his hand is notably ſucceſſefull: not onely againſt the ſonne of Hazael, King of Syria, whom he beates out of the Cities of Iſrael; but, againſt Amaziah King of Iudah, whom hee tooke Priſoner, beating downe the verie walls of Ieruſalem, and returning laden with the ſacred, and rich ſpoyle both of the Temple, and Court, to his Samaria.

Oh the depth of the diuine Iuſtice, and wiſedome in theſe outward adminiſtations! The beſt cauſe, the beſt man doth not euer fare beſt: Amaziah did that which was right in the ſight of the Lord; Ioaſh, euill: Amaziah followes Dauid (though not with equall paces) Ioaſh followes Ieroboam, yet is Amaziah ſhamefully foyled by Ioaſh; Whether God yet meant to viſit vpon this King of Iudah, the ſtill-odious vnthankefulneſſe of his father to Iehoiada; or, to plague Iudah for their ſhare in the bloud of Zechariah, and their late reuolt to Idolatry; or, whether Amaziahs too much confidence in his owne ſtrength (which moued his bold challenge to Ioaſh) were thought fit to be thus taken downe, or what euer other ſecret ground of Gods iudgement there might be, it is not for our preſumption to inquire: Who ſo by the euent ſhall iudge of loue, or hatred, ſhall be ſure to runne vpon that woe, which belongs to them that call good euill, and euill good.

What a ſauage peece of Iuſtice it is to put the right, whether of inheritance, or honour, to the deciſion of the ſword, when it is no newes for the better to miſcarrie by the hand of the worſe?

The race is not to the ſwift; the battell is not to the ſtrong; no, not to the good: Perhaps, God will correct his owne by a foyle; perhaps, he will plague his enemy by a victorie. They are onely our ſpirituall combats wherein our faithfull courage is ſure of a crowne.

2. Chron. 26. And 2. Kings 15.

EVen the Throne of Dauid paſſed many changes of good, and euill: Good Iehoſaphat was followed with three ſucceſſions of wicked Princes; and thoſe three, were againe ſucceeded with three others godly, and vertuous; Amaziah for a long time ſhone faire, but at the laſt, ſhut vp in a cloud; The gods of the Edomites marred him; his rebellion againſt God, ſtirr'd vp his peoples rebellion againſt him: The ſame hands that ſlew him, crowned his ſonne Vzziah; ſo as the yong King might imagine it was not their ſpight, that drew violence vpon his father, but his owne wickednesſe; Both early did this Prince raigne, and late; he began at ſixteene; and ſat fiftie two yeares in the Throne of Iudah: They that mutined in the declining age of Amaziah, the father; are obſequious to the child-hood of the ſonne, as if they profeſſed to adore ſoueraintie, whiles they hated lewdneſſe: The vnchanged gouernment of good Princes is the happineſſe, no leſſe of the ſubiects then of themſelues: The hand knowes beſt to guide thoſe reines to which it hath beene inured; and euen meane hackneyes goe on cheerefully in their wonted rode;

A rode; Custome, as it makes euils more supportable, so where it meets with constant minds, makes good things more pleasing and beneficiall.

The wise and holy Prophet Zechariah, was an happie Tutor to the minoritie of King Vzziah; That vessell can hardly miscarrie where a skilfull stereſman sits at the helme: The first praise of a good Prince is to be iudicious, and iust, and pious, in himselfe; the next is, to giue eare, and way, to them that are such: Whiles Zechariah hath the visions of God, and Vzziah takes the counsels of Zechariah, it is hard to say whether the Prophet, or the King, or the State be happier.

God will be in no mans debt; so long as Vzziah sought the Lord, God made him to prosper. Euen what we do out of dutie cannot want a reward: Godlinesse neuer disappointed any mans hopes, oft hath exceeded them. If Vzziah fight against the Philistims, If against the Arabians, and Mehunims; according to his names, the strength, the helpe of the Almightie is with him: The Ammonites come in with presents, and all the neighbour nations ring of the great- B nesse, of the happinesse of Vzziah; his bountie and care makes Ierusalem both strong, and proud of her new Towers; yea the verie Desart must taste of his munificence. Vzziah, Azariah,

The outward magnificence of Princes cannot stand firme, vnlesse it bee built vpon the foundations of prouidence and frugalitie; Vzziah had not been so great a King, if he had not beene so great an husband; he had his flockes in the deserts, and his heards in the plaines; his ploughes in the fields, his vinedressers vpon the mountaines, and in Carmel: neither was this more out of profit, then delight, for he loued husbandrie. Who can contemne those callings for meanenesse, which haue beene the pleasures of Princes?

Hence was Vzziah so potent at home, so dreadfull to his neighbours; his warres had better sinewes then theirs; which of his predecessors was able to maintaine so setled an armie, of more then of three hundred and tenne thousand trained souldiers, well furnished, well fitted for the suddenest occasion? Thrift is the strongest prop of power.

C The greatnesse of Vzziah, and the rare deuices of his artificiall Engines for war, haue not more raised his fame, then his heart: so is he swolne vp with the admiration of his owne strength, and glory, that he breakes againe; How easie it is for the best man to dote vpon himselfe; and to be lifted vp so high, as to lose the sight both of the ground, whence he rises, and of the hand that aduanced him: How hardit is for him that hath inuented strange Engines for the battering of his enemies, to find out any meanes to beate downe his owne proud thoughts? Wise Salomon knew what he did, when he prayed to be deliuered from too much: Lest, said he I be full, and denie thee, and say, Who is the Lord? Vpon this Rocke did the sonne of Salomon runne and split himselfe; His full sayles of prosperitie carrried him into presumption and ruine: what may he not doe? what may he not be? Because hee found his power otherwise vnlimited; oner-ruling in the Court, the Cities, the Fields, the Deserts, the armes, and Magazins, therefore he thinkes he may doe so in the Temple too: as things royall, ciuill, husbandly, militarie passed his hands, so why D should not (thinkes he) sacred also? It is a dangerous indiscretion for a man not to know the bounds of his owne calling: What confusion doth not follow vpon this breaking of the rankes?

Vpon a solemne day, King Vzziah clothes himselfe in Pontificall robes, and in the view of that populous assembly, walkes vp in state, into the Temple of God, and boldly approaching to the Altar of Incense, offers to burne sweet odours vpon it to the God of heauen: Azariah the Priest is sensible of so perillous an incroachment; he therefore attended with foureſcore valiant assistants, of that holy Tribe, hastens after the King, and finding him with the censer in his hand, readie addressed to that sinfull deuotion, stayes him with a free, and graue expostulation: There is no place wherein I could bee sorrie to see thee, O King, but this, where thou art; neither is there any act, that we should grudge thee so much, as this, which is the most sacred; Is it possible that so great an ouersight should fall into such wisedome? Can a religious Prince trained vp vnder an holy Zechariah, after so many yeares zealous profession of pietie, be either ignorant, or regardlesse of those limits, which God hath set to his owne seruices? A

Oh, what meanes this vncouth attempt? Consider O deare Soueraigne, for Gods sake, for thy soules sake, consider where thou art, what thou doest; it is Gods house wherein thou standest, not thine owne; Looke about thee, and see, whether these vailes, these Tables, these Pillars, these Walls, these Panements, haue any resemblance of earth: There is no place in all the world whence thy God hath excluded thee, but onely this; this he hath reserued for his owne vse: And canst thou thinke much to allow one roome as proper to him, who hath not grudged all the rest to thee? But if it be thy zeale of a personall seruice to God, that hath carried thee hither; alas, how canst thou hope to please the Almightie with a forbidden sacrifice? Which of thine holy Progenitors euer dared to tread, where thy foot now standeth? which of them euer put forth their hand to touch this sacred Altar? Thou knowest that God hath set apart, and sanctified his owne attendants; Wherefore serues the Priesthood, if this bee the right of Kings? were it not for the strict prohibition of our God, it could seeme no other then an honour to our profession, that a King should thinke to dignifie himselfe by our employment; but now, knowing the seuere charge of the great King of heauen, we cannot but tremble to see that censer in thine hand; who euer, out of the holy Tribe, hath weilded it vnreuenged? This affront is not to vs, it is to the God whom we serue; In awe of that terrible Maiestie, as thou wouldest auoid some exemplarie iudgement, O King withdraw thy selfe, not without humble deprecations, from this presence; and lay downe that interdicted handfull, with feare and trembling; Bee thou euer a King, let vs bee Priests; The Scepter is thine, let Censers bee ours. B C

What religious heart could do other then relent at so faithfull and iust an admonition? But how hard it is for great persons to yeeld they haue offended? Vzziah must not be faultie; what is done rashly shall be borne out with power; He was wroth; and thus expresseth it: What meanes this saucie expostulation, O ye sons of Leui? how dare ye thus malapertly controll the well-meant actions of your Soueraigne? If ye be Priests, remember that ye are subiects; or if ye will needs forget it, how easie is it for this hand to awake your memorie? What such offence can it be for me to come into that house, and to touch that Altar, which my royall Progenitors haue made, beautified, consecrated? Is the God of this place onely yours? Why do ye thus ambitiously ingrosse Religion? If Princes haue not intermedled with these holy affaires, it was because they would not, not because they might not; When those lawes were made for the Sanctuarie, there were no Kings to grace these diuine ceremonies; yet euen then, Moses was priuiledged. The persons of Princes (if ye know not) are no lesse sacred then your owne. It is your presumption to account the Lords anointed, prophane: Contest with those, whose drie and vnhallowed heads are subiect to your power; For me, I will not aske your leaue to be deuout; Looke ye to your owne Censers, presume not to meddle with mine; in the meane time, can ye thinke this insolence of yours shall escape vnreuenged? Can it stand with the honour of my soueraigntie, to bee thus proudly checked by subiects? God doe so to me and more also, if. Whiles Vzziah yet speakes, God strikes: Ere the words of furie can come forth of his mouth, the leprosie appeares in his D

A his forehead: Leprosie was a most loathsome disease; the forehead is the most conspicuous part: Had this shamefull scurfe broken forth vpon his hand, or foot, or brest, it might haue beene hid from the eyes of men; now the forhead is smitten with this iudgement, that God may proclaime to all beholders, Thus shall it bee done to the man whose arrogance hath thrust him vpon a sacred charge. Publique offences must haue open shame.

It is a dangerous thing to put our selues into the affaires, into the presence of God, vnwarranted; There cannot be a more foolish mespriſion, then, because we are great on earth, to thinke we may be bold with heauen: When Gods messengers cannot preuaile by counsels, intreaties, threats, it is time for God to show his immediate iudgements. Wilfull offenders can expect nothing but a fearefull reuenge.

Now begins Vzziah to be confounded in himselfe; and shame striues with leprosie, for a place in his forehead; The hand of God hath done that in an instant which all the tongues of men had attempted in vaine: There needs no
B further solicitor of his egresse, the sense of his plague sends him forth alone: And now he thinkes; Wretched man that I am, how haue I angred God; and vndone my selfe? I would needs come in like a Priest, and now go forth a Leper: the pride of my heart made me thinke my selfe worthy the presence of a God; Gods iust displeasure hath now made me vnworthy of the presence of men: whiles I affected the altar, I haue lost my throne; whiles I scornefully reiected the aduice and censures of Gods Ministers, I am now become a spectacle of horror, and deformitie, to my owne seruants; I that would be sending vp persumes to heauen, haue made my nastinesse hatefull to my owne senses. What do I vnder this sacred roofe? Neither is Gods house now, for me, nor mine owne; what cell, what dungeon is close enough for me, wherein to weare out the residue of mine vnhappie and vncomfortable dayes? O God thou art iust, and I am miserable.

Thus with a deiected countenance, and sad heart, doth Vzziah haste to retire himselfe; and wishes, that he could be no lesse hid from himselfe, then from
C others: how easie is it for the God of heauen to bring downe the highest pitch of earthly greatnesse, and to humble the stubborneſt pride?

Vpon the leasure of second thoughts, Vzziah cannot but acknowledge much fauour in this correction, and confesse to haue escaped well; Others, bee knew, had beene strucke dead, or swallow'd vp quicke for so presumptuous an intrusion: It is happie for him if his forehead may excuse his soule.

Vzziah ceased not to be a King, when he began to be a leper; the disease of his forehead did not remoue his Crowne: his sonne Iotham raigned for him, vnder him; and whiles he was not seene, yet he was obeyed. The character of soueraigntie is indeleble, whether by bodily infirmitie, or by spirituall censure: Neither is it otherwise, O God, betwixt thee, and vs, if we be once a royall generation vnto thee, our leprosies may deforme vs, they shall not dethrone vs: still shall we haue the right, still the possession of that glorious kingdome, where-D in wee are inuested from

2. Kings 26,

After many vnhappie changes of the two thrones; Ahaz succeedes Iotham in the Kingdome of Iudah: an ill sonne of a good father; not more the heire of Dauids seate, then of Ieroboams sinne: Though Israel play the harlot, yet who can abide that Iudah should sinne? It is hard not to be infected with a contagious neighbour-hood: who euer read that the Kingdome of Israel was seasoned with the vicinitie of the true Religion of Iudah? Goodnesse (such as our nature is) is not so apt to spread: A tainted ayre doth more easily affect a sound body, then an wholesome ayre B can cleare the sicke: Superstition hath euer beene more successefull, then truth; The yong yeares of Ahaz are soone mis-led to a plausible mis-deuotion.

A man that is once false from truth, knowes not where he shall stay: From the Calues of Ieroboam is Ahaz drawne to the gods of the heathen; yea, now, Buls and Goates are too little for those new deities, his owne flesh and blood is but deare enough; He made his sonne to passe through their fire. Where doe we find any religious Israelite thus zealous for God? Neither doth the holinesse and mercie of our God require so cruell a sacrifice: neither is our dull, and niggardly hand ready to gratifie him with more easie obediences; O God how gladly should we offer vnto thee our soules, and bodies, which we may enioy so much the more, when they are thine; since zealous Pagans sticke not to leese their owne flesh, and blood in an Idols fire?

He that hath thus shamefully cast off the God of his fathers, cannot bee long without a fearefull reuenge. The King of Israel galls him on the one side; the King of Syria on the other: To auoide the shocke of both, Ahaz doth not C betake himselfe to the God whom he had offended; who was able to make his enemies at peace with him, but to Tiglath Pileser King of Ashur: Him doth he wooe with suites, with gifts; and robs God of those presents, which may indeare so strong an helper. He that thought not his sonne too deare for an Idol, thinkes not Gods siluer and gold too deare for an Idolatrous abettor.

Oh the infinite patience of the Almightie! God giues successe a while to so offensiue a riualitie: This Assyrian King preuailes against the King of Syria; kills him, and takes his chiefe Citie, Damascus; The quarrell of the King of Iudah hath inlarged the Territories of his assistant, beyond hope; And now, whiles this Assyrian victor is inioying the possession of his new-won Damascus: Ahaz goes vp thither to meete him, to congratulate the victorie, to adde vnto those triumphs, which were drawne on by his solicitation. There he sees a new fashioned Altar, that pleases his eye; That old forme of Salomons, which was made by the patterne showed to Moses in the Mount, is now growne stale, and despicable; A modell of this more exquisite frame is sent to Vriah, the D Priest; and must be sampled in Ierusalem.

It is a dangerous presumption to make innouations, if but in the circumstances of Gods worship. Those humane additions which would seeme to grace the institution of God, depraue it; That infinite wisedome knowes best what will please it selfe, and prescribes accordingly; The foolishnesse of God is wiser then the wisedome of men; Idolatrie and falshood is commonly more gawdie and plausible, then truth; That heart which can for the outward homelinesse

A deſpiſe the ordinances of God, is alreadie aliened from true Religion, and lies open to the groſſeſt ſuperſtition.

Neuer any Prince was ſo foulely idolatrous, as that he wanted a Prieſt to ſecond him: An Vrijah is fit to humor an Ahaz. Greatneſſe could neuer command any thing, which ſome ſernile wits were not readie both to applaud, and iuſtifie.

Ere the King can be returned from Damaſcus, the alter is finiſhed; It were happie if true godlineſſe could be ſo forward in the proſecutions of good: Neither is this ſtrange pile reared onely, but thruſt vp betwixt Gods Altar, and the Temple; in an apparent predecencie, as if he had ſaid, Let the God of Iudah come behind the Deities of Syria.

And now, to make vp the full meaſure of his impietie, this idolatrous King will himſelfe bee ſacrificing vpon his new alter, to his new gods; the gods of Damaſcus: An vſurped prieſthood well becomes a falſe Deitie. Becauſe (ſaith he) the gods of the Kings of Syria helpe them, therefore will I ſacrifice to them, that they may helpe me.

B Oh blind ſuperſtition! how did the gods of Syria helpe their Kings, when both thoſe Kings, and their gods were vanquiſhed, and taken by the King of Aſſyria? Euen this Damaſcus, and this altar were the ſpoyle of a ſorraigne enemie; How then did the gods of Syria helpe their Kings, any other, then to their ruine? what dotage is this to make choice of a foyled protection? But had the Syrians proſpered, muſt their gods haue the thankes? Are there no authors of good but blockes or Deuils? Or is an outward proſperitie the onely argument of truth, the onely motiue of deuotion? O fooliſh Ahaz, it is the God thou haſt forſaken, that plagues thee, vnder whoſe onely arme thou might'ſt haue preuailed. His power beats thoſe Pagan ſtockes, one againſt another, ſo, as one while, one ſeemes victorious, another vanquiſht; and at laſt he confounds both, together with their proudeſt clients: Thy ſelfe ſhall bee the beſt inſtance.

Of all the Kings of Iudah hitherto, there is none ſo dreadfull an example either of ſinne, or iudgement, as this ſonne of good Iotham. I abhorre to thinke C that ſuch a monſter ſhould deſcend from the loynes of Dauid; where ſhould be the period of this wickedneſſe? He began with the high places, thence hee deſcends to the Calues of Dan and Bethel; from thence he falls to a Syrian altar, to the Syrian god; then from a partnerſhip he falls to an vtter exclusion of the true God, and blocking vp his Temple; and then to the ſacrifice of his owne ſonne; and at laſt, as if hell were broken looſe vpon Gods inheritance, euery ſeuerall Citie, euery hie place of Iudah hath a new God: No marueil if hee bee branded by the Spirit of God, with, This is that King Ahaz.

What a fearefull plague did this noyſome deluge of ſinne leaue behind it, in the land of Iudah? who can expreſſe the horror of Gods renenge vpon a people that ſhould haue beene his? Rekah the King of Iſrael, ſlew an hundred and twentie thouſand of them in one day; amongſt whom was Maaſeiah the ſonne of Ahaz: O iuſt iudgement of the Almightie! Ahaz ſheds the blood of one ſonne to an Idoll: The true God ſheds the blood of another of his ſonnes, in reuenge.

D Yet, the hand of the Lord is ſtretched out ſtill.

Two hundred thouſand of them were carried away by the Iſraelites captiue, to Samaria.

The Edomites came, and carried away another part of them for bondſlaues, to their countrie.

The Philiſtims came vp and ſhared the Cities of the South of Iudah, and the villages thereof; Shortly, what other is miſerable Iudah, then the prey and ſpoile of all the neighbouring Nations? For the Lord brought Iudah low becauſe 2. Chro. 28. 19.

of Iſrael, for he made Iudah naked, and tranſgreſſed ſore againſt the Lord: As for the great King of Aſhur, whom Ahaz purchaſed with the ſacrilegious pillage of the houſe of God, in ſtead of an ayde, he proues a burden; How euer he ſped in his firſt on-ſets; now, he diſtreſſed Iudah, but ſtrengthned it not: The charge was as great, as the benefit ſmall: ſooner ſhall he eate them out, then reſcue them. No arme of fleſh can ſhelter Ahaz from a vengeance. A

Be wiſe, O yee Kings, bee inſtructed O yee Iudges of the earth; ſerue the Lord with feare, and reioyce with trembling: Kiſſe the Sonne leſt he be angrie, and yee periſh from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little.

His ſubiects complaine, that he died ſo late, and, as repenting that hee euer was, denie him a roome in the ſepulchers of Kings: as if they ſaid; the common earth of Ieruſalem is too good for him that degenerated from his Progenitors, marr'd his Kingdome, depraued his people, forſooke his God.

The vtter deſtruction of the Kingdome of Israel.

2. King. 17. Iudah was at a ſore heaue; yet Iſrael ſhall miſ-carie before it; ſuch are the ſinnes of both, that they ſtriue whether ſhall fall firſt; but this lot muſt light vpon the ten Tribes; though the late King of Iudah were perſonally worſe then the moſt of Ieroboams ſucceſſors, yet the people were generally leſſe euill: vpon whom the incroachments of Idolatrie were more by obtruſion, then by conſent; beſides that the thrones of Iudah had ſome interchanges of good Princes, Iſrael none at all: The ſame Iuſtice therefore that made Iſrael a ſcourge to Iudah, made Aſſyria a ſcorpion to Iſrael. C

It was the quarrell of Iudah that firſt ingaged the King of Aſhur in this warre againſt Iſrael; now hee is not ſo eaſily fetcht off; So we haue ſeene ſome eager Maſtiue, that hath beene ſet on by the leaſt clap of the hand, but could not bee looſned by the force of ſtaues.

Salmaneſer King of Aſſyria comes vp againſt Hoſhea King of Iſrael, and ſubdues him; and puts him to his Tribute: This yoke was vncouth and vnpleaſing; The vanquiſht Prince was neither able to reſiſt, nor willing to yeeld; ſecretly therefore he treates with the King of Egypt for aſſiſtance, as deſiring rather to hazard his libertie by the hand of an equall, then to inioy a quiet ſubiection vnder the hand of an ouer-ruling power; we cannot blame Princes to bee iealous of their ſoueraignties; The detaining of his yearely Tribute, and the whiſperings with new confederates, haue drawne vp the King of Aſhur to perfect his owne victories: He returnes therefore with a ſtrong power, and after three yeares ſiege, takes Samaria, impriſons Hoſhea, and in the exchange of a woſull captiuitie, he peoples Iſrael with Aſſyrians, and Aſſyria with Iſraelites. D

Now that abuſed ſoyle hath vpon a ſurfet of wickedneſſe, caſt out her perfidious owners, and will trie how it can fare with heathenish ſtrangers: Now the Aſſyrian gallants triumph in the Palaces of Samaria & Iezreel; whiles the Peeres and Captaines of Iſrael are driuen manicled through the Aſſyrian ſtreets, and billeted to the ſeuerall places of their perpetuall ſeruitude: Shortly, now the flouriſhing Kingdome of the tenne Tribes is come to a finall and ſhameſull end; and ſo vaniſhed in this laſt diſſipation, that, ſince that day, no man could euer ſay, This was Iſrael.

Oh

A Oh terrible example of vengeance, vpon that peculiar people, whom God hath choſen for himſelfe, out of all the world: All the world were witneſſes of the fauours of their miraculous deliuerances, and protections; All the world ſhall be witneſſes of their iuſt confuſion.

It is not in the power of ſleight errors to ſet off that infinite mercie: What was it, O God, what was it, that cauſed thee to caſt off thine owne inheritance? What but the ſame that made thee to caſt the Angels out of heauen? Euen their rebellious ſinnes. Thoſe ſinnes dared to emulate the greatneſſe of thy mercies, no leſſe, then they forced the ſeueritie of thy iudgements: They left all the commandements of the Lord their God; and made them molten Images, euen two Calues; and made a groue and worſhipped all the hoſt of heauen; and ſerued Baal; and cauſed their ſonnes and daughters to paſſe through the fire, and vſed diuination, and enchantments, and ſold themſelues to doe euill in the ſight of the Lord to prouoke him to anger.

Neither were theſe ſlips of frailtie, or ignorant miſ-takings, but wilfull crimes, obſtinate impieties, in ſpight of the doctrines, reproofes, menaces, miraculous
B conuictions of the holy Prophets, which God ſent amongſt them: Thy deſtruction is of thy ſelfe, O Iſrael; what could the iuſt hand of the Almightie doe leſſe then conſume a nation ſo incorrigibly flagitious? A nation ſo vnthankfull for mercies, ſo impatient of remedies, ſo vncapable of repentance: ſo obliged, ſo warned, ſo ſhameleſſely, ſo lawleſſely wicked?

What nation vnder heauen can now challenge an vndefaiſible intereſt in God; when Iſrael it ſelfe is caſt off? What Church in the world can ſhow ſuch deare loue-tokens from the Almightie as this, now-abhorred, and adulterous ſpouſe? He that ſpared not the naturall Oliue, ſhall he ſpare the wild? It is not for vs ſinners of the Gentiles to be highminded, but awfull.

The Iſraelites are caried captiue into Aſſyria; thoſe goodly Cities of the tenne Tribes may not lie waſt, and vnpeopled: The wiſedome of the victor finds it fit to tranſplant his owne Colonies thither; that ſo he may raiſe profit thence, with ſecuritie: From Babylon therefore, and Cuthah, and Aua, and Hamath, and Sepharuaim, doth he ſend of his owne ſubiects to poſſeſſe, and inhabit the Ci-
C ties of Samaria. The land doth not brooke her new Tenants: They feared not the Lord; (how ſhould they, they knew him not?) Therefore the Lord ſent Lyons amongſt them which ſlew ſome of them: Not the verieſt Pagan can be excuſed for his ignorance of God; Euen the deprauedſt nature might teach vs to tremble at a Deitie; It is iuſt with the Almightie not to put vp neglect, where hee hath beſtowed reaſon.

The brute creatures are ſent to reuenge the quarrell of their Maker, vpon worſe beaſts, then themſelues. Still hath God left himſelfe Champions in Iſrael: Lyons teare the Aſſyrians in pieces; and put them in mind, that, had it not beene for wickedneſſe, that land needed not to haue changed maſters. The great Lord of the world cannot want meanes to plague offenders: If the men be gone, yet the beaſts are there; And if the beaſts had beene gone, yet ſo long as there were ſtones in the wals, in the quarries, God would be ſure of a-uengers: There is no ſecuritie but in being at peace with God.

D to know that theſe Lyons were ſent from a God; that this puniſhment is for ſinne; They know not the manner of the God of the land, therefore he hath ſent Lyons among them: Theſe blind Heathen that thinke euery land hath a ſeuerall God, yet, hold that God, worthy of his owne worſhip; yet, hold that worſhip muſt be grounded vpon knowledge; the want of that knowledge, puniſhable, the puniſhment of that want, iuſt and diuine: How much worſe then Aſſyrians are they that are readie to aſcribe all calamities to nature, to chance? That acknowledging but one God of all the world, are yet careleſſe to know him, to ſerue him?

One of the Prieſts of Iſrael is appointed to be carried backe to Samaria, to A teach the Aſſyrian Colonie the faſhions of the God of the land; not for deuotion, but for impunitie: vaine Politicians thinke to ſatisfie God by patching vp religions; any formes are good enough for an vnknowne deitie: The Aſſyrian Prieſts teach, and practiſe the worſhip of their owne Gods; The Iſraelitiſh Prieſt preſcribes the worſhip of the true God; The people will follow both; the one out of liking, the other out of feare: What a prodigious mixture was here of religions? true with falſe, Iewiſh with Paganiſh, diuine with diuelliſh; Euery diuiſion of theſe tranſplanted Aſſyrians had their ſeuerall dieties, high places, ſacrifices; This high Prieſt of Iſrael intercommons with enery of them: So as now theſe fathers of Samaritaniſme, are in at all; They feare the Lord and ſerue their idols: No beggers cloake is more peeced then the Religion of theſe new inhabitants of Iſrael. I know not how their bodies ſped for the Lyons, I am ſure their ſoules fared the worſe for this medlie: Aboue all things God hates a mungrell deuotion; If we be not all Iſrael, it were better to be all Aſſur; It cannot ſo much diſpleaſe God to be vnknowne or neglected, as to be con- B ſorted with Idols.

Hezekiah and Senacherib.

2. Kings 18. and 19.

Iſrael is gone, Iudah is left ſtanding; or rather ſome few ſprigs of thoſe two Tribes: ſo we haue ſeene in the ſhredding of ſome large Timber-tree, one or two boughes left at the top to hold vp the ſap. Who can but lament the poore remainders of that languiſhing kingdome of Dauid. C

Take out of the two Tribes of Iudah, and Beniamin, one hundred and twentie thouſand, whom Pekah the King of Iſrael ſlew in one day. Take out two hundred thouſand that were carried away captiue to Samaria; Take out thoſe that were tranſported into the bondage of the Edomites; and thoſe that were ſubdued in the South parts, by the Philiſtims; alas what an handfull was left to the King of Iudah; ſcarce worth the name of a dominion: Yet, euen now, out of the gleeds of Iudah, doth God raiſe vp a glorious light to his forlorne Church; yea, from the wretched loynes of Ahaz, doth God fetch an holy Hezekiah. It had bin hard to conceiue the ſtate of Iudah worſe then it was; neither was it more miſerable, then ſinfull, and in regard of both, deſperate; when beyond hope, God reuiues this dying ſtocke of Dauid, and out of very ruines builds vp his owne houſe. Ahaz was not more the ill ſonne of a good father, then he was the ill father of a good ſonne. Hee was the ill ſonne of good Iotham, the ill father of good Hezekiah. Good Hezekiah makes amends for his fathers impietie; and puts a new life into the heartleſſe D remnant of Gods people.

The wiſedome of our good God knowes when his aid will bee moſt ſeaſonable, moſt welcome; which he then loues to giue, when he finds vs left of all our hopes: That mercifull hand is reſerued for a dead lift; then, he failes vs not.

Now, you might haue ſeene this pious Prince buſily beſtirring himſelfe, in ſo late and needfull a reformation, remouing the high places, battering and burning the Idols, demoliſhing their Temples, cutting downe their groues, opening

A opening the Temple, purging the altars, and veſſels, ſanctifying the Prieſts, rekindling the Lampes, renuing the incenſe, reinſtituting the ſacrifices, eſtabliſhing the order of Gods ſeruice, appointing the courſes, ſetling the maintenance of the Miniſters, publiſhing the decrees for the long-neglected Paſſe-ouer; celebrating it, and the other feaſts, with due ſolemnitie, incouraging the people, contributing bountifully to the offerings, and, in one word, ſo ordering all the affaires of God, as if he had beene ſent downe from heauen to reſtore Religion; as if Dauid himſelfe had beene aliue againe in this bleſſed heyre, not ſo much of his Crowne, as of his pietie. Oh Iudah, happie in thy Ezekiah, Oh Ezekiah happie in the gratious reſtauration of thy Iudah: Ahaz ſhall haue no thanke for ſuch a ſonne; The God that is able of the very ſtones to raiſe children to Abraham, raiſes a true ſeed of Dauid out of the corrupt loynes of an Idolater: That infinit mercie is not tied to the termes of an immediate propagation: For the ſpace of three hundred yeares, the man after Gods owne heart had no perfect heire till now; Till now did the high places ſtand: the deuotions of the beſt
B Princes of Iudah were blemiſhed with ſome weake omiſſions; Now the zeale of good Ezekiah cleares all thoſe defects, and workes an intire change.

How ſeaſonably hath the prouidence of God kept the beſt man for the worſt times? When God hath a great worke to doe, he knowes to fit himſelfe with inſtruments.

No maruell if the Paganiſh Idols goe to wracke, when euen the brazen Serpent that Moſes had made by Gods owne appointment, is broken in peeces: The Iſraelites were ſtung with fiery Serpents, this brazen Serpent healed them, which they did no ſooner ſee, then they recouered: But now, ſuch was the venome of the Iſraelitiſh Idolatry, that this Serpent of braſſe, ſtung worſe then the fierie; That, which firſt cured by the eye, now by the eye poyſoned the ſoule; That which was at firſt, the type of a Sauiour, is now, the deadly Engine of the Enemie. Whiles it helped, it ſtood; it ſtood whiles it hurt not; but when once wicked abuſe hath turned it into an Idoll; what was it but Nehuſhtan?

C The holineſſe of the firſt inſtitution cannot priuiledge ought from the danger of a future profanation; nor, as the caſe may ſtand, from an vtter abolition: What antiquitie, what authoritie, what primarie ſeruice might this Serpent haue pleaded? All that cannot keepe it out of the duſt. Thoſe things which are neceſſarie in their being, beneficiall in their continuance, may ſtill remaine when their abuſe is purged; but thoſe things whoſe vſe is but temporarie, or whoſe duration is needleſſe and vnprofitable, may ceaſe with the occaſion, and much more periſh with an inſeparable abuſe. Ezekiah willingly forgets who made the Serpent, when he ſees the Iſraelites make it an Idoll: It is no leſſe intolerable for God, to haue a riuall of his owne making.

Since Hezekiah was thus, aboue all his Anceſtors, vpright with the Lord; it is no maruell if the Lord were with him; if he proſpered, whitherſoeuer he went; The ſame God that would haue his iuſtice magnified in the confuſion of the wicked Princes of Iſrael, and Iudah, would haue his mercie no leſſe acknowledged, in the bleſſings of faithfull Hezekiah.

D The great King of Aſſyria had in a ſort ſwallowed vp both the Kingdomes of Iudah, and Iſrael; yet not with an equall crueltie; He made Iſrael captiue, Iudah (vpon a willing compoſition) tributarie. Iſrael is vaniſhed in a tranſportation; Iudah continues vnder the homage wherein Ahaz left it: Hezekiah had raigned but ſixe yeares when he ſaw his neighbours of Iſrael packing into a miſerable captiuitie; and the proud Aſſyrians Lording in their Cities; yet, euen then, when he ſtood alone, in a corner of Iudah, durſt Hezekiah draw his necke out of the yoke of the great, and victorious Monarch of Aſſyria; and, as if one enemie had not beene enough, at the ſame time, he falls vpon the incroaching

but in what termes he ſtands with heauen. The vnworthy father of Hezekiah had clogged Iudah with this ſeruile fealtie to the Aſſyrian; what the conditions of that ſubiection were, it is too late, and needleſſe for vs to inquire; If this payment were limited to a period of time, the expiration acquitted him; If vpon couenants of ayde, the ceſſation thereof acquitted him; If the reforming of Religion, and baniſhment of Idolatrie ranne vnder the cenſure of rebellion, the quarrell on Hezekiahs part, was holy, on Senacheribs vniuſt: but if the reſtipulation were abſolute, and the withdrawing of this homage vpon none but ciuill grounds, I cannot excuſe the good King from a iuſt offence: It was an humane frailtie in an obliged Prince by force to affect a free and independant Soueraigntie.

What doe we mince that fact, which holy Ezekiah himſelfe cenſures? I haue offended, returne from me, what thou putſt on me will I beare? The comfort of libertie may not be had with an vnwarranted violence. Holineſſe cannot free vs from infirmitie: It was a weakneſſe to doe that act, which muſt be ſoone vndone with much repentance, and more loſſe; This reuolt ſhall coſt Ezekiah B (beſides much humiliation) three hundred yearely Talents of ſiluer, thirtie Talents of gold: How much better had it beene for the Cities of Iudah to haue purchaſed their peace with an eaſie Tribute, then warre with intolerable taxation?

Fourteene yeares had good Hezekiah fed vpon a ſweete peace, ſauced onely with a ſet penſion; now hee muſt prepare his Pallat for the bitter morſels of warre. The King of Aſſyria is comne vp againſt all the defenced Cities of Iu- dah; and hath taken them: Ezekiah is faine to buy him out with too many Talents; The poore Kingdome of Iudah is exhauſt, with ſo deepe a payment; in ſo much as the King is forced to borrow of God himſelf, for Hezekiah gaue him all the ſiluer that was found in the houſe of the Lord; yea, at that time did Hezekiah cut off the gold from the doores of the Temple of the Lord, and from the Pillars which he had ouer-laide, and gaue it to the King of Aſſyria. How hard was good Hezekiah driuen, ere he would be thus bold with his God? Surely if the mines, or Coffers of Iudah could haue yeelded any ſupplie, this ſhift had beene hate- C full; to fetch backe for an enemie, that which he had giuen to his Maker: One-ly neceſſitie excuſes that from ſacriledge in the ſonne, which will, made ſacriledge in the father: That which is once deuoted to a ſacred vſe, may not bee called backe to a prophane: But he whoſe the earth is, and the fulneſſe of it, is not ſo taken with our metals, that he ſhould more regard our gold, then our welfare: His goodneſſe cannot grudge any outward thing for the price of our peace: To rob God out of couetouſneſſe, or wantonneſſe, or neglect is iuſtly damnable; we cannot robbe him out of our neede; for then he giues vs all wee take; and bids vs ranſome our liues, our liberties; The treaſures of Gods houſe were precious, for his ſake, to whom they were conſecrated, but more precious in the ſight of the Lord was the life of any one of his Saints.

Euerie true Iſraelite was the ſpirituall houſe of God; why ſhould not the doore of the materiall Temple be willingly ſtripped, to ſaue the whole frame of the ſpirituall Temple. Take therefore, O Hezekiah what thou haſt giuen, no gold is too holy to redeeme thy vexation: It matters not ſo much how bare the D doores of the Temple be, in a caſe of neceſſitie, as how well the inſides be fur-niſhed with ſincere deuotion. O the cruell hard heartedneſſe of thoſe men which will rather ſuffer the liuing Temples of God to be ruined; then they will ranſome their life, with farthings.

It could not be, but that the ſtore of needy Iudah muſt ſoone be drawne drie with ſo deepe an exaction; that ſumme cannot be ſent, becauſe it cannot be raiſed: The cruell Tyrant calls for his Brickes whiles he allowes no ſtraw; His anger

A anger is kindled becauſe Ezekiahs Coffers haue a bottome; with a mightie hoſt doth he come vp againſt Ieruſalem, therefore ſhall that City be de ſtroyed by him, becauſe by him it hath bin impouerifhed; the inhabitants muſt bee ſlaues, becauſe they are beggers.

Oh lamentable, and, in ſight, deſperate condition of diſtreſſed Ieruſalem: wealth it had none; ſtrength it had, but a little; all the Countrey round about was ſubdued to the Aſſyrian; that proud victor hath begirt the wals of it, with an innumerable army, ſcorning that ſuch a ſhouell-full of earth ſhould ſtand out but one day; Poore Ieruſalem ſtands alone, block't vp with a world of enemies, helpleſſe, friendleſſe, comfortleſſe; looking for the worſt of an hoſtile furie; when Tartan and Rabſaris, and Rabſhakeh, the great Captaines of the Aſſyrians call to a parlee. Hezekiah ſends to them three of his prime officers, his Steward, his Secretarie, his Recorder. Lord; what inſolent blaſphemies doth that foule mouth of Rabſhakeh belch out againſt the liuing God, againſt his anointed ſeruant?

How pauſibly doth he diſcourage the ſubiects of Ezekiah, how proudly
B doth he inſult vpon their impotencie, how doth he braue them with baſe offers of aduantage; and laſtly, how cunningly doth he fore-lay their confidence (which was onely left them) in the Almightie, proteſting not to be come vp hither without the Lord; The Lord ſaid to me, Go vp to this land, and deſtroy it; How fearefull a word was this? The reſt were but vaine crackes, this was a thunderbolt to ſtrike dead the heart of Ezekiah; If Rabſhakeh could haue beene beleeued, Ieruſalem could not but haue flowne open; How could it thinke to ſtand out no leſſe againſt God, then men? Euen thus doth the great enemie of of man-kind; if he can diſ-hearten the ſoule from a dependance vpon the God of mercies, the day is his: Lewd miſcreants care not how they be-lie God for their owne purpoſes.

Eliakim the Steward of Hezekiah well knew, how much the people muſt needs be affected with this pernicious ſuggeſtion; and faine would therefore, if not ſtop with wicked mouth, yet diuert theſe blaſphemies into a foraigne expreſſion. I wonder that any wiſe man ſhould looke for fauour from an enemie:
C Speake I pray thee, to thy ſeruants in the Syrian language: What was this but to teach an aduerſarie how to doe miſchiefe? Wherefore came Rabſhakeh thither but to gall Ezekiah, to with-draw his ſubiects? That tongue is propereſt for him which may hurt moſt; Deprecations of euill to a malicious man are no better then aduices. An vnknowne idiome is fit to keepe counſell; they are familiar words that muſt conuey ought to the vnderſtanding. Lewd men are the worſe for admonitions.

Rabſhakeh had not ſo ſtrained his throat, to corrupt the citizens of Ieruſalem, had it not beene for the humble obteſtation of Eliakim; Now he reares vp his voyce, and holds his ſides, and roares out his double blaſphemies; one while affrighting the people with the great power of the mightie King of Aſſyria; another while debaſing the contemptible force of Hezekiah; now ſmoothly alluring them, with the aſſurances of a ſafe and ſucceſſefull yeeldance; then, diſcouraging them with the impoſſibilitie of their deliuerance; laying before them the feare full examples of greater nations vanquiſhed, by that ſword,
D which was now ſhaken ouer them; triumphing in the impotencie, and miſcarriage of their gods: Who are they among all the gods of the Countries, that haue deliuered their Countrie out of mine hand, That the Lord ſhould deliuer Ieruſalem out of mine hand? Where are the gods of Arpad, and of Hamath? Where? but in that helliſh darkeneſſe, that is ordained both for them, and for thee, barbarous Aſſyrian, that dareſt thus open thy mouth againſt thy Maker: And can thoſe Atheous eyes of thine ſee no difference of gods? Is there no diſtance betwixt a ſtocke, or ſtone, and that infinite Deitie that made heauen & earth? It is enough that thou now feeleſt it; thy torments haue taught thee to late, that thou affronteſt a liuing God.

How did the fingers and tongues of theſe Iewiſh Peeres & people itch to be at A Rabſhakeh; in a reuengefull anſwer to thoſe impieties: All is whuſht; not a word ſounds from thoſe walls: I doe not more wonder at Hezekiahs wiſedome, in commanding ſilence, then at the ſubiects obedience in keeping it; This rayler could not be more ſpighted, then with no anſwer; and if he might be exaſperated, he could not be reformed; beſides, the rebounding of thoſe multiplied blaſphemies, might leaue ſome ill impreſſions in the multitude; This ſulphurous flaske, therefore, dyes in his owne ſmoke: onely leauing an hatefull ſtench behind it.

Good Hezekiah cannot eaſily paſſe ouer this deuilliſh oratorie; no ſooner doth he heare of it, then he rends his clothes, and couers himſelfe with ſack-cloth, and betakes himſelfe to the houſe of the Lord; and ſends his officers, and the graueſt of the Prieſts, clad in ſack-cloth, to Eſay the Prophet of God, with a dolefull and querelous meſſage.

Oh the noble pietie of Hezekiah; notwithſtanding all the ſtraits of the ſiege, and the danger of ſo powerfull an enemie; I find not the garments of this good King, any otherwiſe then whole, and vnchanged; but now ſo ſoone as B euer a blaſphemie is vttered againſt the Maieſtie of his God, (though by a Pagan dog) his clothes are torne, and turned into ſack-cloth: There can be no better argument of an vpright heart, then to be more ſenſible of the indignities offered to God, then of our owne dangers. Euen theſe deſperate reproches ſend Ezekiah to the Temple: The more we ſee Gods name prophaned, the more ſhall we, if we be truely religious, loue and honour it.

Whither ſhould Hezekiah runne but to the Temple, to the Prophet? There, there is the refuge of all faithfull ones; where they may ſpeake with God, where they may be ſpoken to from God, and fetch comfort from both: It is not poſſible that a beleeuing heart ſhould be diſappointed: Iſaiah ſends that meſſage to the good King, that may drie vp his teares, and cheere his countenance, and change his ſuit; Thus ſaith the Lord Be not afraid of the words which thou haſt heard, with which the ſeruants of the King of Syria haue blaſphemed me; Behold I will ſend a blaſt vpon him, and he ſhall heare a rumor, and ſhall returne to his owne Land; and I will cauſe him to fall by the ſword in his owne Land. C

Loe; euen whiles Senacherib was in the height of his iollitie and aſſurance; Gods Prophet fore-ſees his ruine; and giues him for dead, whiles that Tyrant thought of nothing but life and victorie. Proud and ſecure worldlings little dreame of the neere approach of their iudgements: whiles they are plotting their deepeſt deſignes, the ouer-ruling iuſtice of the Almightie hath contriued their ſudden confuſion, and ſees, and ſets them their day.

Rabſhakeh returnes, and finding the King of Aſſyria warring againſt Libnah, reports to him the ſilent, (and therein) contemptuous anſwer, and firme reſolutions of Hezekiah; In the meane time God pulls Senacherib by the eare, with the newes of the approching armie of Tirhakah King of Ethiopia, which was comming vp to raiſe the ſiege; and to ſuccour his confederats: That dreadfull power will not allow the Aſſyrian King, in perſon to lead his other forces vp againſt Ieruſalem, nor to continue his former Leaguer long before thoſe walls. But now, he writes big words to Hezekiah, and thinkes with his thundering menaces to beat open the gates, and leuell the bulwarks of Ieruſalem: Like D the true maſter of Rabſhakeh, he reuiles the God of Heauen; and baſely parallels him with the dunghill deities of the heathen.

Good Ezekiah gets him into his ſanctuarie; there he ſpreds the letters before the Lord; and calls to the God that dwels betweene the Cherubims, to reuenge the blaſphemies of Senacherib, to protect and reſcue himſelfe, and his people, Euery one of thoſe words pierced heauen; which was no leſſe open to mercie vnto Hezekiah, then, vengeance to Senacherib; Now is Iſaiah addreſſed with a

A ſecond meſſage of comfort to him, who doubtleſſe diſtruſted not the firſt: only the reiteration of that furious blaſphemie made him take faſter hold, by his faithfull deuotion. Now, the iealous God in a diſdaine of ſo blaſphemous a conteſtation, riſes vp in a ſtile of Maieſtie, and glorioufly tramples vpon this ſaucie inſolencie, Becauſe thy rage againſt me, and thy tumult is comne vp into mine eares, therefore I will put my hooke into thy noſe, and my bridle into thy lips: and will turne thee backe by the way thou cameſt. Loe, Senacherib, the God of heauen makes a beaſt of thee, who haſt ſo brutiſhly ſpurned at his name; If thou be a rauenous Beare, he hath an hooke for thy noſthrils: If thou be a reſtie horſe, he hath a bridle for thy mouth; In ſpight of thee, thou ſhalt follow his hooke, or his bridle; and ſhalt be led to thy iuſt ſhame by either.

It is not for vs to be the Lords of our owne actions; Thus ſaith the Lord concerning the King of Aſſyria; He ſhall not come into this Citie, nor ſhoote an arrow there, nor come before it with ſhield, nor caſt a banke againſt it, by the way that hee came ſhall he returne, &c. Impotent men, what are we in the hands of the Almightie? we purpoſe, he ouer-rules; we talke of great matters, and thinke to
B doe wonders; he blowes vpon our proiects, and they vaniſh with our ſelues: He that hath ſet bounds to the Sea, hath appointed limits to the rage of the proudeſt enemies; yea, euen the Deuils themſelues are confined; Why boaſt yee your ſelues, O yee Tyrants, that yee can doe miſchiefe; yee are ſtinted: and euen within thoſe liſts, is confuſion.

O the Trophees of diuine Iuſtice, That very night the Angell of the Lord went out, and ſmote in the campe of the Aſſyrians an hundred foureſcore and fiue thouſand, and when they aroſe earely in the morning, behold they were all dead corps.

How ſpeedy an execution was this, how miraculous? No humane arme ſhall haue the glory of this victory; It was God that was defied by that preſumptuous Aſſyrian; It is God that ſhall right his owne wrongs; Had the Egyptian, or Ethyopian forces beene come vp, though the ſame God had done this worke by them yet ſome praiſe of this ſlaughter had perhaps cleau'd to their fingers. Now an inuiſible hand ſheds all this blood; that his very enemies may cleare him from all partnerſhip of reuenge. Go now wicked Senacherib, and tell of
C the gods of Hamath and Arpad, and Sepharuaim, and Hena, and Iuah, which thou haſt deſtroyed, and ſay, that Hezekiahs God is but as one of theſe: Goe, and adde this Deity to the number of thy conqueſts: Now, ſay that Ezekiahs God in whom he truſted hath deceiued him, and graced thy Tryumphs.

With ſhame and griefe enough is that ſheaped Tyran returned to his Niniuie, hauing left behinde him, all the pride and ſtrength of Aſſyria, for compoſt to the Iewiſh fields. Well were it for thee O Senacherib, if thou couldeſt eſcape thus; vengeance waits for thee at home, and welcomes thee into thy place; whiles thou art worſhipping in the houſe of Niſroch thy god, two of thine owne ſons ſhall be thine executioners. See now if that falſe Deity of thine can preſerue thee from that ſtroke which the true God ſends thee by the hand of thine owne fleſh; Hee that ſlew thine hoaſt by his Angels, ſlayes thee by thy ſonnes: The ſame Angel that killed all thoſe thouſands, could as eaſily haue ſmitten thee; but he rather reſerues thee for the further torment of an vnnaturall ſtroke, that thou mayeſt ſee too late, how eaſie is it for him in ſpight of thy God, to arme thine

Thou art auenged, O God, thou art auenged plentifully of thine enemies. Whoſoeuer ſtriues with thee, is ſure to gaine nothing but loſſe, but ſhame, but death, but hell. The Aſſyrians are ſlaine, Senacherib is rewarded for his blaſphemy: Ieruſalem is reſcued, Hezekiah reioyces, the nations wonder and tremble. O loue the Lord all ye Saints, for the Lord preſerueth the faithfull, and plenteouſly rewardeth the proud doer.

HEzekiah was freed from the ſiege of the Aſſyrians, but he is ſurpriſed with a diſeaſe: he that deliuered him from the hand of his enemies, ſmites him with ſickneſſe: God doth not let vs looſe from all afflictions, when he redeemes vs from one.

To thinke that Ezekiah was either not thankefull enough for his deliuerance, or too much lifted vp with glorie of ſo miraculous a fauour; were an iniurious miſ-conſtruction of the hand of God; and an vncharitable cenſure of an holy Prince: For, though no fleſh and bloud can auoid the iuſt deſert of bodily puniſhment, yet God doth not alwayes ſtrike with an intuition of ſinne; ſometimes he regards the benefit of our triall; ſometimes the glorie of his mercy in our cure. B

2. Kings 20.

It was no ſleight diſtemper, that ſeized vpon Ezekiah, but a diſeaſe both painfull, and fierce, and in nature deadly. O God, how thou laſheſt euen thoſe whom thou loueſt: Hadſt thou euer any ſuch dearling in the throne of Iudah, as Hezeki-
Yet he no ſooner breatheth from a miſerable ſiege, then hee panteth vnder a ah? mortall ſicknes: when as yet he had not ſo much, as the comfort of a child, to ſucceed him, thy Prophet is ſent to him with the heauie meſſage of his death, Set thine houſe in order, for thou ſhalt die and not liue. It is no ſmall mercie of God that he giues vs warning of our end; we ſhall make an ill vſe of ſo gratious a premonition, if we make not a meet preparation for our paſſage. Euen thoſe that haue not an houſe, yet haue a ſoule; no ſoule can want important affaires to be ordered for a finall diſſolution; the neglect of this beſt thrift is deſperate. C
Set thy ſoule in order, O man, for thou ſhalt die and not liue.

If God had giuen Ezekiah a ſon, nature had bequeathed his eſtate; now, hee muſt ſtudie to find heyres: Euen theſe outward things, (though in themſelues worthleſſe) require our carefull diſpoſition, to thoſe we leaue behind vs; and if we haue delayed theſe thoughts, till then, our ſicke beds may not complaine of their importunitie; We cannot leaue to our families a better legacie, then Peace.

Neuer was the Prophet Eſay vnwelcome to this good King, vntill now: Euen ſad tidings muſt be carried by thoſe meſſengers, which would be faithfull: neither may we regard ſo much how they will be taken, as by whom they are ſent.

It was a bold and harſh word to ſay to a King, Thou ſhalt die, and not liue: I doe not heare Hezekiah rage, and fret at the meſſage; or threat the bearer, but he meekely turnes his face to the wall, and weepes, and prayes: Why to the wall? Was it for the greater ſecrecie of his deuotion? was it for the more freedome from all diſtraction? was it that the paſſion which accompanied his prayer, might haue no witneſſes? Or, was it for that this wall lookt towards the Temple, which his heart and eyes ſtill moued vnto, though his feet could not? D

Howſoeuer, the patient ſoule of good Ezekiah turnes it ſelfe to that holy God, from whom he ſmarts, and bleeds; and poures out it ſelfe into a feruent deprecation, I beſeech thee, O Lord, remember now how I haue walked before thee

Couldſt thou feare, O Ezekiah, that God had forgotten thine integritie? The grace that was in thee, was his owne worke; could he in thee neglect himſelfe? Or doſt thou therefore doubt of his remembrance of thy faithfulneſſe, becauſe he ſummons thee to receiue the crowne of thy faithfulneſſe, glorie, and immortalitie? wherein canſt thou be remembred, if this be to forget thee? What challenge is this? Is God a debter to thy perfection? Hath thine holy carriage merited any thing from that infinite Iuſtice? Farre, farre where theſe preſumptuous conceits from that humble and mortified ſoule: Thou hadſt hated thine own breſt, if it could once haue harboured ſo proud a thought. This perfection of thine was no other, then an honeſt ſoundneſſe of heart, and life, which thou knoweſt God had promiſed to reward: It was the mercie of the couenant that thou pleadedſt, not the merit of thine obedience.

Euerie one of theſe words were ſteeped in teares: But what meant theſe words, theſe teares? I heare not of any ſuit moued by Hezekiah; onely he wiſhes
B to be remembred, in that which could neuer be forgotten, though hee ſhould haue intreated for an obliuion.

Speake out Hezekiah, what is it that thy teares craue, whiles thy lips expreſſe not? O let me liue, and I ſhall praiſe thee O God.

In a naturall man none could wonder at this paſſionate requeſt; who can but wonder at it, in a Saint? whoſe happineſſe doth but then begin, when his life ceaſeth: whoſe miſerie doth but then end, when his death enters: the word of faith, is, Oh let me die, that I may inioy thee. How then doth the good King crie at the newes of that death, which ſome reſolute Pagans haue intertained with ſmiles? Certainely, the beſt man cannot ſtrip himſelfe of ſome fleſh; and whiles nature hath an vndeniable ſhare in him, he can not but retaine ſome ſmatch of the ſweetneſſe of life, of the horror of diſſolution; Both theſe were in Hezekiah; neither of thē could tranſport him into this paſſion: they were higher reſpects that ſwayed with ſo holy a Prince; a tender care of the glorie of God, a carefull pittie of the Church of God; His very teares ſaid; O God, thou
C knoweſt that the eyes of the world are bent vpon me, as one that hath abandoned their idolatrie, and reſtored thy ſincere worſhip; I ſtand alone in the midſt of a wicked and idolatrous generation, that lookes thorough all my actions, all my euents; If now they ſhall ſee me ſnatcht away in the midſt of my dayes, what will theſe Heathen ſay; how can thy great name but ſuffer in this mine vntimely extinction?

Beſides, what will become of thy poore Church, Which I ſhall leaue feebly religious, and as yet ſcarce warme, in the courſe of a pious reformation? how ſoone ſhall it be miſerably ouer-growne with ſuperſtition, and heatheniſme; how ſoone ſhall the wild Boare of Aſſyria root vp this little vineyard of thine? What need I beſeech thee, O Lord, to regard thy name, to regard thine inheritance?

What one teare of Hezekiah can runne waſt? What can that good King pray for, vnheard, vnanſwered? Senacherib came in a proud confidence to ſwallow vp his citie, and people: prayers and teares ſend him away confounded: Death
D comes to ſwallow vp his perſon, (and that not without authoritie) prayers and teares ſend him away diſappointed. Before Iſaiah was gone out into the middle Court, the word of the Lord came to him, ſaying, Turne againe, and tell Hezekiah the Captaine of my people; Thus ſaith the Lord, the God of Dauid thy father; I haue heard thy prayer, I haue ſeene thy teares; behold I will heale thee; On the third day thou ſhalt goe vp to the houſe of the Lord; and I will adde to thy dayes fifteene yeares.

What ſhall we ſay then, O God, haſt thou thus ſoone changed thy purpoſe?

Was

Was it not thy true meſſage which thy Prophet, euen now, deliuered to Ezekiah? Is ſome-what falne out that thou fore-ſaweſt not? or doeſt thou now decree ſomewhat thou meaneſt not? The very thought of any of theſe were no better then blaſphemous impietie. Certainely, Hezekiah could not liue one day longer, then was eternally decreed; The decree of Gods eternall counſell had from euerlaſting determined him fifteene yeares yet longer: Why then doth God ſay, by his Prophet, Thou ſhalt die, and not line? He is not as man that he ſhould repent; the meſſage is changed, the will is not changed; yea rather the meſſage is explicated, not changed; For the ſignified will of God, though it ſound abſolutely, yet muſt be vnderſtood with condition; that tells Hezekiah what he muſt expect from the nature of his diſeaſe, what would befall him, without his deprecations: There was nothing but death in the ſecond cauſes; what euer ſecret purpoſe there was in the firſt; and that purpoſe ſhall lie hid for a time, vnder a reſerued condition: The ſame decree that ſayes, Ninive ſhall be deſtroyed, meanes, if Ninive repent, it ſhall not be deſtroyed; he that finds good reaſon to ſay. Hezekiah ſhall die, yet ſtill meanes, if the quickned deuotion of Hezekiah ſhall importune me for life, it ſhall be protracted. And the ſame God that hath decreed this addition of fifteene yeares, had decreed to ſtirre vp the ſpirit of Hezekiah, to that vehement and weeping importunitie, which ſhould obtaine it. O God, thou worke ſt thy good pleaſure in vs, and with vs; and by thy reuealed will moueſt vs in thoſe wayes, whereby thou effecteſt thy ſecret will. A B

How wonderfull is this mercie? Hezekiahs teares are not drie vpon his cheekes, yea his breath is not paſſed his lips, when God ſends him a comfortable anſwer. How careſull is the God of compaſſions, that his holy ſeruant ſhould not languiſh one houre, in the expectation of his denounced death? What ſpeed was here, as in the errand, ſo in the act of recouerie? within three dayes ſhall Hezekiah be vpon his feet; yea his feet ſhall ſtand in the Courts of Gods houſe; he that now in his bed ſighes, and grones, and weeps out a petition, ſhall then ſing out a thankſgiuing in the Temple. Oh thou that heareſt the prayer, vnto thee ſhall all fleſh come: With what cheerefull aſſurance ſhould we approach to the throne of that grace, which neuer failed any ſuppliant. C

Neither was this grant more ſpeedie, then bountifull; we are wont to reckon ſeuen yeares for the life of a man; and now, behold, more then two liues hath God added to the age of Hezekiah. How vnexampled a fauour is this? who euer but Hezekiah knew his period ſo long before? the fixedneſſe of his terme, is no leſſe mercie, then the protraction; we muſt be content to liue or die at vncertainties; we are not worthy to calculate the date of our owne times: Teach vs, O Lord, ſo to number our dayes, that we may apply our hearts to wiſedome.

There is little ioy in many dayes, if they be euill; Ezekiah ſhall not be bleſſed onely with life, but with peace; The proud Aſſyrian threatens an inuaſion; his late foyle ſtill ſtickes in his ſtomacke, and ſtirs him to a reuenge; the hooke is in his noſtrils, he cannot moue whither he liſt; The God of heauen will maintaine his owne quarrell: I will defend this Citie for mine owne ſake, and for my ſeruant Danids ſake. Loe; for his life, Ezekiah is beholden (next vnder the infinite goodneſſe of God) to his prayers; for his protection, to the deare memory of his father Dauid; ſurely for ought we find, Ezekiah was no leſſe vpright, and leſſe offenſiue then Dauid; yet both Ezekiah and Ieruſalem ſhall fare the better for Dauids ſake, aboue three hundred yeares after. D

To that man after his owne heart, had God ingaged himſelfe, by his gracious promiſe, to preſerue his throne, his ſeed: God loues to remember his ancient mercies: How happie a thing is it to be faithfull with God; this is the way to oblige thoſe which are yet vnborne; and to intayle bleſſings vpon the ſucceſſions of future generations.

It

A It ſeemes it was ſome peſtilent vlcer that thus indangered the life of Hezekiah. Iſaiah is not a Prophet onely, but a Phyſitian. And Iſaiah ſaid, Take a lump of figs: He that gaue an aſſurance of recouerie, giues a receit for the recouerie. The decree of God includes the meanes: neither can the medicine worke without a word; neither will the word worke without the medicine; both of them muſt meet in the cure: If we ſo truſt the promiſe, that we neglect the preſcript, wee preſume to no purpoſe. Happie is that ſoule, that ſo regards the promiſe of Gods Prophets, as that withall he receiues their counſels.

Nothing could be more proper for the ripening of hard and purulent tumors, then drying figs; Herein Iſaiahs direction was according to nature; Wherefore ſhould wee balke the ordinarie road, where it is both faire and neere?

The ſudden contradiction of the meſſage cauſes a iuſt difficultie in the aſſent. Hezekiah therefore craues a ſigne; not for that he diſtruſted, but that he might truſt the more; we can neuer take too faſt hold of thoſe promiſes of God, which haue not more comfort in the application, then naturall impoſſibilitie in the
B performance. We beleeue, Lord, helpe our vnbeleefe.

The ſicke King hath his option; His father was offerd a ſigne and refuſed it; he ſues for one, and obtaines it: Shall the ſhadow goe forward ten degrees, or backe ten degrees? As if heauen it ſelfe lay open to his choyce; and were readie either to mend this pace, or retire for his confirmation; What creature is not cheerefully forward to obey the faith of Gods ſeruants?

Hezekiah faſtens rather vpon that ſigne which is more hard, more diſagreeing from the courſe of nature; not without good reaſon; Euerie proofe muſt be clearer then the thing to be proued, neither may there want a meet proportion betwixt both; now the going forward of the ſhadow was a motion, no other then naturall, the recouerie of that peſtilent diſeaſe was againſt the ſtreame of nature; the more difficult ſigne therefore, the ſurer euidence.

Whether ſhall we more wonder at the meaſure of the loue of God to Hezekiah, or at the power of Iſaiahs faith in God? Out of both, either the Sunne goes backe in heauen that his ſhadow may goe backe on earth, or the ſhadow no leſſe
C miraculouſly goes backe on earth, whiles the Sun goes forward in heauen. It is true that the Prophet ſpeakes of the ſhadow, not of the Sunne; except perhaps becauſe the motion of the Sunne is beſt diſcerned by the ſhadow; and the motion of the ſhadow is led by the courſe of the Sunne: beſides, that the demonſtration of this miracle is reported to be locall in the Diall of Ahaz, not vniuerſall, in the ſenſible length of the day; withall, the retrait of the Sunne had made a publike and noted change in the frame of nature, this particular alteration of the ſhadow in places limited, might ſatisfie no leſſe without a confuſiue mutation in the face of the world; Whether ſoeuer; to draw the Sunne backe together with the ſhadow; or to draw the ſhadow backe without the Sunne was the proofe of a diuine omnipotencie; able therfore to draw backe the life of Hezekiah, fifteene degrees, from the night of death; towards which it was haſting.

O God, thou wilt rather alter the courſe of heauen and earth, then the faith of thy children ſhall ſincke for want of ſupportation.

D It ſhould ſeeme the Babylonians finding the Aſſyrian power abated by the reuengefull hand of Gods Angell, and their owne diſcord, tooke this aduantage of a reuolt; and now to ſtrengthen their part, fall in with Hezekiah King of Iudah, whom they found the old enemie to the Aſſyrians, and the great fauourite of heauen: Him they wooe with gifts; him they congratulate with Ambaſſages: The fame of Hezekiahs ſickneſſe, recouerie, forme, and aſſurance of cure, haue drawne thither meſſengers, and preſents from Berodach Baladan King of Babylon.

The Caldees were curious ſearchers into the ſecrets of nature, eſpecially into A the motions of the celeſtiall bodies; Though there had beene no politicke relations, this very Aſtronomicall miracle had beene enough to fetch them to Ieruſalem, that they might ſee the man, for whoſe ſake the Sunne forſooke his place, or the ſhadow forſooke the Sunne.

How eaſily haue we ſeene thoſe holy men miſ-carried by proſperitie, againſt whom no miſeries could preuaile? He that ſtood out ſtoutly againſt all the Aſſyrian onſets, clinging the faſter to his God, by how much he was harder aſſaulted by Senacherib, melteth now with theſe Babylonian fauours, and runnes abroad into offenſiue weakeneſſes.

The Babylonian Ambaſſadors are too welcome to Ezekiah; As a man tranſported with the honor of their reſpectiue, and coſtly viſitations, he forgets his teares, and his turning to the wall; hee forgets their incompatible Idolatrie; ſo hugging them in his boſome, as if there had beene no cauſe of ſtrangeneſſe: All his doores flie open to them; and in a vaineglorious oſtentation all his new-gathered treaſures, all his ſtrong armories entertaine their eyes; nothing in his houſe, nothing in his Dominion is hid from them. B

Oh Ezekiah, what meanes this impotent ambition? It is not long ſince thou tareſt off the very plates of the Temple doores, to giue vnto Senacherib; and can thy treaſures be ſuddenly ſo multiplied, that they can be worthy to aſtoniſh forraine beholders? Or, if thy ſtorehouſe, were as rich as the earth, can thy heart be ſo vaine as to be liſted vp with theſe heauie metals? Didſt thou not ſee that heauen it ſelfe was at thy becke, whileſt thou wert humbled? and ſhall a little earthly droſſe haue power ouer thy ſoule? Can the flattering applauſe of ſtrangers let thee looſe into a proud ioy, whom the late meſſage of Gods Prophet reſolued into teares? Oh God, if thou do not keepe vs, as well in our ſunſhine, as in our ſtorme, we are ſure to periſh: As in all time of our tribulation, ſo in all time of our wealth, good Lord deliuer vs.

Alas, how ſleight doth this weakeneſſe ſeeme in our eyes, to reioyce in the abundance of Gods bleſſings? to call in forraine friends to be witneſſes of our plentie? to raiſe our conceits, ſome little, vpon the acclamations of others, vpon the value of our owne abilities? C

Lay thy hand vpon thy mouth, O fooliſh fleſh and bloud when thou ſeeſt the cenſure of thy Maker.

Iſaiah the Prophet is ſent ſpeedily to Hezekiah, with a ſharpe and heart-breaking meſſage: Behold the dayes come that all that is in thine houſe, and that which thy fathers haue laid vp in ſtore vnto this day, ſhall be carried into Babylon; nothing ſhall be left, ſaith the Lord; And of thy ſons that ſhall iſſue from thee, which thou ſhalt be get, ſhall they take away, and they ſhall be Eunuches in the Palace of the King of Babylon.

No ſinne can be light in Hezekiah: the holineſſe of the perſon addes to the vnholineſſe of the act; Eminencie of profeſſion doubles both the offence, and the iudgement. This glorie ſhall end in an ignominious loſſe.

The great and holy God will not digeſt pride in any, much leſſe in his owne. That which was the ſubiect of Hezekiahs ſinne, ſhall bee the matter of his puniſhment; thoſe with whom hee ſinned, ſhall be his auengers; It was his treaſure and munition, wherein he prides himſelfe to theſe men of D
Babylon: The men of Babylon ſhall carrie away his treaſure and munition; What now doth Hezekiah but tempt them with a glorious bootie; as ſome fond traueler that would ſhow his gold to a Theeſe?

Theſe worldly things are furtheſt off from the heart; Perhaps Hezekiah might not be much troubled with their loſſe: Loe, God comes cloſer to him, yet.

As yet was Ezekiah childleſſe; how much better had it bin to continue ſo ſtill, then to be plagued in his iſſue? He ſhall now beget children to ſeruitude; his

A loynes ſhall yeeld Pages to the Court of Babylon: whiles he ſees them borne Princes, he ſhall foreſee them made Eunuches in a forraigne Palace: What comfort can he take in the wiſhes and hopes of ſonnes, when ere they bee borne, he heares them deſtin'd to captiuitie and bondage?

This rod was ſmart, yet good Hezekiah kiſſes it; his heart ſtrucke him no leſſe, then the mouth of the Prophet; meekely therefore doth he yeeld to this diuine correction; Good is the Word of the Lord which thou haſt ſpoken. Thou haſt ſpoken this word, but from the Lord; it is not thine, but his; and being his, it muſt needs be, like himſelfe, good: Good becauſe it is iuſt, for I haue deſerued more, and worſe; Good, becauſe mercifull; for I ſuffer not according to my deſerts. It is not good, if there be peace and truth in my dayes? I haue deſerued a preſent paiment, O God thou deferreſt it; I haue deſerued it in perſon, thou reſerueſt it for thoſe whom I cannot yet ſo feele, becauſe they are not; I haue deſerued war and tumult, thou fauoureſt me with peace; I haue deſeru'd to be ouer-run with ſuperſtition, and Idolatry, thou bleſſeſt me with truth; ſhouldſt thou continue truth vnto me, (though vpon the moſt vnquiet termes)
B the bleſſing were too good for me; but now thou haſt promiſed, and wilt not reuerſe it, that both truth and peace ſhall be in my dayes; Lord I adore thy iuſtice, I bleſſe thy mercie.

Gods children are neither waſpiſh nor ſullen when they are chid or beaten, but patiently hold their backes to the ſtripes of a diſpleaſed mercie; knowing how much more God is to be magnified, for what he might haue done, then repined at, for what he hath done; reſigning themſelues ouer into the hand of that gracious iuſtice, which in their ſmart ſeekes their reformation and glory.

MANASSEH.

AT laſt, ſome three yeares after his recouerie, Hezekiah hath a ſonne; but ſuch a one, as if he could haue fore ſeene, orbitie had beene a bleſſing. 2. King 21. And 1. Chron. 33.

Still in the throne of Iudah there is a ſucceſſion, and interchange of good and euill: Good Iotham is ſucceeded by wicked Ahaz; wicked Ahaz is ſucceeded by good Ezekiah; Good Ezekiah is ſucceded by wicked Manaſſeh: Euill Princes ſucceed to good, for the exerciſe of the Church, and good ſucceed to euill, for the comfort of the Church.

The young yeares of Manaſſah giue aduantage to his miſ-carriage; Euen, whiles he might haue beene vnder the Ferule, he ſwayed the Scepter: Whether may not a child be drawne, eſpecially to a gariſh, and puppet-like ſuperſtition? As infancie is capable of all impreſſions, ſo moſt of the worſt.

Neither did Manaſſeh beginne more earely then he held out long; He raig-
D ned more yeares then his good father liu'd: notwithſtanding the miraculous addition to his age; More then euer any King of Iudah, beſides, could reach: Length of dayes is no true rule of Gods fauour; As plants laſt longer then ſenſitiue creatures, and brute creatures out-liue the reaſonable; ſo, amongſt the reaſonable, it is no newes for the wickedly great, to inherit theſe earthly glories, longer then the beſt.

There wants not apparent reaſon for this difference; Good Princes are fetcht away to a better Crowne; They cannot be loſers, that exchange a weake and fading honor, for a perfection and eternitie of bleſſednesſe: Wicked men liue A long to their owne diſaduantage; they do but carrie ſo many more brands to their hell: If therefore there be a iuſt man that periſheth in his righteouſneſſe; and there be a wicked man that prolongs his life in his wickednesſe, farre be it from vs, either to pittie the remouall of the iuſt, or to enuie the continuance of the wicked; This continues to his loſſe, that departs to an happie aduancement.

It is verie like that Ezekiah marrying ſo late, in the vigour both of his age, and holineſſe, made a carefull choyce of a wife ſutable to his owne pietie; Neither had his delight beene ſo much in her (according to her name) if her delight had not beene, as his, in God; Their iſſue ſwarues from both, ſo fully inheriting the vices of his grand-father Ahaz, as if there had beene no interuention of an Ezekiah: So we haue ſeene the kernell of a well fruited plant degenerate into that crab, or willow, which gaue the originall to his ſtocke; yet can I not ſay that Ezekiah was as free from traducing euill to his ſonne Manaſſeh, as Ahaz was free from traducing good to his ſonne Hezekiah: Euill is incorporated into the beſt nature, whereas euen the leaſt good deſcends from aboue. B

We may not meaſure grace by meanes: Was it poſſible that Manaſſeh hauing beene trained vp in the religious Court of his father Hezekiah, vnder the eye of ſo holy Prophets and Prieſts, vnder the ſhadow of the Temple of God, after a childhood ſeaſoned with ſo gracious precepts, with ſo frequent exerciſe of deuotion, ſhould runne thus wild into all heatheniſh abominations; as if there had beene nothing but Idolatry in the ſeed of his conception, in the milke of his nouriſhment, in the rules of his inſtitution, in the practice of his examples?
How vaine are all outward helps without the influence of Gods Spirit? and that Spirit breathes where he liſteth: good education raiſeth great hopes, but the proofe of them is in the diuine benediction.

I feare to looke at the outrages of this wicked ſonne of Hezekiah: What hauocke doth he make in the Church of God? as if he had beene borne to ruine Religion, as if his onely felicitie had beene to vntwiſt, or teare, in one day, that holy web which his father had beene weauing, nine and twentie yeares? and contrarily, to ſet vp in one houre that offenſiue pile, which had beene aboue C three hundred yeares in pulling downe: ſo long had the high places ſtood; the zeale of Ezekiah in demoliſhing them honoured him, aboue all his predeceſ-ſors: and now the firſt act of this greene head was their reedifying: That miſchiefe may be done in a day, which many ages cannot redreſſe.

Fearefull were the preſages of theſe bold beginnings; From the miſ-building of theſe Chappels of the Hils to the true God, Manaſſeh proceeds to erecting of alters to a falſe: euen to Baal, the God of Ahab, the ſtale Idoll of the heathen; yet further, not content with ſo few Deities, he worſhips all the hoaſt of heauen; and, that he might deſpight God yet more, he ſets vp altars to theſe abuſed riuals of their Maker, in the verie houſe of the Lord; that holy place doth he not feare to defile with the grauen Image of the groue, that he had made:
Neuer Amorite did ſo wickedly as Manaſſeh; and, which was yet worſe, it ſufficed not to be thus wicked himſelfe, but he ſeduced Gods people to theſe abominations; and that his example might moue the more, he ſpares not his owne ſonne from the fire of the Idol-ſacrifice. Neither were his witcheries leſſe en- D ormious, then his Idolatrie; he obſerued times, he vſed inchantments, he dealt with familiar ſpirits, and with wizards: Neither were either of theſe worſe then his crueltie; He ſhed innocent bloud till he had filled Ieruſalem from one end to another.

O Manaſſeh, how no leſſe cruell wert thou to thine owne ſoule, then to thy Iudah: What an hideous liſt of monſtrous impietie is here; Any one of which were enough to draw iudgement vpon a world; but what hell is ſufficient for all together?

What

A What browes are not now lifted vp to an attentiue expectation of some present, and fearefull vengeance from God, vpon such flagitious wickednesse? Therefore thus saith the Lord, Behold I am bringing such euill vpon Ierusalem, and Iudah, that whosoeuer heareth of it, both his eares shall tingle: The person of Manasseh is not capable of reuenge enough; as his sinne dilated it selfe by an infectious diffusion to his people, so shall the punishment. We are sensible of the least touch of our owne miseries, how rarely are we affected with other mens calamities? yet this euill shall be such, as that the rumor of it shall beat no eare that shall not glow with an astonishing commiseration: What then O God, what shall that plague be, which thou threatnest with so much preface of horror? I will stretch ouer Ierusalem the line of Samaria, and the plummet of the house of Ahab; and I will wipe Ierusalem as a man wipeth a dish, wiping it and turning it vpside downe: And I will forsake the remnant of mine inheritance; and I will deliuer them into the hand of their enemies, and they shall become a prey and a spoyle vnto all their enemies.

It is enough O God, it is enough: What eare can but tingle? what eye can
B but weepe? what haire can but start vp? what heart can be but confounded at the mention of so dreadfull a reuenge? Can there be a worse iudgement then desolation, captiuitie, desertion, spoyle, and torture of preuailing enemies? but howeuer, other Cities and Nations haue vndergone these disasters, without wonder, that all this should befall to thy Ierusalem, the place which thou hast chosen to thy selfe, out of the whole earth, the lot of thine inheritance, the seat of thine abode, whereof thou hast said, Here shall be my rest for euer, it is able to amaze all eyes, all eares.

No Citie could fare worse then Samaria, whose inhabitants after a wofull siege, were driuen, like cattle, into a wretched seruitude; Ierusalem shall fare no better from Nebuchadnezzar the King of Babylon: Ierusalem, the glorie of the earth, the dearling of heauen; See, O ye vaine men, that boast of the priuiledges of Chaires and Churches, see, and tremble. There is no place vnder heauen to which the presence of God is so wedded as that the sinnes thereof shall not procure a disdainefull, and finall diuorce: The height of former fa-
C uors shall be but an aggrauation of vengeance.

This totall vastation of Ierusalem shall take time: onwards, God beginnes with the person of wicked Manasseh, against whom he stirres vp the Captaines of the hoast of the late friend, and old enemie of Iudah: Those thornes amongst which he had shrouded his guiltie head, cannot shelter him from their violence; they take him and binde him with fetters of iron, and carrie him to Babylon; There he lies loaded with chaines, in an vncomfortable dungeon, exercised with varietie of tortures, fed with such course pittances of bread, and sips of water, as might maintaine an vnwilling life, to the punishment of the owner. What eye can now pittie the deepest miseries of Manasseh? What but bondage can befit him, that hath so lawlesly abused his libertie? What but an vtter abdication can befit him that hath cast off his God, and doted vpon Deuils? What but a dying life, and a tormenting death can bee fit for a man of bloud?

Who now would not haue giuen this man for lost; and haue lookt when hell
D should claime her owne? But oh the height, oh the depth of diuine mercie! After all these prodigies of sinne, Manasseh is a conuert; When he was in affliction he besought the Lord his God: and humbled himselfe greatly before the God of his fathers. How true is that word of the Prophet, Vexation giues vnderstanding; The viper when he is lashed, casts vp his poyson: The traitor when he is racked, tells that truth which he had else neuer vttered; If the crosse beare vs not to heauen, nothing can: What vse were there of the graine, but for the edge of the sickle, wherewith it is cut downe; the stroake of the flayle, wherewith it is beaten; beaten; the weight and attrition of the mill, wherewith it is cruſhed; the fire A of the ouen wherewith it is baken? Say now, Manaſſeh, with that grandfather of thine (who was, till now, too good for thee); It was good for me that I was afflicted: Euen thine iron was more precious to thee, then thy gold; thy Goale was a more happie lodging to thee, then thy palace; Babylon was a better Schoole to thee, then Ieruſalem: what fooles are we to frowne vpon our afflictions? Theſe, how crabbed ſoeuer, are our beſt friends. They are not, indeed, for our pleaſure, they are for our profit: their iſſue makes them worthy of a welcome. What doe we care how bitter that potion be which brings health?

How farre a man may goe, and yet turne? Could there be fouler ſinnes then theſe? Lo, here was Idolatrie in the height, violation of Gods houſe, ſorceries of all kinds, bloudie crueltie to his owne fleſh, to the Saints of God; and all theſe againſt the ſtreame of a religious inſtitution, of the zealous counſels of Gods Prophets, of the checks of his owne heart.

Who can complaine that the way of heauen is blocked vp againſt him, when B
he ſees ſuch a ſinner enter? Say the worſt againſt thy ſelfe, O thou clamorous ſoule; Here is one that murthered men, defied God, worſhipt diuels; and yet finds the way to repentance; if thou be worſe then he, denie (if thou canſt) that to thy ſelfe, which God hath not denied to thee, capacitie of grace: In the meane time; know that it is not thy ſinne, but thine impenitence that barres heauen againſt thee.

Preſume not yet, O man, whoſoeuer thou art, of the libertie of thy conuerſion; as if thou couldeſt run on lawleſly in a courſe of ſinning, till thou come to the brimme of hell; and then couldſt ſuddenly ſtop, and returne at leaſure: the mercie of God neuer ſet period to a wilfull ſinner; neither yet did his owne corrupt deſires; ſo as when he is gone the furtheſt he could yet ſtay himſelfe from another ſtep: No man that truely repents is refuſed: but many a one ſinnes ſo long, that he cannot repent. His cuſtome of wickedneſſe hath obdur'd his heart, and made it flint to all good impreſſions. There were Ieroboams, and Abijams, and Ahabs, and Ioaſhes, and Ahazes, in theſe ſacred thrones, there C was but one Manaſſeh: God hath not left in any mans hand the raines of his owne heart, to pace, and turne, and ſtop as he liſts; This priuiledge is reſerued to him that made it; It is not of him that wils, nor of him that runs, but of God that ſhowes mercie: and that mercie neglected, iuſtly binds ouer to iudgement.

I wonder not at Manaſſeh, either ſinning, or repenting, I wonder at thy goodnes, O Lord, who after thy iuſt permiſſion of his ſinne, calleſt him thus graciouſly to repent, and ſo receiueſt him repenting: So as Manaſſeh was not a more loathſome and monſtrous ſpectacle of wickedneſſe, then he is now a pleaſing and vſefull patterne of conuerſion; Who can now deſpaire of thy mercie, O God, that ſees the teares of a Manaſſeh accepted? when we haue debauched our worſt; our euill cannot match with thy goodneſſe; rather it is the praiſe of thine infinite ſtore, that where ſinne abounds, grace abounds much more; O keepe vs from a preſumption of grace, that we may repent; and raiſe vs from a diſtruſt of grace when we haue repented.

No ſooner is Manaſſeh penitent, then he is free; his prayers haue at once D looſed him from his ſinnes, and from his chaines; and of a captiue haue made him a King; and from the dungeon of Babylon haue reſtored him to the Palace of Ieruſalem: How eaſie is it for the ſame hand that wounds to cure: What cannot feruent prayers doe, either for our reſcuing from euill, or for our inueſting with good.

Then Manaſſeh knew that the Lord he was God. Then? and not before? Could his younger yeares eſcape the knowledge of Gods miraculous deliuerance of Ieruſalem from the Aſſyrians? Could he but know the ſlaughter that Gods

Angell

A Angell made in one night, of an hundred foureſcore and fiue thouſand? Could hee but haue heard the iuſt reuenge vpon Senacherib? Could he be ignorant of his fathers ſupernaturall recouerie? Could he but ſee that euerlaſting monument of the noted degrees in the Diall of Ahaz? Could he auoid the ſenſe of thoſe fifteene yeares, which were ſuper-added to his fathers age? What one of theſe proofes doth not euince a Deitie? Yet, till his owne ſmart, and cure, Manaſſeh knew not that the Lord was God.

Fooliſh ſinners pay deare for their knowledge; neither will indure to bee taught good, cheape: ſo we haue ſeene reſtie horſes that will not moue till they bleed with the ſpur: So we haue ſeene dull and careleſſe children, that will learne nothing but what is put into them with the rod.

The Almightie will be ſure to be knowne for what he is, if not by faire meanes, yet by foule; If our proſperitie, and peace, and ſweet experience of his mercy can win vs to acknowledge him, it is more for our eaſe, but, if wee will needes be taught by ſtripes, it is no leſſe for his glorie.

Manaſſeh now returnes another man to Ieruſalem: With what indignation
B doth he looke vpon his old follies? and now, all the amends he can make, is to vndoe what he did; to doe that which he vndid: He tooke away the ſtrange Gods, and the Idoll out of the houſe of the Lord, and all the alters that he had built in the mount of the houſe of the Lord, and in Ieruſalem, and caſt them out of the Citie. True repentance begins to decline at the ablatiue; deſtroying thoſe monuments of ſhame which former errour had reared; The thornes muſt firſt be ſtubbed vp, ere the ground can be capable of ſeed; The true method of grace, is firſt, Ceaſe to doe euill; then, Learne to doe good.

In vaine had Manaſſeh profeſſed a repentance, if the ſtrange gods had ſtill held poſſeſſion of Ieruſalem, if the Idoll had ſtill harboured in Gods Temple, if forraine altars had ſtill ſmoked vpon the holy mountaine; Away with all this traſh, when once Manaſſeh comes to a true ſenſe of pietie.

There is nothing but hypocriſie in that penitent, who after all vowes, and teares, retaines his old abhominations; It is that poore peece of ſatisfaction which we can giue to the diuine iuſtice, in a heartie indignation, to fling downe
C that cup of wickedneſſe wherewith we haue beene bewitched, and to trample vpon the ſheards: without which, confeſſion is but winde, and the droppes of contrition, water.

The liuiug God loues to dwell cleane, hee will not come vnder the roofe of Idols, nor admit Idols to come vnder his: Firſt therefore, Manaſſeh caſts out the ſtrange Gods and Idols, and altars; and then He repaires the Alter of the Lord, and ſacrifices thereon peace-offerings, and thanke-offerings. Not, till he had pull'd downe, might he build; and when he had pull'd downe, he muſt build: True repentance is no leſſe actiue of good. What is it the better, if when the Idolatrous alters are defaced, the true God hath not an Altar erected to his Name? In many Altars was ſuperſtition, in no altars, Atheiſme.

Neither doth penitent Manaſſeh build God a new Altar, but he repaires the old, which by long diſ-vſe lay waſt, and was moſſie and mouldred with age and neglect.

God loues well his owne inſtitutions; neither can he abide innouations, ſo
D much as in the out-ſides of his ſeruices. It is an happie worke to vindicate any ordinance of God from the iniuries of times, and to reſtore it to the originall glorie.

What haue our pious gouernors done other in Religion? had we gone about to lay a new foundation, the worke had bin accurſed; now we haue only, ſcraped off ſome ſuperfluous moſſe, that was growne vpon theſe holy ſtones we haue cemented ſome broken peeces, we haue pointed ſome crazie corners with wholſome morter, in ſtead of baſe clay, wherewith it was diſgracefully

patched vp: The altar is old, it is Gods Altar: It is not new, not ours: If wee A haue laid one new ſtone in this ſacred building, let it flye in our faces, and beat out our eyes.

On this repaired altar doth Manaſſeh ſend vp the ſacrifices of his peace, of his thankefulneſſe; and doubtleſſe the God of heauen ſmells a ſweet ſauour of reſt; No perfume is ſo pleaſing to God, as that which is caſt in by a penitent hand.

It had not ſerued the turne that Manaſſeh had aproached alone to this renued altar; As his lewd example had withdrawne the people from their God; ſo now he commands Iudah to ſerue the Lord God of Iſrael; Had he beene ſilent, hee could not haue beene vnfollowed: Euerie act of greatneſſe is preceptiue; but now that Religion is made Law, what Iſraelite will not be deuout?

The true God hath now no competitour in Iudah; All the Idolls are pull'd downe, the high places will not be pull'd downe, an ill guiſe is eaſily taken vp, it is not ſo eaſily left: After a common depravation of Religion, it is hard to returne vnto the firſt puritie: as when a garment is deepely ſoiled, it cannot B without many lauers recouer the former cleanneſſe.

2. Kings 22. And 23.

YEt, if we muſt alter from our ſelues, it is better to be a Manaſſeh, then a Ioaſh: Ioaſh beganne well, and ended ill: Manaſſeh beganne ill, and ended well; his age varied from his youth; no leſſe, then one mans condition can varie from another; His poſteritie ſucceeded in both; Ammon his ſonne ſucceeded in the ſinnes of Manaſſehs youth: Ioſiah his C grand-child ſucceeded in the vertues of his age. What a vaſt difference doth grace make in the ſame age? Manaſſeh beganne his raigne at twelue yeares; Ioſiah at eight; Manaſſeh was religiouſly bred vnder Hezekiah; Ioſiah was miſ-nurtured vnder Ammon; and yet Manaſſeh runnes into abſurd Idolatries, Ioſiah is holy and deuout. The Spirit of God breathes freely; not confining it ſelfe to times, or meanes.

No rules can bind the hands of the Almightie; It is in ordinarie proofe too true a word, that was ſaid of old, Woe be to thee O Land, whoſe King is a child: the goodneſſe of God makes his owne exceptions; Iudah neuer fared better, then in the greene yeares of a Ioſiah: If we may not rather meaſure youth, and age by gouernment, and diſpoſition, then by yeares: Surely thus, Ioſiah was older with ſmooth cheekes, then Manaſſeh with gray haires. Happie is the infancie of Princes, when it falles into the hands of faithfull Councellors.

A good patterne is no ſmall helpe for young beginners; Ioſiah ſets his father Dauid before him, not Ammon, not Manaſſeh: Examples are the beſt rules for D the inexperienced; where their choice is good, the directions are eaſieſt: The Lawes of God are the wayes of Dauid; Thoſe Lawes were the rule, theſe wayes were the practice; Good Ioſiah walkes in all the wayes of his Father Dauid.

Euen the minoritie of Ioſiah was not idle; we cannot be good too early: At eight yeares it was enough to haue his eare open to heare good counſaile; to haue his eyes and heart open to ſeeke after God: At twelue, he begins to act and ſhowes well that he hath found the God he ſought: Then he addreſſes himſelfe

A himselfe to purge Iudah, and Ierusalem, from the high places, groues, image altars; wherewith it was defiled; burning the bones of the idolatrous Priests vpon their altars; strawing the ashes of the idols vpon the graues of them that had sacrificed to them, striuing by those fires, and mattocks to testifie his zealous detestation of all idolatrie. 2.Chron. 34.3.

The house must first be cleansed, ere it can be garnished; no man will cast away his cost vpon vncleane heaps; so soone as the Temple was purged, Iosiah bends his thoughts vpon the repayring and beautifying of this house of the Lord.

What stir was there in Iudah, wherein Gods Temple suffered not? Sixe seuerall times was it pillaged, whether out of force, or will: First, Iehoash King of Iudah is faine by the spoile of it to stop the mouth of Hazael; Then, Ioash King of Israel fils his owne hands with that sacred spoile, in the dayes of Amaziah; after this, Ahaz rifles it for Tiglath Pileser, King of Assyria; then Hezekiah is forced to ransacke the treasures of it for Senacherib; yet after, the sacriledge of Manasseh makes that bootie of it, which his later times indeuoured to
B restore; and now lastly, Ammon his sonne neglects the frame, embeazels the furniture of this holy place: The verie pile began to complaine of age and vnrespect. Now comes good Iosiah, and in his eighteenth yeare (when other young Gallants would haue thought of nothing but pleasure, and iollitie) takes vp the latest care of his father Dauid, and giues order for the repayring of the Temple.

The keepers of the doore haue receiued the contribution of all faithfull Iewes, for this pious vse; the King sends Shaphan the scribe to Helkiah the Priest to summe it vp, and to deliuer it vnto Carpenters, and Masons, for so holy a worke.

How well doth it beseeme the care of a religious Prince, to set the Priests and Scribes in hand with reedifying the Temple? The command is the Kings, the charge is the high-Priests, the execution is the workemens; when the labourers are faithfull in doing the worke, and the high-Priest in the directing it, and the King in inioyning it, Gods House cannot faile of an happie perfection; but when any of these slackens, the businesse must needs languish.

C How God blesses the deuout indeauours of his seruants? Whiles Helkiah was diligently suruaying the breaches and the reparation of the Temple, hee lights vpon the booke of the Law: The authenticke and originall Booke of Deut.31.26. Gods Law was by a speciall charge appointed to be carefully kept within a safe shrine, in the Sanctuarie: In the depraued times of Idolatrie, some faithfull Priest (to make sure worke) had locked it fast vp, in some corner of the Temple, from the reach of all hands, of all eyes: as knowing how impossible it was, that diuine monument could otherwise escape the furie of prophane guiltinesse: Some few transcripts there were doubtlesse, (parcels of this sacred Booke) in other hands; neither doubt I, but as Helkiah had beene formerly well acquainted with this holy volume) now of long time hid) so the eares of good Iosiah had beene inured to some passages thereof; but the whole body of these awfull Records, since the late night of Idolatrous confusion, and persecution saw no light, till now; this precious treasure doth Helkiah find, whiles he digs for the Temple: Neuer man laboured to the reparation of Gods Church, but he met
D with a blessing more then he looked for.

Helkiah the Priest, and Shaphan the scribe do not ingrosse this inualuable wealth into their owne hands, nor suppresse these more then sacred roles, for their owne aduantage; but transmit them, first to the eares of the King, then by him, to the people: It is not the praise of a good scribe, to lay vp, but to bring forth, both old and new: And if the Priests lips shall keepe knowledge, they keepe it to impart, not to smoother, The people shall seeke the Law at his mouth; for he is the messenger of the Lord of Hosts.

So ſoone as the good King heares the words of the booke of the Law, and in A ſpeciall, thoſe dreadfull threats of iudgement, denounced againſt the Idolatries of his Iudah, he rends his clothes, to ſhow his heart rent with ſorrow, and fearefull expectation of thoſe plagues; and waſhes his boſome with teares. Oh gracious tenderneſſe of Ioſiah: he doth but once heare the Law read, and is thus humbled; humbled for his fathers ſinnes, for the ſinnes of his people: how manie of vs, after a thouſand hammerings of the menaces of Gods Law, vpon our guiltie ſoules, continue yet inſenſible of our danger? The verie reading of this Law doth thus affect him; the preaching of it ſtirs not vs; The ſinnes of others ſtrucke thus deepe with him; our owne are ſleighted by vs: A ſoft heart is the beſt tempered for God: So Phyſitians are wont to like thoſe bodies beſt, which are eaſieſt to worke vpon: O God make our clay, waxe, and our waxe pliable to thine hands; ſo ſhall we be ſure to be free either from ſinne, or from the hurt of ſinne.

It is no holy ſorrow that ſends vs not to God; Ioſiah is not moaped with a diſtractiue griefe, or an aſtoniſhing feare, but in the height of his paſſion, ſends fiue choiſe meſſengers to Huldah the Propheteſſe, to enquire of the Lord, for B himſelfe, for Iudah: It is an happie trouble that driues vs to this refuge. I doe not heare any of theſe Courtiers reply to this godly motion of their young King: Alas, Sir, what meanes this deepe perplexitie? What needs all this buſie inquiſition? If your father were idolatrous, what is that to you, who haue abandoned his ſinnes? If your people were once idolatrous, what is that to you, yea to them, who haue expiated theſe crimes by their repentance? Haue you not carefully reformed all thoſe abuſes? hath not your happie reformation made an abundant amends for thoſe wrongs? Spare your teares, and ſaue the labour of your meſſengers; All is well, all ſhall be well; theſe iudgements are for the obſtinate; had we beene ſtill guiltie, theſe feares had beene iuſt: were we ſtill in danger, what had we gained by our conuerſion? Rather, as glad to ſecond the religious cares of their young King, they feed his holy anxieties with a iuſt aggrauation of perill; and by their good counſell, whet theſe his zealous deſires of a ſpeedie reſolution: That ſtate cannot but be happie, whoſe Prieſts and Peeres are readie as to ſuggeſt, ſo to cheriſh, and execute the deuout proiects of C their Soueraignes.

The graue Prieſt, the learned ſcribe, the honourable Courtiers doe not diſ-daine to knocke at the doore of a Propheteſſe: Neither doth any of them ſay;
It were hard if we ſhould not haue as much acquaintance with God, as a woman; but in an humble acknowledgement of her Graces, they come to learne the will of God, from her mouth: True pietie is modeſt, and ſtands not vpon termes of reputation, in the buſineſſes of God; but willingly honors his gifts in any ſubiect, leaſt of all in it ſelfe.

The ſexe is not more noted in Huldah, then the condition; As ſhe was a woman, ſo a wife; the wife of Shallum: Holy matrimonie was no hinderance to her diuine reuelations; ſhe was at once a Propheteſſe in her colledge, an huſ-wife in her family; It was neuer the practice of God to confine his graces to virginitie: At this verie time the famous Prophet Ieremie flouriſhed, ſome yeares had hee alreadie ſpent in this publike ſeruice; why was not he rather conſulted by Ioſiah? It is not vnlike that ſome propheticall imployments called D him away, at this time from Ieruſalem: His preſence could not haue beene balked: purpoſely, doubtleſſe doth God caſt his meſſage vpon the point of that abſence, that he might honour the weaker veſſell with his diuine oracle; and exerciſe the humilitie of ſo great clients: in the anſwers of God, it is not to be regarded, who ſpeakes, but from whom: The iniurie redounds to God, if the weakeneſſes of the perſon cauſe vs to vnder-value the authoritie of the function.

As

A As Iosiah and his messengers doe not despise Huldah, because she was a woman; so Huldah doth not flatter Iosiah, because a King: Go tell the man that sent you; Thus saith the Lord: Behold I will bring euill vpon this place, Loe, he that was as God to his subiects, is but as man to the Propheteſſe: neither is the message euer the sweeter, because it is required by a Prince; No circumstance may varie the forme of diuine truth.

Euill must befall Ierusalem and Iudah, yea, all the words of that booke, must allight vpon the inhabitants of both: In how bad a case wee may be, and yet thinke our selues not safe onely, but happie? These Iewes had forgotten their old reuolts; and now hauing framed themselues to holy courses; promised themselues nothing but peace, when the Propheteſſe foresees, and foretels their approching ruine: Euen their old score must be paid, after the opinion of a cleere agreement. In vaine shall we hope to quit our arrerages by prorogation This Propheteſſe had immediate visions from God, yet she must speake out of the Booke; There was neuer any reuelation from the Lord, that crossed his writings: His hand, and his tongue agree eternally: If that booke haue cursed
B Iudah, she may not absolue it.

Yet, what a gracious mixture was here of mercie, with seueritie; seueritie to Iudah, mercie to Iosiah; Iudah shall be plagued, and shall become a desolation, and a curse; Iosiah shall be quietly housed in his graue, before this storme fall vpon Iudah: His eye shall not see, what his people shall feele: It is enough that the expectation of these euills afflicts him, the sense shall not.

Whence is this indulgence? Because thine heart was tender, and thou hast humbled thy selfe before the Lord. How happie a thing it is to be a reed vnto Gods iudgements, rather then an oake, the meeke and gentle reed stoops and therefore stands, the oake stands stiffely out against the strongest gust, and therefore is turned vp by the roots: At least, let vs lament those sinnes we haue not auoided; and mourne for the sinnes of others, whiles we hate our owne.

He that found himselfe exempted from this vengeance, by his repentance and deepe humiliation, would faine find the same way for the deliuerance of his people: The same words of the Law therefore, that had wrought vpon his
C heart, are by him caused to be publikely read in the eares of Iudah, and Ierusalem; The assembly is vniuersall, of Priests, Prophets, people, both small and great; because the sinne was such, the danger was such: that no man may complaine to want information, the Law of God sounds in euery eare. If our eare be shut to the Law, the sinne is ours; but if the Law be shut to our eares, the sinne is of our gouernors: Woe be to them that hide Gods Booke from the people, as they would doe rats-bane from the eyes of children: Ignorant soules cannot perish without their murder: There is no feare of knowing too much, there is too much feare of practizing too little: Now, if the people doe not imitate their King in relenting, they are not worthy to partake with them in his impunitie. Howsoeuer, they shall not want a great example; as of sorrow, so of amendment. Good Iosiah stands by the pillar, and solemnly renewes his Couenant with his God; the people cannot for shame refuse to second him: Euen they that lookt for a destruction, yet doe not with-draw their obedience; Gods Children may not be sullen vnder his corrections, but whether they ex-
D pect or feele smart, are no other then dutifull to his awfull hand. As a man that finds he hath done something that might indanger the forfait of his fauour, puts himselfe into some deseruing action, whereby he may hope to re-indeare himselfe, so doth Iosiah here; No indeauor is enough to testifie his zeale to that name of God which was so profaned by his peoples Idolatrie; what euer monuments were yet remaining of wicked Paganisme, he defaces with indignation; he burnes the vessels of Baal, and puts downe his Chemarim, destroyes the houses of the Sodomites, strawes the powder of their Idols in the brooke Kedron, defiles

Topheth, takes away the horſes, of the Sunne, burnes the charets of the Sunne with fire, and omits nothing that might reconcile God, cleare Iudah, perfect a reformation. A

Neither is this care confined to Ieruſalem, and the neighbouring Townes, but ſtretches it ſelfe to the vtmoſt coaſts of Ioſiahs Kingdome; Bethel was the infamous ſeat of the pollution of Iſrael; it ſeemes the heyres of Ieroboam (who ſet vp his golden Calfe there) inioyed it not long; the Kings of Iudah recouered it to their crowne, but, it had not yet recouered it ſelfe from that ancient infection: Thither doth good Ioſiah ſends the vnhallowed aſhes of Baals Reliques, to ſtaine that altar firſt, which he will ſoone after deface.

The time was, and it was no leſſe then three hundred and fiftie yeares ſince, that the man of God, out of Iudah, cried againſt Ieroboams altar.

O Altar, Altar; Thus ſaith the Lord; Behold a Child ſhall be borne, vnto the Houſe of Dauid, Ioſiah by name, and vpon thee ſhall he offer the Prieſts of the high-places, that burne incenſe vpon thee, and mens bones ſhall be burnt vpon thee.

And now is the houre come, wherein euerie of thoſe words ſhall be accompliſhed: It could not but be a great confirmation to Ioſiah, to ſee that God ſo long agoe fore-markt him for his owne; and fore-nam'd him to ſo zealous a ſeruice. B

All our names are equally foreknowne of that diuine prouidence, though not fore-ſpoken: neither can any act paſſe from vs, which was not pre-determined in that eternal Counſel of the Almightie: neither can any act that is pre-determined be vnfulfilled vpon earth: Interuention of time breakes no ſquare in the diuine decrees: our pur-blind eyes ſee nothing, but that which toucheth their lids; the quicke ſight of Gods preſcience ſees that, as preſent, which is a world off: According to the prediction, the ſtench of dead mens bones is a fit perfume to ſend vp from this altar to heauen; whoſe beſt ſacrifices ſauoured worſe in the noſtrils of God. And the bloud of the idolatrous ſacrificers was a meet oblation to that God, who had beene diſhonoured by their burnt-offerings to his baſe corriuals.

Euen that Prophet who foretold this, had his toomb in Bethel, and that toomb had his inſcription; His weakeneſſe might not rob him of the honour of his ſepulture: How palpably do theſe Iſraelites condemne themſelues, whiles they reſerue ſo famous a monument of their owne conuiction. It was no preiudice to this holy Prophet, that his bones lay amonſt the ſepulchers of idolaters. His Epitaph preſerued thoſe bones from burning, vpon that altar, which he had accurſed; As the Lyon might not teare his carcaſſe, when he died, ſo now, the furie of the multitude may not violate his verie bones, in the graue. C

I do not ſee Ioſiah ſaue them for reliques; I heare him command they ſhall reſt in peace; it is fit the dead bodies of Gods Saints ſhould be as free from contempt, as from ſuperſtition.

After the remouall of theſe rites of falſe worſhip, it is time to bring in the true: Now a ſolemne Paſſeouer ſhall be kept vnto the Lord, by the charge of Ioſiah: That booke of the Law ſets him, the time, place, circumſtances, of this Sacrament, his zeale ſo carefully followes it, that ſince the dayes of Samuel, this feaſt was neuer ſo gloriouſly, ſo punctually celebrated. Ieruſalem is the place, the fourteenth day of the firſt moneth is the time, the Leuites are the actors, a yearling & ſpotleſſe Lambe is the prouiſion; no bone of it is broken, the bloud is ſprinkled vpon the doore-poſtes, it is roaſted whole, eaten with ſowre herbs, with bread vnleauened; the remainder is conſumed by fire. The law, the ſacrifices, had beene in vaine, If the Paſſeouer had beene neglected: No true Iſraelite might want, whether this monument of their deliuerance paſt, or this Type of the Meſſiah to come. Rather then faile. Ioſiah s bountie ſhall ſupply to Iudah Lambs for their paſchall deuotion: No almes is ſo acceptable, as that whereby the ſoule is furthered. D

IOSIAH'S Death; with the desolation of the Temple, and Ierusalem.

Iosiah hath now happily setled the affaires both of God, and the state: and now hath sweet leisure to inioy himselfe, and his people: his conscience doth not more cheare him at home, then his subiects abroad; Neuer King raigned with more officious pietie to God, with more loue, and applause of men: But what stabilitie is there in these earthly things? B how seldome is excellencie in any kind long-liu'd? In the very strength of his age, in the height of his strength, is Iosiah withdrawne from the earth; as not without a mercifull intention of his glorie, on Gods behalfe, so, not without some weakenesse, on his owne. Pharaoh Necho King of Egypt comes vp to fight against the King of Assyria: What is that to Iosiah? Perhaps the Egyptians attempted to passe thorow the land of Iudah, towards Carchemish the seat of his warre; but, as a neighbour, not as an enemie: Iosiah resists him; as neither holding it safe to admit a forraine power into the bosome of his Countrey, nor daring to giue so faire an occasion of prouoking the Assyrian hostilitie against him.

2 Kings 23. verse 29. And 2. Chron. 35. verse 20. 2. Chron. 36.

The King of Egypt mildly deprecates this enmitie, he sends Ambassadors to Iosiah, saying, What haue I to doe with thee thou King of Iudah, I come not against thee, this day, but against the house wherewith I haue warre; for God commanded me to make haste; forbeare thee from medling with God, who is with me, that hee destroy thee not.

C What friend could haue said more? what Prophet could haue aduised more holily? why doth not good Iosiah say with himselfe; There may bee truth in this suggestion; God may haue sent this man, to be a scourge of mine old enemie, of Assur: If the hand of the Almightie be in this designe, why doe I oppose it? The quarrell is not mine, why doe I thrust my finger into this flame, vnbidden; Wherefore should I hazard the effusion of bloud, vpon an harmelesse passage? Can I heare him plead a command from God, and not inquire into it? How easie is it for me to know the certaintie of this pretended commission? Haue not I the Priests, and Prophets of God about me? Let me first goe and consult his oracle; If God haue sent him, and forbidden me, why should my courage carrie me against my pietie?

It is strange that the good heart of Iosiah could escape these thoughts, these resolutions: Yet, he that vpon the generall threats of Gods Law against Iudah, sends messengers to inquire of a Propheteſſe; now vpon these particular threats of danger to himselfe; speakes not, stirs not: The famous Prophet Ieremie D was then liuing, and Zephaniah; besides a whole Colledge of Seers, Iosiah doth not so much as send out of doores, to aske, Shall I goe vp against the King of Egypt? Sometimes, both grace and wit are asleepe in the holiest and wariest brests: the best of all Gods Saints may be sometimes miscarried by their passions to their cost.

The wise prouidence of God hath mercifully determined to leaue Iosiah to his owne counsels, that by the weakenesse of his seruant, he might take occasion to perfit his glorie: Euen that wherein Iosiah was wanting vnto God, shall concurre to

to the making vp of Gods promiſe to Ioſiah: when we are the moſt blind-folded, we run on the wayes of Gods hidden decrees; and, what euer our intents be, cannot, if we would, goe out of that vnknowne path. A

Needs will Ioſiah put himſelfe into armes againſt an vnwilling enemie; and, to be leſſe noted, diſguiſes himſelfe. The fatall arrow of an Egyptian archer findes him out, in the throng, and giues him his deathes-wound; Now; too late he calls to a retrait; his changed Charet is turned to a Biere, to carrie his bleeding corps to his graue, in Ieruſalem.

What eye doth not now pitty and lament the vntimely end of a Ioſiah? Whom can it chooſe but affect, to ſee a religious, iuſt, vertuous Prince ſnatcht away in the vigour of his age? After all our fooliſh moane, the prouidence that directed that ſhaft to his lighting place, intends that wound for a ſtroke of mercie: The God whom Ioſiah ſerues, lookes through his death, at his glorie: and by this ſudden violence will deliuer him from the view, and participation of the miſeries of Iudah, which had beene many deaths; and fetches him to the participation of that happineſſe, which could counteruaile more deathes, then could B be incident into a Ioſiah. Oh the wonderfull goodneſſe of the Almightie, whoſe verie iudgements are mercifull; Oh the ſafe condition of Gods children, whom verie paine eaſeth, whom death reuiues, whom diſſolution vnites, whom laſtly their verie ſinne and temptation glorifies.

How happily hath Ioſiah gained by this change? In ſtead of a froward people, he now is ſorted with Saints and Angels; in ſtead of a fading, and corruptible crowne, he now inioyes an eternall. The orphane ſubiects are readie to weepe out their eyes, for ſorrow; their loſſe cannot be ſo great, as his gaine: he is glorious, they, as their ſinnes had deſerued, miſerable. If the ſeparated ſoule could be capable of paſſion, could Ioſiah haue ſeene, after his departure, the calamities of his ſons, of his people, it could not but haue laid ſiege to his peace.

The ſad ſubiects proclaime his ſonne Iehoahaz, King in ſtead of ſo lamented a father; He both doth ill, and fares ill: By that time he hath ſat but three moneths in the throne, Pharaoh Nechoh King of Egypt ſeconds the fathers C death, with the ſonnes captiuitie: This victorious enemie puts downe the wicked ſonne of Ioſiah, and lades him with chaines at Riblath, in the land at Hamath; and lades his people with the tribute of an hundred talents of ſiluer, and a talent of gold: Yet, as if he that was vnwiling to fight with Ioſiah, were no leſſe vnwilling to root out his poſteritie, this Egyptian ſets Eliakim, the ſecond ſonne of Ioſiah, vpon the ſeat of his father; and, that he might be all his, changes his name to Iehoiakim: oh the wofull and vnworthy ſucceſſion of Ioſiah; one ſonne is a priſoner, the other is a tributarie; both are wicked. After that Iehoiakim hath beene ſome yeares Pharoahs Bayliue, to gather, and racke the deare rents of Iudah; Nebuchadnezzar the great King of Babylon comes vp, and ſweepes away both the Lord, and his Feodarie, Pharaoh, and Iehoiakim.

So farre was the ambitious Egyptian from maintaining his incroachment vpon the territories of Iudah, that he could not now hold his owne: From Nilus to Euphrates, all is loſt: So ſubiect are the leſſer powers ſtill to be ſwallowed D vp of the greater; ſo iuſt it is with God, that they which will be affecting vndue inlargement of their eſtates, ſhould fall ſhort of what they had.

Iehoiakim is caired in fetters to Babylon: and now in that dungeon of his captiuitie, hath more leaſure, then grace, to bethinke himſelfe of all his abominations; and whiles he inherits the ſad lodging of his great grandfather, Manaſſeh, inherits not his ſucceſſe.

While he is rotting in this Goale, his young ſonne Iehoiachin ſtarts vp in his throne; like to a muſhrom that riſes vp in a night, and withers in a day: Within three

A three moneths, and ten dayes is that young Prince (the meet ſonne of ſuch a father) fetcht vp in irons to his fathers priſon; Neither ſhall he goe alone; his attendance ſhall adde to his miſerie; His mother, his wiues, his officers, his peeres, his craftſmen, his warriours accompanie him, manicled, and chained, to their perpetuall bondage.

Now, according to Iſaiahs word, it would haue beene great preferment for the fruit of Hezekiahs loynes to be Pages in the Court of Babylon.

One onely branch yet remaines of the vnhappie ſtocke of holy Ioſiah, Mattaniah,, the brother of Ioahaiakim, whom Nebuchadnezzar (changing his name to Zedekiah) ſets vp in that forlorne, and tributarie throne; There might he haue liued (though an vnderling) yet peaceable; This man (to make vp the meaſure of Gods iuſt iudgements) as he was euer a rebell to God, ſo proues rebellious to his Soueraigne maſter, the King of Babylon: The Prophet Ieremie hath forewarn'd him in vaine; nothing could teach this man, but ſmart.

Who can looke for other then furie from Nebuchadnezzar, againſt Ieruſalem, which now had affronted him with three ſeuerall ſucceſſions of reuolts, and
B conſpiracies againſt his gouernement; and thrice abuſed his bountie, and indulgence? with a mightie army doth he therefore come vp againſt his ſeditious deputie; and beſieges Ieruſalem, and blockes it vp with forts round about. After two yeares ſiege, the Caldees without and the famine within, haue preuailed; King Zedekiah and his ſouldiers are fled away by night, as thinking themſelues happie, if they might abandon their walls, and ſaue their liues.

The Chaldees (as caring more for the birdes, then for the neſt) purſue them, and ouertake Zedekiah, forſaken of all his forces, in the plaine of Iericho, and bring him to Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon. What can ſo vnthankefull and perfidious a vaſſall expect, but the worſt of reuenge? The ſentence is fearefull: Firſt, the ſonnes of Zedekiah are ſlaine before his eyes; then thoſe eyes of his (as if they had ſeene enough, when they had ſeene him childleſſe) are put out: His eyes are onely lent him ſo long, as to torment him with the ſight of his owne vtmoſt diſcomfort; Had his ſonnes but ouer-liued his eyes, the griefe had beene ſo much the leſſe, as the apprehenſion of it had beene leſſe liuely, and
C piercing; Now, this wofull obiect ſhall ſhut vp his ſight, that euen when his bodily eyes are gone, yet the eyes of his minde might euer ſee what he laſt ſaw; That thus his ſonnes might bee euer dying before him, and himſelfe in their death euer miſerable.

Who doth not now wiſh that the bloud of Hezekiah and Ioſiah could haue beene ſeuered from theſe impure dregs of their lewd iſſue? no man could pittie the offenders, were it not for the mixture of the intereſt of ſo holy progenitors.

No more ſorrow can come in at the windowes of Zedekiah, more ſhall come in at his doores; his eare ſhall receiue what more to rue for his Ieruſalem: Nebuzaradan the great Marſhall of the King of Babylon comes vp againſt that deplored Citie, and breakes downe the walls of it, round about, and burnes the Temple of the Lord, and the Kings houſe, and euery faire Pallace of Ieruſalem, with fire; driues away the remainder of her inhabitants, into Captiuitie, carries away the laſt ſpoyles of the glorious Temple. Oh Ieruſalem, Ieruſalem, the wonder
D of all times, the paragon of nations, the glorie of the earth, the fauorite of heauen, how art thou now becomes heapes of aſhes, hilles of rubbiſh, a ſpectacle of deſolation, a monument of ruine? If later, yet no leſſe deepe haſt thou now pledged that bitter cup of Gods vengeance, to thy ſiſter Samaria; How carefully had thy God forwarned thee? Though Iſrael play the harlot, yet, let not Iudah ſinne: Loe now, as thine iniquities, ſo thy iudgements haue ouertaken her: Both lie together in the duſt, both are made a curſe to all poſterities: O God, what place ſhall thy iuſtice ſpare, if Ieruſalem haue periſhed? If that delight of thine thine were cut off for her wickednesse, Let vs not bee high minded but feare. A

What pittie it was to see those goodly Cedars of the Temple flaming vp higher then they stood in Lebanon! to see those curious marbles, which neuer felt the dint of the pick-axe, or hammer, in the laying, wounded with mattockes, and wounding the earth in their fall? to see the holy of holies, whereinto none might enter but the high-priest, once a yeare, thronged with Pagans; the vailes rent, the sacred Arke of God violated, and defaced, the Tables ouer-turned, the Altars broken downe, the pillars demolished, the pauements digged vp, yea, the verie ground, where that famous pile stood, deformed. O God, thou wouldest rather haue no visible house vpon earth, then indure it defiled with Idolatries.

Foure hundred thirtie and sixe yeares had that Temple stood, and beautified the earth, and honoured heauen, now it is turned into rude heapes; There is no prescription to be pleaded for the fauour of the Almightie: Onely that Temple, not made with hands, is eternall in the heauens. Thither he graciously brings vs, that hath ordain'd vs thither, for the sake of that glorious high-Priest, that hath once for all entred into that holy of holies, B

Amen.

ZERVBBABEL and EZRA.

B THE firſt tranſportation into Babylon, vnder Iehoiakim, (wherein Daniel, Ezekiel, and many other of the beſt note, were driuen into captiuitie;) was (ſome eleuen yeares after) followed with a ſecond, vnder Zedekiah; wherein the remnant of the, now ruined, Ieruſalem, and Iudah, were ſwept away. Seuentie yeares was the period of their longeſt ſeruitude; whiles Babylon was a Queene, Iudah was her vaſſall: when that proud Tyranneſſe fell, Gods people began to riſe againe: The Babylonian Monarchie was no ſooner ſwallowed vp of the Perſian, then the Iewes felt the comfort of libertie.

For Cyrus conquering Babylon, and finding the Iewes groaning vnder that miſerable captiuitie, ſtraight releaſes them, and ſends them, vnder the conduct of their Captaine Zorobabel, backe to their almoſt-forgotten countrie.

The world ſtands vpon viciſſitudes; Euery Nation hath her turne, and muſt make vp her meaſure: Threeſcore and tenne yeares agoe, it was the courſe of Iudah, the iniquitie of that rebellious people was full. Some hundred and thirC tie yeares before that, was the turne of Samaria, and her Iſraelites: Now the ſtaffe is come to the doores of Babylon, euen that wherewith Iudah was beaten: and thoſe Perſians which are now victorious, muſt haue their terme alſo. It is in vaine for any earthly ſtate to promiſe to it ſelfe an immutable condition. At laſt, the rod that ſcourged Gods Children, is caſt into the fire: Thou haſt remembred, O Lord, the Children of Edom in the day of Ieruſalem, how they ſaid, Downe with it, downe with it, euen to the ground: O daughter of Babylon waſted with miſerie, how happie is he that rewardeth thee as thou haſt ſerued them: It is Cyrus that hath wrought this reuenge, this reſcue.

Doubtleſſe, it did not a little moue Cyrus to this fauour, that he found himſelfe honorably forenamed in theſe Iewiſh propheſies, and fore-appointed to this glorious ſeruice, no leſſe then an hundred and ſeuentie yeares, before hee was: Who would not be glad to make good ſo noble and happie a deſtinie? O God, if we heare that thou haſt ordained vs to life, how gladly, how carefully ſhould wee worke out our ſaluation? if to good workes, how ſhould wee D abound? Eſay 44. vlt.

In the firſt yeare of his Monarchie, doth Cyrus both make proclamations, and publiſh them in writing, thorow all his Kingdome; wherein he both profeſſeth his zealous reſolutions, and deſires to build vp Gods houſe in Ieruſalem, and inioynes, and incourages all the Iewes, thorow his dominions, to addreſſe themſelues to that ſacred worke; and incites all his ſubiects to aide them with ſiluer, and gold, and goods, and beaſts. How gracious was the command of that, whereof the verie allowance was a fauour?

Was it Cyrus that did this? was it not thou, O God, in whose hands are the hearts of Kings, that stirredst vp the spirit of this Persian; as if hee had beene more then a sonne of thy Church, a father? How easie is it for thee to make verie Pagans protectors to thy Church; enemies, benefactors? A

Not with an emptie grace doth this great King dismisse the Iewes, but with a royall bountie; He brings forth the vessels of the house of the Lord, which Nebuchadnezzar had brought forth out of Ierusalem, and had put them in the house of his gods; and causes them to be numbred by his Treasurer to the hands of Sheshbazzar the Prince of Iudah, for the vse of the Temple; no fewer then fiue thousand and foure hundred vessels of gold and siluer.

Certainely, this great Monarch wanted not wit to thinke; It is a rich booty that I find in the Temples of Babylon; by the law of conquest it is mine; hauing vanquisht their gods, I may well challenge their spoile; how seasonably doth it now fall into my hands, vpon this victorie, to reward my souldiers, to settle my new Empire: what if this treasure came from Ierusalem? the proprietie is now altered; the very place (according to the conceit of Iewes) hath profaned it; The true God, I haue heard; is curious; neither will abide those vessels, B which haue beene polluted with idolatrous vses: It shall be enough if I loose the bonds of this miserable people: If I giue libertie, let the next giue wealth: they will thinke themselues happie in bare walls, in their native earth: To what purpose should I pamper their penurie with a sudden store? But the Princely heart of Cyrus would admit of no such base sacrilegious thoughts; Those vessels that he finds stampt with Gods marke, he will returne to their owner; neither his owne occasions, nor their abuse shall be any colour of their detention. O Cyrus, how many close-handed, gripple-minded Christians shall once be choked in iudgement with the example of thy iust munificence? thou restoredst that which we purloine: woe be to those houses that are stored with the spoiles of Gods Temple: woe bee to those fingers that are tainted with holy treasures.

Kings can hardly doe good alone; their lawes are not more followed, then their examples: No sooner do the chiefe of the fathers of Iudah and Beniamin, and the Priests, and Leuites set their faces towards Ierusalem for the building of C the Temple, then the liberall hands of their Pagan neighbours furnish them with gold, and siluer, and precious things. Euery Persian is glad to be at the charge of laying a stone, in Gods house. The same God that had giuen them these mettals, out of his coffers of the earth, giues it out of their coffers to his Temple. He that tooke away by the Chaldees, giues by the Persians: Where the Almightie intends a worke, here cannot be any want of meanes.

Thus hartened, thus laded, doe the ioyfull families of Iudah returne to their old home; How many thousands of them were worne out, and lost in that seuentie yeares seruitude? How few of them yet suruiued, that could know the place of their birth, and habitation, or say, Here stood the Temple, here the Palace? Amongst those fortie and two thousand, three hundred and threescore Iewes, that returned in this first expedition; there were whom the confusion of their long captiuitie had robbed of their pedegree; They knew themselues Iewes, but could not deriue their line: these were yet admitted, without difficultie; But those of the Priestly tribe, which could not deduce their genealogie D from the register, are cashiered as vncleane. Then, God would be serued in a bloud, now in a due succession: If we could not fetch the line of our pedigree from Christ, and his Apostles, we were not fit for the Euangelicall altars. Their calling was by nature, ours by grace; The grace of inward abilities, of outward ordination; if we cannot approue both these, we are iustly abandoned; now had the children of Israel taken downe their Harpes from the Willowes which grew by the waters of Babylon, and could, vnbidden, sing the true songs of their recouered

Besides seruants, 7337.

A recouered Zion; They are newly ſetled in their old mansions, when vpon the firſt publike feaſt, in the Autumne, immediatly following their returne, they flocke vp to Ieruſalem: their firſt care is their publike ſacrifice; That Schoole of their Captiuitie, wherein they haue beene long trained, hath taught them to begin with God: A forced diſcontinuance, makes deuotion more ſauourie, more ſweet to religious hearts; whereas in an open freedome, pittie doth too often languiſh.

Ioſhua the Prieſt, and Zorobabel the Prince are fitly ioyned in the building of the Altar: neither of their hands may be out of that ſacred worke: no ſooner is that ſet vpon the baſes, then it is imployed to the daily burnt-offerings: The Altar may not ſtay the leiſure of the Temple; Gods Church may not want her oblations; He can be none of the ſonnes of Iſrael, that doth not euery day renue his acknowledgements of God.

How feelingly doe theſe Iewes keepe their feaſt of Tabernacles, whiles their ſoiourning in Babylon was ſtill in their thoughts; whiles as yet their Tents muſt ſupply their ruined houſes? The firſt motions of zeale are commonly ſtrong,
B and feruent; How carefully doe theſe Gouernours and Prieſts make preparation for Gods Temple? Carpenters and Maſons are hyred; Tyrian workemen are againe called for, and Lebanon is now anew ſolicited for Cedar trees. The materials are readie; Euerie Iſraelite, with ſuch courage addreſſes himſelfe to this ſeruice, as if his life lay in thoſe ſtones: And now, whiles the foundation of the Temple was laying, the Prieſt ſtand in their habits, with Trumpets, the Leuites with Cymbals, interchanging their holy Muſicke, and melodiouſly ſinging praiſes to the God of Iſrael, who had turned their captiuitie as the ſtreames in the South, and honoured their eyes and hands with the firſt ſtones of his houſe: The people ſeconds their ſongs with ſhouts; the earth ſounds, and heauen rings with the ioyfull acclamations of the multitude; It is no ſmall comfort, in a good action, to haue begun well; The entrance of any holy enterpriſe is commonly encountred with many diſcouragements, which if we haue once ouercome, the paſſage is ſmooth.

C battlements, who are thus ioyed with laying the firſt ſtones of the foundation? The end of any thing is better then the beginning: that hath certaintie, this danger; this labour, that reſt: little did theſe men thinke that, for all this, few of them ſhould liue to ſee the rooſe.

What different affections ſhall we ſee produced in men by the ſame occaſion? The younger Iewes ſhouted at this ſight, the elder wept: The younger ſhouted to ſee a new foundation; The elder wept to remember the old: They who had ſeene no better, thought this goodly; They who had ſeene the former, thought this meane, and homely; more ſorrowing for what they had loſt, then reioycing in ſo vnequall a reparation.

As it may fall out, it is ſome peece of miſerie to haue beene happier; euery abatement of the degrees of our former height laies ſiege to our thankefulneſſe, for leſſer mercies. Sometimes, it proues an aduantage to haue knowne no better; he ſhall more comfortably enioy preſent benefits, who takes them as they are, without any other compariſons, then of the weakeneſſe of his owne deſer-
D uings. It is nothing to me what my ſelfe or others haue beene, ſo I be now well: Neither is it otherwiſe in particular Churches, if one be more gloriouſly built then another, yet if the foundation be rightly laid in both; one may not inſult, the other may not repine: Each muſt congratulate the truth to other, each muſt thankfully inioy it ſelfe.

The noiſe was not more loud, then confuſed; here was a diſcordant mixture of lamentation, and ſhouting; it was hard to ſay whether drowned the other.

This

This assembly of Iewes was a true image of Gods Church on earth; one sings, another cries; neuer do they all either laugh or mourne at once. It shall bee in our triumph that all teares shall be wipt from our eyes; till then, our passions must be mixed, according to the occasions. A

The Iewes are busie at worke, not more full of ioy, then hopes; and now that the wals begin to ouer-looke the earth; their thoughts seeme to ouer-looke the walls. But what great enterprise was euer set on foot for God, which found not some crosses?

There was a mungrell broode of Samarit-Assyrians, which euer since the dayes of Senacherib dwelt in the land of Israel; whose Religion was a patched coate of seuerall shreds; some little part Iewish, the rest Pagan, not without much varietie of idolatrie. These hollow neighbours profer their assistance to the children of the captiuitie; Let vs build with you, for we seeke your God, as ye do: and doe sacrifice to him. Might men be their owne iudges, there would bee no heresie in the world, no mis-worship. It is true; these men did sacrifice to the true God; The lyons taught them to seeke, and the Israelitish Priest taught them to find the fashions of the God of the land: Some of these Iewes knew their deuotion of old; They serued Israels God; but with their owne: As good no God, as too many. In a iust indignation therefore do these Iewish gouernours repell the partnership of such helpers: You haue nothing to do with vs, to build an house to our God; but we our selues together will build vnto the Lord God of Israel. The hand of an idolater is contagious. Yet, had it beene to the building of some fortresse, or common-hall, perhaps their ayd had not beene refused, but when the wals of Gods house are to be raised, this societie had beene piacular. B

Those that may not be allowed to helpe the worke, will aske no leaue to hinder it: their malicious suggestions weaken the hands of the people of Iudah, and stirre vp authoritie to suppresse them.

Cyrus was farre off; neither liued he long after that gracious commission; and besides was so taken vp the while with his wars, that he could not haue leaisure to sift those querulous accusations. Now therefore, during the last yeares of Cyrus, and the raigne of his sonne Cambyses, and the long gouernment of Darius Histaspides, and of his sonne Xerxes, or Ahasuerus, and lastly of his sonne Artaxerxes, vntill the dayes of Darius Nothus, (which was no lesse then fiue successions of Kings, (besides Cyrus) doe the walls of the Temple stand still, yea lie waste; subiect to the wrongs of time, and wether: the fit matter of sorrow to the Iewes, insultation to the enemies, derision to passengers. C

What a wide gap of time was here betwixt the foundation of Gods House, and the battlements? How large a triall doth God now secondly take of the faith, of the patience of his people? How large a proofe doth he giue of his owne long-suffering? Oh God, when thou hadst but one House vpon earth, thou wert content to put vp delayes, yea affronts in the building of it; now thou hast many, it is no maruell if thy longanimitie and iustice, abide some of them to lie desolate: They are not stones, or mettals, or men that can make thee more glorious; thou best knowest when to serue thy selfe of all these, when to honour these with thy seruice.

A small matter hinders the worthiest action; as a little fish (they say) stayes the greatest ship: Before, the Iewes were discouraged with words, but now they are stopped by commands. D

These enuious Samaritans haue corrupted the gouernours which the Persian Kings set ouer those parts; and from their hands haue obtained letters of deepe calumniation, to Ahasuerus the King; and after him, to his sonne Artaxerxes; wherein Ierusalem is charged with old rebellion to Kings; and for proofe appellation is made to the records; from which euidence, is spitefully inferred, that if these walls be once built, the King shall receiue no tribute on this side the

A the riuer. Neuer was Gods Church but ſubiect to reproaches.

Princes haue reaſon to be iealous of their rights. The records are ſearcht; It ſoone appeares that within one Centurie of yeares, Ieruſalem had rebelled againſt Nebuchadnezzar, and held out two yeares ſiege of that great Babylonian. The ſcandall of diſloyaltie is perpetuall: although indeed they held him rather a preuailing enemie, then a lawfull Soueraigne; One act diſparages either place, or perſon, to all poſterities. Therefore ſhall the walls of Ieruſalem lie waſte, becauſe it had once beene trecherous; After an hundred yeares doth that Citie rue one perfidious act of Zedekiah. Fidelitie to our gouernours is euer both ſafe, and honourable.

Command is now ſent out from * Artaxerxes, (euen the ſonne of Queene Eſther,) to reſtraine the worke: All reſpects muſt ceaſe with carnall minds, when their honours and profits are in queſtion. Rehum the Chancellor, and Shimſhai the Scribe, come now armed with authoritie: The ſword hath eaſily preuailed againſt the trowell. Still doe the Iewes find themſelues as it were, captiues at home, and in ſilence, and ſorrow, ceaſe from their labours, vntill the

B dayes of the next ſucceſſour, Darius Nothus.

* Surnamed Long-hand.

As thoſe that had learn'd to ſow after a bad crop; theſe Iewes, vpon the change of the Prince, by the incouragement of the Prophets of God, Haggai, and Zechariah, take new heart to build againe: If others power hinder vs in the worke of God, our will may not be guiltie.

Their new gouernours come, as before; to expoſtulate; Who hath commanded you to build this houſe, and to make vp this wall? and what are your names? They wiſely and modeſtly plead the ſeruice of the God of heauen, the decree of Cyrus; ſtill perſiſting to build, as if the prohibition of Artaxerexes had died with the author. The vnpartiall Gouernours do neither claw, nor exaſperate; but relating the humble and iuſt anſwer of the Iewes, moue the King that ſearch may be made in the rolles of Babylon, whether ſuch an Edict were made by Cyrus; and require his royall pleaſure, concerning the validitie of ſuch a pretended decree. Darius ſearches, findes, ratifies, inlargeth it, not onely charging his officers not to hinder the worke, but commanding to leuie ſummes of his owne Tribute, beyond

C the riuer, for the expences of the building, for the furniſhing of ſacrifices; threatning vtter ruine to the houſe of that man, and death to his perſon, who ſhould offer to impeach this bountie: and ſhutting vp with a zealous imprecation; The God of heauen that hath cauſed his Name to dwell there, deſtroy all Kings and people that ſhall put to their hand to alter, and to deſtroy this Houſe of God which is at Ieruſalem: I Darius hath made a decree, let it be done with ſpeed.

Who would haue lookt for ſuch an Edict from a Perſian? No Solomon, no Dauid could haue ſaid more.

The ruler of all hearts makes choyce of his owne inſtruments, and when he pleaſeth, can glorifie himſelfe by thoſe meanes, which are leaſt expected: That ſacred worke which the husband, and ſonne of an Eſther croſſed, ſhall be happily accompliſhed by a Darius: In the ſixt yeare of his raigne, is the Temple of God fully finiſhed; and now the Dedication of it, is celebrated, by a ioyfull feaſt: An hundred bullockes, two hundred rams, foure hundred lambes, in a meet proportion, ſmoke vpon their altars: And now the children of the capti-

D uitie thinke this day a ſufficient payment for all their ſorrowes: We haue reaſon to thinke it the faireſt day that euer ſhone forth to vs, wherein the ſpirituall building of Gods houſe is raiſed vp in our ſoules. How ſhould we ſhout at the laying of this foundation, and feaſt at the laying on of the rooſe? What other, what better ſacrifice can we offer vp to God in the ſenſe of our ioy, then our ſelues? Let our hearts be at once, the Temple, the Altar, the Sacrifice; Oh God, be thou glorified in all theſe, who haſt graciouſly honoured all theſe with thy ſelfe.

Euery

Euery holy feaſt is now duely kept, the Prieſts know their diuiſions, the Leuites their courſes; and the whole ſeruice of God is put into a ſetled order; But, as there can be no new beginnings without imperfection nor long continuance, without corruption; reformation is no leſſe neceſſarie then good inſtitutions; Artaxerxes Mnemon* hath learn'd of his father Darius to befriend Gods people; and ſtriues to inherit his beneficence: vnder his gouernment, is Ezra the Prieſt, and learned ſcribe, ſent with a large commiſſion from Babylon, to Ieruſalem, to inquire into the wants, and redreſſe the diſorders of the Iewes; with full power not onely to carrie with him all the voluntaries of his nation; and the treaſures contributed in all the prouince of Babylon; but to raiſe ſuch ſummes, out of the Kings reuenues, as ſhould be found requiſite; and withall to ordaine Magiſtrates, & Iudges, and to crowne the Lawes with due execution, whether to death or baniſhment, or confiſcation; and laſtly, with a large exemption of the Prieſts and Leuites, and all the inferiour officers of the Temple, from all toles, tributes, cuſtomes. Nothing wanted here, whether for direction, or incouragement. It is a ſigne of Gods great fauour to any nation, when the hearts of Soueraigne gouernours are raiſed vp, both to the choiſe of worthy agents, and to the commanding of pious, and reſtoratiue actions. A

Holy and carefull Ezra gathers a new colony of Iewes, takes view of them, at the riuer of Ahaua; and finding a miſſe of the ſonnes of Leui (without whom no company, no plantation can be compleat) ſends for their ſupply; And now fully furniſhed, he proclaimes a faſt in the way. B

I do not heare him ſay, The iourney is long and dangerous; the people haue neede of all their ſtrength. I could well wiſh vs all afflicted with a religious faſt, were it not that the abatement of the courage, and vigour of the multitude may indanger our ſucceſſe; But without all theſe carnall conſultations, he begins with this ſolemne act of humiliation; It is better to haue God ſtrong in our weakeneſſe, then to haue fleſh and bloud ſtrong in his neglect.

Artaxerxes was a Patron of the Iewes, yet a Pagan by profeſſion; wiſe Ezra was afraid of quenching thoſe ſparkes of pietie which he deſcried in this ſemi-proſelite. Rather therefore then he will ſeeme to imply a diſtruſt in the prouidence of that God, in whoſe ſeruice he went by ſeeking a conuoy of ſouldiers from the King; Ezra chooſes to put himſelfe vpon the hazard of the way, and the immediate protection of the Almightie. Any death were better then to heare Artaxerxes ſay, Is this the man that ſo confidently told me, The hand of our God is vpon all them for good that ſeeke him; but his power and his wrath is againſt all them that forſake him? Doth he beleeue himſelfe that he thus doubts ere he begin? Dare he not truſt his God with his owne buſineſſes? C

The reſolutions of faithfull hearts are heroicall: No heathen man ſhall ſtumble at Ezraes feare: He can find more aſſurance in his faſt, then in a Perſian band: with a couragious reliance vpon the hand of his God he puts himſelfe into the iourney; and finds nothing but ſafetie and ſucceſſe: The fidelitie of the Almightie neuer diſappointed the confidence of his ſeruants. All the armie of Artaxerxes could not haue beene ſo ſtrong a guard to the Iewes, as their inuiſible protection.

In the ſpace of foure moneths is Ezra and his company happily arriued at Ieruſalem: where hee ioyes to ſee the new Temple, and his old Colleagues: and now hauing deliuered vp the charge of his treaſure, by waight, in the chambers of the houſe of the Lord, he applyes himſelfe to his worke, and deliuers the Kings Commiſſions to the Lieu-tenants and Gouernors, for their vtmoſt aſſiſtance. D

The Princes of Iudah doe not (for ought I heare) repine at the large Patent granted to this Prieſt, nor ſay, What doth a man of this robe meddle with placing, or diſplacing Magiſtrates? with execution of iudgements to death, bonds, baniſhment?

A baniſhment? but rather as congratulating this power to ſacred hands, gladly preſent vnto him all their grieuances. Truly religious hearts cannot grudge any honour to their ſpirituall guides.

This holy Commiſſioner is ſoone welcomed with a ſad Bill of complaint, from ſome good Peeres of Iſrael; wherein they charge diuers of the Prieſts, Leuites, people, not to haue ſeparated themſelues from the idolatrous inhabitants of the lands, nor (therefore) from their abominations, euen from Canaanites, Hittites, Perizzites, and the reſt of thoſe branded nations; that they haue taken of their daughters for themſelues, and for their ſonnes: So that the holy ſeed haue mingled themſelues of thoſe forbidden people; and, (which made the matter ſo much more hainous, leſſe remediable) that the hand of the Princes, and Rulers, hath beene chiefe in this treſpaſſe.

Oh hypocriticall Iewes, did ye refuſe to ſuffer your Samaritan neighbours to ioyne with you in building a liueleſſe houſe vnto God, and doe ye now ioyne affinitie with with a more accurſed generation for the building of liuing houſes vnto poſteritie? for the pulling downe of the liuely Houſe of God.

B How could Ezra heare this with his clothes, his haire, his beard vntorne? What griefe, what aſtoniſhment muſt this newes needs bring to a zealous heart? And, were it not that the conſcience of his ſincere reſpect to Gods glory relieued him, how could Ezra chooſe but repent him of his iourney; and ſay; Am I come from Babylon to find Paganiſme in Iudah? Did I leaue Perſians, to meet with Canaanites? what doe I heare, if Ieruſalem be remoued? How much better were a cleare captiuitie, then an idolatrous freedome? Wo is me, that hauing left many Iewiſh hearts in Babylon, I now am forced to find heathen bloud in Ieruſalem.

As a man diſtracted with ſorrow, Ezra ſits downe vpon the earth with his garments rent, with the haire of his head, and beard pluckt off, wringing his hands, knocking his breſt, not mouing from his place vntill the euening ſacrifice. It is hard to be too much affected with the publike ſinnes of Gods people. Thoſe who find themſelues in the ſhip of Gods Church, cannot but bee much troubled with euery dangerous leake that it takes: Common caſes are
C not more neglected by the careleſſe, then taken to heart by the wiſe and godly.

There, and thus, Ezra ſits aſtonied vntill the euening ſacrifice: others reſorted to him the while; euen all that trembled at the words of the God of Iſrael; but to helpe on his ſorrow, not to relie; neither doth any man wiſh a mitigation of his owne, or others griefe. At laſt, he riſes vp from his heauineſſe, and caſts himſelfe vpon his knees and ſpreads out his hands vnto the Lord his God: Wherefore was all that penſiueneſſe, faſting, ſilence, tearing of haire and clothes, but to ſerue as a meete preface to his prayers? wherein hee ſo freely powres out his heart, as if it had beene all diſſolued into deuotion; profeſſing his ſhame to lift vp his face towards the Throne of God; confeſſing the iniquities of his people, which were increaſed ouer their heads, and growne vp vnto heauen; fetching their treſpaſſe farre, and charging them deepe; ſeelingly acknowledging the iuſt hand that had followed them, in all their iudgements, and the iuſt confuſion wherein they now ſtand before the face of their God.

D Teares, and ſighes, and grouelings accompanied his prayers; the example and noiſe whereof drew Iſrael into a participation of this publike mourning, For the people wept very ſore: How can they chuſe but thinke, if he thus lament for vs, how ſhould we grieue for our ſelues.

All Iudah went away merrily with their ſinne, till this checke of Ezra, now they are afflicted: Had not the hands of the Peeres beene in this treſpaſſe, the people had not beene guiltie; had not the cheekes of Ezra beene firſt drenched with teares, the people had not beene penitent. It cannot bee ſpoken, what power there is in a great example, whether to euill or good. A

Prayers and teares are nothing without indeauors. Shecaniah, the ſonne of Iehiel puts the firſt life into this buſineſſe. Hauing ſeconded the complaint of Ezra, he now addes, Yet there is hope in Iſrael concerning this thing. Now therefore let vs make a couenant with our God to put away all the wiues, and ſuch as are borne of them. Ariſe, for this matter belongeth to thee, wee alſo will be with thee, Be of good courage, and doe it.

When miſchiefe is once done, the chiefe care is how to redreſſe it. The beſt way of redreſſe is the deliberate vndoing of that which we haue raſhly committed; The ſureſt obligation to the vndoing of an euill act, is an oath or couenant made with God for the performance.

There is no man ſo wiſe, but he may make vſe of good counſell; there is no man ſo forward, but he may abide incitation. It is no ſmall incouragement to ſee an heartie aſſiſtance in an enuious and difficult ſeruice. Then aroſe Ezra, and made the chiefe Prieſts, the Leuites and all Iſrael to ſweare that they ſhould doe according to this word. B

It is halfe done that is thus aſſured. There was need of a ſtrong power to diſſolue a matrimoniall, though inordinate loue: Doubtleſſe, theſe men had married out of affection; their hearts were no leſſe ſet vpon theſe wiues (though heatheniſh) then if they had beene of their owne Tribes; neither were their children, thus begotten leſſe deare vnto them, then if they had laine in Iewiſh wombes: Nothing leſſe then an oath of God, therefore could quit theſe paſſions; That is both required and taken.

Now begins Ezra to conceiue ſome hope of preſent redreſſe; the comfort whereof, yet, cannot turne off his ſorrow for the offence paſſed; He neither eates bread, nor drinkes water; willingly puniſhing himſelfe, becauſe Iſrael had ſinned: Now ſhall his Countrie-men eaſily reade in his face their owne penance, and iuſt humiliation; and ſay; This man takes no ioy in our ſufferings; he would not ſmart thus for vs, if he did not deſcrie more danger towards vs then we can apprehend.

Proclamation is made thorow Iudah and Ieruſalem, vnder paine of forfaiture of ſubſtance, and excommunication from Gods people; that all the children of the captiuitie ſhould gather themſelues together vnto Ieruſalem. They are met accordingly; The Courts of Gods Houſe are thronged with penitents; and now, as if the heauen would teach them what to doe, the clouds raine downe abundance of teares. What with thoſe ſad ſhowres, what with their inward remorſe, the people ſit trembling in the open Courts; and humbly wait for the reproofe, for the ſentence of Ezra. He riſes vp; and with a ſeuere countenance, layes before them their ſinne, their amends: The ſinne of their ſtrange wiues; the amends of their confeſſion, of their ſeparation: not ſparing to ſearch their wound; not neglecting the meet plaiſter for their cure. C

The people, as willing to be healed, yeeld themſelues patiently to that rough hand; not ſhrinking at the paine, not fauouring the ſore; As thou haſt ſaid, ſo muſt we doe; Onely crauing a fit proportion of time, and a due aſſiſtance for the diſpatch of ſo long and important a worke. Ezra gladly harkens to this, not ſo much requeſt, as counſell of Iſrael; The charge is deuided to men, and dayes; D For two moneths ſpace the commiſſioners ſit cloſe; and within that compaſſe, finiſh this buſineſſe, not more thankeſſe then neceſſarie: Doubtleſſe much varietie of paſſion met with them in this buſie ſeruice; Here you ſhould haue ſeene an affectionate husband bitterly weeping at the diſmiſſion of a loving wife, and drowning his laſt farewell in ſobs: there you might haue ſeene a paſſionate wife, hanging vpon the armes of her beloued husband, and on her knees, coniuring him by his former vowes, and the deare pledges of their loues; and profering with many teares, to redeeme the loſſe of her husband with the change of her Religion:

A Religion: Here, you might haue ſeene, the kindred and parents of the diſmiſſed, ſhutting vp their denied ſuites with rage and threats. There, the abandoned children kneeling to their ſeemingly-cruell father, beſeeching him not to caſt off the fruit of his owne loynes; and expoſtulating, what they haue offended in being his: The reſolued Iſraelites muſt be deafe, or blind to theſe moouing obiects; and ſo farre forget nature, as to put off part of themſelues. Perſonall inconueniences haue reaſon to yeeld to publike miſchiefes: Long intertainement makes that ſinne hard to be ieected; whoſe firſt motions might haue beene repelled with eaſe.

Had not the prohibition of theſe mariages beene expreſſe, and their danger and miſchiefe palpable, the care of their ſeparation had not bred ſo much tumult in Iſrael. He that ordained matrimonie, had vpon fearefull curſes forbidden an equall yoke with infidels. Beſides the marring of the Church by
B the mixture of an vnholy ſeed, Religion ſuffered for the preſent, and all good hearts with it, Many teares, many ſacrifices need to expiate ſo foule an offence, and to ſet Iſrael ſtraight againe.

All this while euen theſe meſſine Iewes were yet forward to build the Temple; The worſt ſinners may yeeld an outward conformitie to actions of pietie: Ezra hath done more ſeruice in pulling downe, then the Iewes in building; without this act, the Temple might haue ſtood, Religion muſt needs haue falne. Babel had beene tranſlated to Ieruſalem, Iewes had turned Gentiles. Oh happie indeauors of deuout and holy Ezra that hath at once reſtored Iudah to God, and to it ſelfe.

NEHEMIAH building the walls of Ieruſalem.

C THirteene yeares were now paſſed, ſince Ezraes going vp to Ieruſalem; when Nehemiah the religious Courtier of Artaxerxes, inquires of the eſtate of his Countrie, and brethren of Iudæa: He might well finde that holy ſcribe had not beene idle: The comiſſion of Artaxerxes had beene improued by him to the vtmoſt; Diſorders were reformed, but the walls lay waſt; The Temple was built, bnt the Citie was ruinous; and if ſome ſtreets were repaired, yet they ſtood vnguarded; open to the mercie of an enemie, to the infeſtation of ill neighbourhood, Great bodies muſt haue ſlow motions; As Ieruſalem, ſo the Church of God whoſe type it was muſt be finiſht by leaſure. Nehe. 1, 2, 3, 4. Chapt.

Nehemiah ſate warme in the Court at Shuſhan, fauored by the great King Artaxerxes; nothing could be wanting to him, whether for pleaſure or ſtate;
D what needed he to trouble his head with thoughts for Ieruſalem? what if thoſe remote walls lay on heapes whiles himſelfe dwelt faire? what if his far-diſtant countrie-men be deſpiſed, whiles himſelfe is honoured, by the great Monarch of the world.

It is not ſo eaſie for gracious diſpoſitions to turne off the publike calamities of Gods Church: neither can they doe other then leeſe their priuate felicities in the common diſtreſſes of the vniuerſall bodie. If I forget thee, O Ieruſalem, let my right hand forget her cunning; If I doe not remember thee, let my tongue cleaue to the roofe of my mouth.

Many Iewes went vp from Babylon, and Shushan, to Ierusalem, few euer returned voluntarily from their natiue home to the region of their captiuitie: Some occasion drew Hanani with certaine others of Iudah, to this voyage. Of them doth Nehemiah carefully inquire the present condition of Ierusalem: It was no newes that the people were afflicted, and reproached, the walls broken downe, the gates burnt with fire. Euer since the furious vastation of Nebuzaradan, that Citie knew not better termes: seldome when doth the spirituall Ierusalem fare otherwise in respect of outward estate: Eternall glorie and magnificence is an vnsure note of the Church. A

Well had Nehemiah hoped that the gracious Edict, and beneficence of Darius, and the successiue patronage of his Lord Artaxerxes had by the continuance of twentie yeares fauour aduanced the strength and glorie of Ierusalem, but now, finding the holy Citie to lie still in the dust of her confusion, neglected of God, despised of men, he sits downe and weepes, and mournes, and fasts, and prayes to the God of heauen. How many saw those ruiues, and were little affected? he heares of them a farre off, and is thus passionate? How many were vpon this sight affected with a fruitlesse sorrow, his mourning is ioyned with the indeuors of redresse. In vaine is that griefe which hath no other end then it selfe. B

Nehemiah is resolued to kneele to the King, his master, for the repaire of his Ierusalem; he dares not attempt the suit till he haue begun with God; This good Courtier knew well that the hearts of these earthly Kings are in the ouer-ruling hand of the King of heauen to incline whither he pleaseth: Our prayers are the onely true meanes to make way for our successe; If in all our occasions we doe not begin with the first mouer, the course is prepostrous and commonly speeds thereafter.

Who dares censure the pietie of Courtiers, when he finds Nehemiah standing before Artaxerxes? Euen the Persian Pallace is not vncapable of a Saint: No man that waites on the Altar at Ierusalem can compare for zeale, with him, that waits on the cup of a Pagan Monarch: The mercies of God are vnlimited to places, to callings.

Thus armed with deuotions, doth Nehemiah put himselfe into the presence of his master Artaxerxes. His face was ouerclouded with a deepe sadnesse, neither was he willing to cleare it. The King easily notes the disparitie of the countenance of the bearer, and the wine that he beares: and in a gracious familiaritie askes the reason of such vnwonted change; How well it becomes the great to stoope vnto a curteous affabilitie, and to exchange words of respect, euen with their humble vassalls. C

Nehemiah had not beene so long in the Court but he knew that Princes like no other then cheerefull attendants; neither was he wont to bring any other face into that presence, then smooth, and smiling.

Greatnesse vses to be full of suspition, and where it sees a deiection, and sowernesse of the browes, is readie to apprehend some sullen thoughts of discontentment, or, at the least, construes it for a disrespect to that soueraignty, whose beames should be of power to disperse all our inward mists: Euen good manners forbid a man to presse into the presence of a Prince, except he can either lay by these vnpleasing passions, or hide them: So had Nehemiah hitherto done: Now, he purposely suffers his sorrow to looke through his eyes, that it may worke both inquirie, and compassion from his master; neither doth hee faile of his hopes in either; Why is thy countenance sad, seeing thou art not sicke. How sensible doe we thinke the father of mercies is of all our pensiue thoughts, when an heathen master is so tender of a seruants griefe? How readie should our tongues be to lay open our cares to the God of all comfort, when we see Nehemiah so quicke in the expressions of his sorrow to an vncertaine eare? D

Let

A Let the King liue for euer: Why ſhould not my countenance, be ſad when the Citie the place of my fathers ſepulchres lieth waſte, and the gates thereof burnt with fire. Not without an humble preface doth Nehemiah lay forth his grieuance; Complaints haue euer an vnpleaſing harſhneſſe in them, which muſt be taken off by ſome diſcreet inſinuation: Although it could not but ſound well in the generous care of Axtaxerxes, that his ſeruant was ſo carefull for the honour of his Countrey; As nature hath made vs all members of a communitie and hath giuen vs common intereſts, ſo, it is moſt pleaſing to vs, to ſee theſe publike cares diuide vs from our owne.

The King eaſily deſcries a ſecret ſupplication wrapt vp in this moanefull anſwer, which the modeſt ſuiter was afraid to diſcloſe, and therefore he helps that baſhfull motion into the light; For what doeſt thou make requeſt? It is the praiſe of bountie to draw on the iuſt petitions of fearefull ſuppliants.

Nehemiah dares not open his mouth of the King, till his heart hath opened it ſelfe by a ſudden eiaculation to his God; No buſineſſe can be ſo haſtie, but
B our prayer may preuent it; the wings whereof are ſo nimble, that it can flie vp to heauen, and ſolicit God, and bring downe an anſwer, before euer our words need to come forth of our lips. In vaine ſhall we hope that any deſigne of ours can proſper, if we haue not firſt ſent this meſſenger on our errand.

After this ſilent, and inſenſible preparation; Nehemiah moues his ſuit to the King; not yet at once; but by meet degrees; firſt he craues leaue for his iourney, and for the building: then he craues aide for both; Both are granted; Nehemiah departs furniſhed with letters to the gouernours, for a conuoy; with letters to the keeper of the Kings forreſt for timber. Not more full of deſire then hope.

Who euer put his hand to any great worke for the behooſe of Gods Church, without oppoſition? As the walls of the Temple found buſie enemies, ſo ſhall the walls of the Citie; and theſe ſo much more, as they promiſe more ſecuritie and ſtrength to Ieruſalem: Sanballat the Deputie-Lieutenant of the Moabites, and Tobiah, the like officer to the Ammonites; and Geſhem, to the Arabians, are galled with enuie at the arriuall of a man authorized to ſeeke the wel-
C fare of the children of Iſrael: There cannot bee a greater vexation to wicked hearts, then to ſee the ſpirituall Ieruſalem in any likelihood of proſperitie. Euill ſpirits and men need no other torment, then their owne deſpight,

This wiſe Courtier hath learnt that ſecreſie is the ſureſt way of any important diſpatch. His errand could not but be knowne to the gouernors; their furtherance was inioyned for the prouiſion of materialls; elſe the walles of Ieruſalem had ouer-lookt the firſt notice of their heathen-neighbours. Without any noiſe doth Nehemiah ariſe in the dead of night, and taking ſome few into his companie, none into his counſaile, he ſecretly rounds the decaied walles of Ieruſalem, and viewes the breaches, and obſerues the gates; and returnes home in ſilence, ioying in himſelfe to fore-ſee thoſe reparations; which none of the inhabitants did once dreame of: At laſt, when he had fully digeſted this great worke in his owne breſt, he cals the Rulers and Citizens together, and hauing condoled with them, the common diſtreſſe, and reproach, he tells them of the D hand of his God, which was good vpon him; he ſhewes them the gracious commiſſion of the King, his maſter, for that good worke. They anſwer him with a zealous incouragement of each other, Let vs riſe vp and build. Such an heartie inuitation countenanced by authoritie hath eaſily ſtrengthened the hands of the multitude; with what obſeruance and deareneſſe doe they now looke vpon their vnexſpected Patron? How do they honour him as a man ſent from heauen, for the welfare of Ieruſalem? Euerie man flyes to his hodde, and trowell, and reioyces to ſecond ſo noble a leader, in laying a ſtone in that wall of their common defence.

Thoſe

Thoſe emulous neighbours of theirs, Sanballat, Tobiah, Geſhem, the chiefe commanders of Moab, Ammon, Arabia, haue ſoone eſpied the firſt morter, that is laid vpon that old foundation. Enuie is vſually more quicke-ſighted then loue: And now they ſcornfully apply themſelues to theſe deſpiſed Iewes, and thinke to ſcoffe them out of their worke: The fauourableſt perſecution of any good cauſe is the laſh of lewd tongues; whether by bitter taunts or by ſcurrilous inuectiues: which it is as impoſſible to auoid, as neceſſarie to contemne. The barking of theſe dogs doth not hinder Nehemiah from walking on his way; profeſſing his confidence in the God of heauen, whoſe worke that was; hee ſhakes off their impotent malice, and goes on cheerefully to build: Euerie Iſraelite knowes his ſtation. Eliaſhib the high Prieſt, and the reſt of that ſacred tribe put the firſt hand to this worke; they build the ſheep-gate, and ſanctifie it; and in it, all the reſt. As the firſt fruits of the field, ſo the firſt ſtones of the wall, are hallowed to God, by the conſecration of thoſe deuout agents: That buſineſſe is like to proſper which beginnes with God. A

No man was idle, no part was intermitted; All Ieruſalem was at once encompaſſed with buſie labourers. It cannot bee, but the ioynt-indeauors of faithfull hearts muſt raiſe the walles of the Church. B

Now Sanballat, and his brethren, finde ſome matter to ſpend their ſcoffes vpon; What do theſe feeble Iewes? will they fortifie themſelues? will they ſacrifice? will they make an end in a day? will they reuiue the ſtones out of the heaps of rubbiſh which are burnt.

How baſely do carnall minds thinke of the proiects, and actions of Gods children; therefore vilifying them, becauſe they meaſure them by no other line, then outward probabilitie. Oh fooliſh Moabites, this worke is Gods, and therefore in deſpight of all your tongues and hands, it ſhall proſper: He heares you whom ye haue blaſphemed, and ſhall turne your reproach vpon your owne heads.

And thou proud Ammonite, that couldſt ſay, If a Foxe go vpon their ſtone-wall, he ſhall breake it downe; ſhalt well find, that all the woluiſh troopes of your confederates ſhall not be able to remoue one ſtone of this ſure fortification; Whiles Moab and Ammon repine and bluſter in vaine, this wall ſhall riſe, and when Moab and Ammon ſhall lie in the duſt, this wall ſhall ſtand. The morter that hath beene tempered with ſo many prayers, cannot but out-laſt all the flints, and marbels of humane confidence. C

Now the growth of this wall hath turned the mirth of the aduerſaries into rage: Theſe Moabites, Ammonites, Arabians, Aſhdadites conſpire all together, to fight againſt Ieruſalem; and whiles the morter is yet greene, to demoliſh thoſe enuied heapes.

What hath this Citie offended in deſiring to be defenced? what wrong could it bee to wiſh a freedome from wrongs? Were this people ſo mightie, that there could be danger in ouer-powering their neighbours, or in reſiſting a common Soueraigne, there might haue appeared ſome colour for this hoſtile oppoſition; but, alas; what could a deſpiſed handfull doe to the preiudice of either? It is quarrell enough to Ieruſalem that it would not be miſerable.

Neither is it otherwiſe with the head of theſe helliſh complices; there needs no other cauſe of his vtmoſt furie, then to ſee a poore ſoule ſtrugling to get out of the reach of his tyrannie. So do ſauage beaſts briſtle vp themſelues, and make the moſt fierce aſſaults when they are in danger of looſing the prey, which they had once ſeized on. D

In the meane while, what doth Nehemiah with his Iewes for their common ſafetie? They pray, and watch; they pray vnto God, they watch againſt the enemie.

Thus, thus ſhall we happily preuaile againſt thoſe ſpirituall wickedneſſes, which

A warre againſt our ſoules: No euill can ſurprize vs if we watch; no euill can hurt vs, if we pray; This is the victorie that ouercomes the world, euen our faith.

There was need of a continued vigilancie; the enemy was not more malicious, then ſubtile, and bad ſaid; They ſhall not know, neither ſee, till we come in the midſt amongſt them, and ſlay them. Open force is not ſo dangerous, as cloſe diſſimulation; They meant to ſeeme Iewes, whiles they were Moabites and Ammonites; and in the clothes of brethren purpoſed to hide murderers. Neuer is Satan ſo preuailent, as when he comes transformed into an Angell of light.

It was a mercifull prouidence of God, that made theſe mens tongues the blabs of their owne counſell. Many a fearefull deſigne had proſpered, if wickedneſſe could haue beene ſilent. Warning is a lawfull guard to a wiſe aduerſarie: Now doth Nehemiah arme his people; and for the time, changes their trowels into ſwords, and ſpeares, and bowes; raiſing vp their courage with a
B vehement exhortation, to remember the Lord, which is great, and terrible, and to fight for their brethren, their ſonnes, their daughters, their wiues, and their houſes. Nothing can ſo hearten vs to the encountring of any euill, as the remembrance of that infinite power and wiſedome which can either auert, or mitigate, or ſanctifie it: we could not faint if we did not forget God.

Neceſſitie vrges a man to fight for himſelfe, loue inables his hand to fight for thoſe which challenge a part in him; where loue meets with neceſſitie, there can want no indeuor of victorie; Neceſſitie can make euen cowards, valiant; loue makes the valiant, vnreſiſtable: Nehemiah doth not therefore perſwade theſe Iewes to fight for themſelues, but for theirs: The iudgement of the intereſt, and danger, cannot but quicken the dulleſt ſpirits.

Diſcouered counſels are alreadie preuented: Theſe ſerpents die by being firſt ſeene; When the enemies heard that it was knowne vnto vs, they let fall their plot. Could we deſcrie the enterpriſes of Satan, that tempter would returne aſhamed.

It is a ſafe point of wiſedome to carrie a iealous eye ouer thoſe, whom we haue once found hollow, and hoſtile: From that time forth Nehemiah diuided the taske, betwixt the trowell, and the ſword; ſo diſpoſing of euerie Iſraelite, that whiles one hand was a Maſon, the other was a ſouldier: one is for work, the other
C for defence. Oh liuely image of the Church militant, wherein euery one labours, weaponed; wherein there is neither an idle ſouldier, nor a ſecure workeman: euery one ſo builds, as that he is readie to ward temptations; euerie one ſo wildes the ſword of the Spirit, for defence, that withall, he builds vp himſelfe in his moſt holy faith; here is neither a fruitleſſe valour, nor an vnſafe diligence.

But what can our weapons auaile vs, if there bee not meanes to warne vs of an enemie? Without a Trumpet we are armed in vaine. The worke is great and large, and we are ſeperated vpon the wall, one farre from another: Yea, ſo farre as the vtmoſt bounds of the earth, are we ſeparated one from another, vpon the walles of the ſpirituall Ieruſalem; onely the ſacred Trumpets of God, call vs, who are diſtant in place, to a combination in poſſeſſion. And who are thoſe Trumpets, but the publike meſſengers of God, of whom God hath ſaid; If the Ezec. 33. 6.
D Watchmen ſee the ſword come, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned, if the ſword come, and take any perſon from among them, he is taken away in his iniquitie, but his blood will I require at the Watchmans hand. Woe be to vs if we ſound not; if the ſound we giue be vncertaine: woe be to our people, if when we premoniſh them of enemies, of iudgements, they ſit ſtill vnmoued, not buckling themſelues to a reſiſtance, to a preuention.

It is a mutuall aide, to which theſe Trumpets inuite vs; we might fight apart, without the ſignals of warre; In what place yee heare the ſound of the Trumpet, reſort ye thither vnto vs. There can be no ſafetie to the Church, but where euery man thinkes his life, and welfare conſiſts in his fellowes; Conioyned forces

may proſper, ſingle oppoſitions are deſperate: All hearts and hands muſt A meet in the common quarrell.

NEHEMIAH redreſſing the extortion of the Iewes.

WIth what difficultie do theſe miſerable Iewes ſettle in their Ieruſalem? The feare of forraine enemies doth not more afflict them then the extortion of their owne: Dearth is added vnto warre: Miſeries do not ſtay for a mannerly ſucceſſion to each other, but in a rude importunitie throng in, at once. Babel may be built with eaſe, but whoſoeuer goes about to raiſe the walls of Gods Citie, ſhall haue his hands full: The incurſion of publike enemies may bee preuented with vigilancie and power; but there is B no defence againſt the ſecret gripes of oppreſſion.

There is no remedie, the Iewes are ſo taken vp with their trowel. and ſword, for the time, that they cannot attend their trades; ſo as, whiles the wall did riſe, their eſtates muſt needs impaire: Euen in the cheapeſt ſeaſon they muſt needs be poore, that earned nothing but the publike ſafetie, how much more in a common ſcarcitie? Their houſes, lands, vineyards are therefore morgaged, yea their verie skins are ſold for corne, to their brethren: Neceſſitie forces them to ſell that, which it was crueltie to buy; What will we not, what muſt we not part with for life? The couetous rulers did not conſider the occaſions of this want, but the aduantage. Sometimes, a bargaine may be as vnmercifull as a robberie: Charitie muſt bee the rule in all contracts; the violation whereof, whether in the matter, or the price, cannot but be ſinfull.

There could not be a iuſter ground of expoſtulation then this of the oppreſſed Iewes; Our fleſh is as the fleſh of our brethren, our children as their children; and loe, we bring into bondage our ſonnes and our daughters: whiles there is no C difference in nature, why ſhould there be ſuch an iniurious diſproportion in condition. Euen the ſame fleſh may beare a iuſt inequalitie; ſome may be rulers, whiles others are ſubiect; Some wealthy, others poore; but why thoſe wealthy rulers ſhould tyrannixe ouer thoſe poore inferiours, and turne brotherhood into bondage no reaſon can be giuen but lawleſſe ambition; If there were one fleſh of Peeres, another of Peaſants, there ſhould be ſome colour for the proud impoſitions of the great, as becauſe the fleſh of beaſts is in a lower ranke then ours, we kill, we deuoure it at pleaſure; but now ſince the large bodie of mankinde conſiſts of the ſame fleſh, why ſhould the hand ſtrike the foot? And if one fleſh may challenge meet reſpects from vs, how much more one ſpirit; The ſpirit is more noble, then the fleſh is baſe; the fleſh is dead without the ſpirit; the ſpirit without the fleſh, actiue and immortall, Our ſoule, though ſhapeleſſe, D and immateriall, is more apparently one, then the fleſh; And if the vnitie of our humane ſpirit call vs to a mutuall care, and tenderneſſe in our carriage, each to other, how much more of the diuine? by that wee are men, by this we are Chriſtians: As the ſoule animates vs to a naturall life, ſo doth Gods Spirit animate the ſoule to an heauenly; which is ſo one; that it cannot be deuided. How ſhould that one ſpirit cauſe vs ſo farre to forget all naturall, and ciuill differences, as not to contemne, not to oppreſſe any whom it informeth?

They

A They are not Chriſtians, not men, that can inioy the miſeries of their brethren, whether in the fleſh or ſpirit.

Good Nehemiah cannot chooſe but be much moued at the barbarous extortion of the people; and now, like an vnpartiall gouernour, he rebukes the Rulers and Nobles, whoſe hand was thus bloudie with oppreſſion. As of fiſhes, ſo of men, the leſſer are a prey to the great: It is an ill vſe made of power, when the weight of it ſerues onely to cruſh the weake. There were no liuing amongſt men, had not God ordained heigher then the higheſt; and yet heigher then they. Eminencie of place cannot be better improued, then by taking downe mightie offenders.

If Nobilitie doe embaſe it ſelfe to any foule ſinne, it is ſo much more worthy of coertion, by how much the perſon is of greater marke.

The iuſtice of this reproofe could not but ſhame impudence it ſelfe; We after our abilitie haue redeemed our brethren the Iewes which were ſold to the heathen, and will you ſell your brethren, or ſhall they be ſould to vs? Shall they find at home that yoke of bondage which they had put off abroad? whiles they are ſtill
B Iewes, ſhall we turne Aſſyrians? If they muſt bee ſlaues, why not rather to enemies, then to brethren? How much more tollerable were a foraine ſeruitude, then a domeſticall: Be aſhamed, O ye Nobles of Iſrael, to renue Babylon in Ieruſalem. I maruell not if the offenders be ſtricken dumbe with ſo vnanſwerable an expoſtulation; Guiltineſſe, and confuſion haue ſtopt their mouthes.

Many of thoſe who haue not had grace enough to refraine ſinne, yet are not ſo vtterly voide of grace as to maintaine ſinne; Our after-wits are able to diſcerne a kinde of vnreaſonableneſſe in thoſe wicked actions, which the firſt appearance repreſents vnto vs plauſible. Gaine leads in ſinne, but ſhame followes it out. There are thoſe that are bold and wittie to beare out commodious, or pleaſant euills; neither could theſe Iewiſh enormities, haue wanted ſome colours of defence; Their ſtocke was their owne, which might haue beene otherwiſe improued, to no leſſe profit; The offer, the ſuit of theſe bargaines was from the ſellers; Theſe eſcheates fell into their hands, vnſought; neither did their contract cauſe the neede of their brethren, but relieue it: But their con-
C ſcience will not beare this plea. I know not whether the maintenance of the leaſt euill be not worſe, then the commiſſion of the greateſt; This may bee of frailtie, that argues obſtinacie: There is hope of that man that can bluſh and be ſilent.

After conuiction of the fact, it is ſeaſonable for Nehemiah, to perſwade reformation: No oratorie is ſo powerfull, as that of mildneſſe: eſpecially when we haue to doe with thoſe, who either through ſtomach, or greatneſſe, may not indure a rough reproofe: The drops that fall eaſily vpon the corne, ripen, and fill the eare, but the ſtormie ſhowers that fall with violence, beate downe the the ſtalkes flat to the earth, and lay whole fields, without hope of recouerie. Who can reſiſt this ſweete and ſoueraigne reprehenſion; Ought yee not to walke in the feare of our God, becauſe of the reproach of the heathen, our enemies? Did we dwell alone in the midſt of the earth, yet the feare of our God ſhould ouer-awe our wayes; but now that we dwell in the midſt of our enemies, whoſe eyes are bent vpon all our actions, whoſe tongues are as readie to blaſpheme God, as
D we to offend him, how carefully ſhould we auoid thoſe ſinnes, which may draw ſhame vpon our profeſſion?

Now the ſcandall is worſe then the fact; Thus, ſhall Religion ſuffer more from the heathen, then our brethren doe from vs: If iuſtice, if charitie cannot ſway with vs, yet let the ſcorneſull inſultations of the prophane Gentiles, affright vs from theſe preſſures. No ingenuous diſpoſition can be ſo tender of his owne diſgrace, as the true Iſraelite is of the reproch of his God: What is it that he will not rather refraine, doe, ſuffer, then that glorious Name ſhall hazard a blemish? They cannot want outward retentiues from sinne, that liue either among friends, or enemies; if friends, they may not be grieued, if enemies, they may not be prouoked: Those that would liue well, must stand in awe of all eyes; Euen those that are without the Church yet may not be without our regard: No person can be so contemptible, as that his censure should be contemned. A

In disswading from sinne, reason it selfe cannot preuaiue more then example. I likewise, and my brethren, and my seruants might exact of them money, and corne. But from the time that I was appointed to the charge of Iudah, I, and my brethren haue not eaten the bread of the gouernour. He shall neuer rule well, that doth all that he may: It is not safe for either part, that a Prince should liue at the height of his power: and if the greatest abate of their right, is it for inferiors to extort? Had Nehemiah aimed at his owne greatnesse, no man could haue had fairer pretences for his gaine.

The former gouernors that were before him were chargeable vnto the people, and had taken of them bread and wine, besides fortie shekels of siluer. His foot had not first trod in this commodious path; it was bearen by the steps of his predecessors; neither did any of them walke besides it: How euer it might be enuious to raise new taxations yet to continue those he found vnrepined at, had beene out of the reach of exception: A good Gouernour lookes not so much what hath beene done, as what should be; Precedents are not the rule, whereby hee rules, but iustice, but pietie. So did not I, because of the feare of the Lord: Lawes are not a straighter curbe to subiects, then conscience is to good Princes. B

They dare not doe what they cannot doe charitably: what aduantage can they thinke it to be from vnder the controllment of men, when the God of heauen notes, and punishes their offences. Who so walketh by this rule, can neither erre, nor mis-carrie; It is not trusting to the externall remedies of sinne, either they are not alwayes present; or if present, not pourefull enough; but if the feare of God haue once taken vp the heart, it goes euer with vs, and is strong enough to ouer-master the forceableſt temptation.

Therefore must these Iewes follow this example of Nehemiah, because he followed not the example of his predecessors; because hee left their euill, they must imitate his good. In vaine shall Rulers aduise against their owne practice; when they lead the way, they may well challenge to be followed: Seldome hath it beene euer seene that great persons haue not beene seconded in euill; why should not their power serue to make patternes of their vertues? C

Thus well did it speed with Nehemiah, his mercifull carriage, and zealous suit haue drawne the Rulers to a promise of restitution; We will restore them, and will require nothing of them, so will we doe as thou saiest.

It is no small aduantage that these Nobles must forgoe, in their releases: there cannot be a better signe of a sound amendment, then that wee can bee content to be loosers by our repentance; many formall penitents haue yeelded to part with so much of their sinne, as may abate nothing of their profit; as if these Rulers should haue beene willing to restore the persons, but withall should haue stood stifely to require their summes: This whining and partiall satisfaction had beene thankelesse. True remorse inlargeth the heart, and openeth the hand to a bountifull redemption of our errors. D

Good purposed doe too often coole in time, and vanish into a careleſse forgetfulnesse; Nehemiah feared this issue of these holy resolutions; and therefore he prosecutes them in their first heat; not leauing these promises, till hee had secured them, with an oath; The Priests are called for, that in their mouthes, the adiuration may be more solemne, and sacred; It is the best point of wisedome to take the first opportunitie of fixing good motions which otherwise are of themselues light, and slightie. To make all yet more sure, their oathes

A are croſſe-barred with his execration. Alſo I ſhooke my lap, and ſaid, ſo God ſhake out euerie man from his houſe, and from his labour that performeth not this promiſe, euen thus be he ſhaken out, and emptied, and all the Congregation ſaid, Amen. A promiſe, an oath, a curſe, are paſſed vpon this act; now, no Iſraelite dares falter in the execution: When we haue a ſinne in chaſe, it is good to follow it home, not ſlackning our purſuit till wee haue fully preuailed; and when it is once ſalne vnder our hands, we cannot kill it too much.

Now Nehemiah hauing thus happily deliuered his people from a domeſticall captiuitie, commends his ſeruice to the gracious remuneration of the Almightie; Thinke vpon me my God, for good, according to all that I haue done for this people; Therefore doth he refuſe the bread of the Gouernour, that he may receiue the reward of the Gouernour of heauen: Had he taken a temporarie recompence, both he, and it had beene forgotten, now he hath made an happie change for eternitie. Not that he pleades his merit, but ſues for mercie; neither doth hee pray to be remembred for his worke, but according to his worke.

Our good deedes as they are well accepted of God, ſo they ſhall not goe vn-
B rewarded; and what God will giue, why may not we craue. Doubtleſſe, as wee may offer vp our honeſt obediences vnto God, ſo wee may expect and beg his promiſed retributions; not out of a proud conceit of the worth of our earnings, who at the beſt are no other then vnprofitable ſeruants, but out of a faithfull dependance vpon his pact of bountie, who cannot bee leſſe then his word: O God, if we doe ought that is good, it is thine act, and not ours; crowne thine owne worke in vs, and take thou the glorie of thine owne mercies.

Whiles Nehemiah is buſie in the reforming abuſes, at home; the enemie is plotting againſt him, abroad; Sanballat, and Tobiah, and Geſhem the Arabian conſpire againſt his life, and in him, againſt the peace of Ieruſalem: What open hoſtilitie could not doe; they hope to effect by pretence of treaties: Foure ſeuerall meſſages call Nehemiah to a friendly meeting. Diſtruſt is a ſure guard. The wiſe gouernor hath learn'd to ſuſpect the hollow fauours of an enemie and to returne them, with ſafe and iuſt excuſes. I cannot come downe, why ſhould the
C worke ceaſe whiles I leaue it, and come downe to you? I do not heare him ſay, You intend miſchiefe to me; I will not come forth to you; though this were the proper cauſe of his forbearance, but he turnes them off with an anſwer, that had as much truth, as reſeruednesſe. Fraud is the fitlieſt anſwered with ſubtletie Euen innocencie is allowed a lawfull craft; That man is in an ill caſe, that conceales no truth from an aduerſarie.

What intreaties cannot doe, ſhall be attempted by threats; Sanballats ſeruant comes now the fifth time, with an opend letter, importing dangerous intimation, wherein is written, It is reported among the heathen, and Gaſhmu ſaith it, that the Iewes thinke to rebell; for which cauſe thou buildeſt the wall that thou maieſt be their King. It is reported: and what falſhood may not plead this warrant? What can be more lying then report? Among the heathen: and who is more Ethnicke then Sanballat? what Pagan can be worſe then a mungrel Idolater? And Gaſhmu ſaith it, Aske my fellow elſe; This Arabian was one of thoſe three heads of all the hoſtile combination, againſt Ieruſalem, againſt Nehemiah;
D It would be wide with innocence if enemies might be allow'd to accuſe.

That the Iewes thinke to rebell: A ſtale ſuggeſtion, but once, powerfull; Malice hath learn'd to miſcall all actions; where the hands cannot bee taxed, verie thoughts are preiudged: For which cauſe thou buildeſt the wall, that thou mayeſt be their King; He was neuer true Iſraelite that hath not paſſed ſpightfull ſlanders, and miſconſtructions: Artaxerexes knew his ſeruant too well, to beleeue any rumour, that ſhould haue beene ſo ſhameleſſe; The ambition of Nehemiah was well knowne to reach onely to the cup, not to the Scepter of his Soueraigne; And yet, to make vp a ſound tale, Prophets are ſuborned to preach, There is a King in Iudah: as if that loyall gouernour had corrupted the pulpits alſo; and had taught them the language of treaſon. A

But what of all this? what if ſome falſe tongue haue whiſpered ſuch idle tales? It is not ſafe for thee, O Nehemiah, to contemne report: Perhaps this newes ſhall fly to the Court, and worke thee a deadly diſpleaſure ere thou canſt know thy ſelfe traduced; Come therefore, and let vs take counſell together: Surely that man cannot be ſparing of any thing, that is prodigall of his reputation. If ought vnder heauen can fetch Nehemiah out of his hold, it is the care of his fame. But that warie gouernour ſees a net ſpred neere vnto this ſtall; and therefore keeps alooſe, not without contempt of thoſe ſlie deuiſes. There are no ſuch things done as thou ſayeſt, but thou faineſt them out of thine owne heart: Some imputations are beſt anſwered with a neglectiue deniall: It falls out often that plaine dealing puts craft out of countenance.

Since neither force nor fraud can kill Nehemiah, they will now trie to draw him into a ſinne, and thereby into a reproach; O God, that any Prophets tongue ſhould be mercenarie! Shemaiah the Seer, is hired by Tobiah, and Sanbalat, to affright the Gouernour, with the noiſe of his intended murder; and to aduiſe him for ſhelter, to flie to the forbidden refuge of the Temple. The colour was faire. Violence is meant to thy perſon, no place but one can promiſe thee ſafetie; The Citie hath as yet no gates; come therefore, and ſhut thy ſelfe vp in the Temple, there onely ſhalt thou be free from all aſſaults. B

And what if Nehemiah had harkened to this counſell? Sinne, and ſhame had followed; That holy place was for none but perſons ſacred; ſuch as were priuiledged by bloud, and function; others ſhould preſume, and offend in entring; and now, what would the people ſay? What ſhall become of vs whiles our Gouernour hides his head for feare? Where ſhall wee finde a Temple to ſecure vs? What do we depending vpon a cowardly leader?

Well did Nehemiah fore-caſt theſe circumſtances, both of act, and euent, and therefore reſoluing to diſtruſt a Prophet that perſwaded him to the violation of a Law, he reiects the motion with ſcorne; Should ſuch a man as I flee? Should I goe into the Temple to ſaue my life? I will not goe: It is fit for great perſons to ſtand vpon the honour of their places; Their verie ſtations ſhould put thoſe ſpirits into them, That ſhould make them hate to ſtoope vnto baſe conditions. C

Had God ſent this meſſage, wee know hee hath power to diſpence with his owne Lawes; but well might the contradiction of a Law argue the meſſage not ſent of God. God as hee is one, ſo doth hee perfitly agree with himſelfe.

If any priuate ſpirit croſſe a written word let him bee accurſed.

WHat bounds can ibe set to humane ambition? Ahasuerus, that is, Xerxes the sonne of Darius is alreadie the King of an hundred, and seauen and twentie Prouinces, and now is readie to fight for more. He hath newly subdued Egypt, and is now addressing himselfe for the conquest of Greece. He cannot hope euer to see all the land that he possesseth, and yet he cannot be quiet, whiles he heares of more. Lesse then two ells of earth shall ere long serue him, whom, for the time, a whole world shall scarce satisfie; in vaine shall a man striue to haue that which he cannot inioy, and to inioy ought by meere relation; It is a windie happinesse that is sought in the exaggeration of these titles, which are taken vpon others credit, without the sense of the owner: Nothing can fill the heart of man, but he that made it. Esther, 1.3.

This great Monarch, partly in triumph of the great victories, that hee hath lately wonne in Egypt, and partly, for the animation of his Princes, and souldiers to his future exploits, makes a feast, like himselfe, royall and magnificent.

What is greatnesse if it be not showed? And wherein can greatnesse be better showne, then in the atchieuments of warre, and the entertainment of peace?

All other feasts were but hunger to this of Ahasuerus, whether we regard the number of guests, or the largenesse of preparation, or continuance of time:

C During the space of a whole halfe yeare, all the tables were sumptuously furnished for all commers from India, to Ethyopia; A world of meat; Euerie meale was so set on, as if it should haue beene the last: Yet all this long feast hath an end; and all this glorie is shut vp in forgetfulnesse; What is Ahasuerus the better, that his Peeres then said, he was in comparably great? What are his Peeres the better, that they were feasted? Happie is hee that eates bread, and drinkes new wine in the Kingdome of God; this banquet is for eternitie, without intermission, without satietie.

What varietie of habites, of languages, of manners, met at the boards of Ahasuerus? What confluence of strange guests was there now to Shushan? And, least the glorie of this great King might seeme, like some course picture, onely faire a farre off; after the Princes and Nobles of the remote Prouinces, all the people of Shushan are intertained, for seuen dayes with equall pompe and state; The spacious Court of the Palace is turned into a Royall Hall, the walls are rich hangings, the pillars of marble, the beds of siluer and gold, the paue-

D ment of porphirie curiously checkered; The wine and the vessels stroue whether should be the richer; no men drunke in worse then gold; and whiles the mettall was the same, the forme of each cup was diuerse; the attendance was answerable to the cheare; and the freedome matched both: Here was no compulsion, either to the measure, or qualitie of the draught; euerie mans rule was his owne choise. Who can but blush to see forced healths in Christian banquets, when the ciuilitie of verie Pagans commands libertie.

I cannot but enuie the modestie of heathen Dames; Vashti the Queene, and her her Ladies, with all the ſeuerall rankes of that ſexe, feaſt apart; intertaining each other, with a baſhfull courteſie, without wantonneſſe, without that wilde ſcurrilitie, which vſeth to haunt promiſcuous meetings: Oh ſhameſull vnchaſtitie of thoſe looſe Chriſtians, who muſt feed their luſt, whiles they fill their bellies; and thinke the feaſt vnperfit, where they may not ſate their eye no leſſe then their palate. A

The laſt day of this pompous feaſt is now come: King Ahaſuerus is ſo much more cheerefull, by how much his gueſts are neerer to their diſmiſſion. Euerie one is wont to cloſe vp his curteſie with ſo much more paſſion, as the laſt acts vſe to make the deeper impreſſion; And now, that he might at once amaze, and indeare the beholders, Vaſhti the Queene in all her royaltie, is called for; Her ſight ſhall ſhut vp the feaſt, that the Princes and people may ſay, How happie is King Ahaſuerus, not ſo much in this greatneſſe, as in that beautie.

Seuen officers of the chamber are ſent to carrie the meſſage, to attend her entrance, and are returned with a deniall: Perhaps Vaſhi thought; What meanes this vncouth motion? More then ſixe moneths hath this feaſt continued; and, all this while we haue inioyed the wanted libertie of our ſexe; Were the King ſtill himſelfe, this command could not be ſent; it is the wine, and not he, that is guiltie of this errand; Is it for me to humour him in ſo vaine a deſire? Will it agree with our modeſt reſeruedneſſe, to offer our ſelues to bee gazed at by millions of eyes? Who knowes what wanton attempts may follow vpon this vngouerned exceſſe? This verie meſſage argues that wit, and reaſon haue yeelded their places to that beſotting liquor. Nothing but abſence can ſecure vs from ſome vnbeſeeming profer; neither doubt I, but the King when he returnes to himſelfe, will giue me thankes for ſo wiſe a forbearance. B

Thus vpon the conceit (as is likely) that her pretence would be either needleſſe, or vnſafe. Vaſhi refuſeth to come. Although perhaps her great ſpirits thought much to receiue a command from the hand of officers.

The bloud that is once inflamed with wine, is apt to boyle with rage: Ahaſuerus is verie wroth with this indigne repulſe: It was the oſtentation of his glorie, and might, that he affected, before theſe Princes, Peeres, people; and now that ſeemes eclipſed, in the ſhutting vp of all his magnificence, with the diſgracefull affront of a woman. It vexes him to thinke that thoſe Nobles, whom he meant to ſend away aſtoniſhed with the admiration of his power, and maieſtie, ſhould now ſay: What boots it Ahaſuerus to rule a farre off, when hee cannot command at home? In vaine doth he boaſt to gouerne Kings, whiles he is checked by a woman. C

What euer were the intentions of Vaſhti, ſurely her diſobedience was inexcuſable; it is not for a good wife to iudge of her husbands will, but to execute it: neither wit, nor ſtomacke may carrie her into a curious inquiſition into the reaſons of an inioyned charge, much leſſe to a reſiſtance: but in a hood-winkt ſimplicitie ſhe muſt follow, whither ſhe is led; as one that holds her chiefe praiſe to conſiſt in ſubiection.

Where ſhould the perfection of wiſedome dwell, if not in the Courts of great Princes? or what can the treaſures of Monarchs purchaſe more inualuably precious, then learned and iudicious attendance? Or who can be ſo fit for honour as the wiſeſt.

I doubt how Ahaſuerus could haue beene ſo great, if his throne had not beene ſtill compaſſed with them that knew the times, and vnderſtood the law, and iudgement. Theſe were his Oracles in all his doubts. Theſe are now conſulted in this difficultie; neither muſt their aduice be ſecretly whiſpered, in the Kings eare, but publikely deliuered in the audiences of all the Princes. It is a perilous way that theſe ſages are called to goe, betwixt an husband and wife; eſpecially of ſuch power, and eminencie; yet Memucan feares not to paſſe a heauie ſentence D

A against Queene Vashti, Vashti, the Queene hath not done wrong to the King onely, but also to all the Princes, and all the people, that are in all the Prouinces of the King Ahasuerus. A deepe and sore crimination; iniuries are so much more intolerable, as they are dilated vnto more; those offences which are of narrow extent, may receiue an easie satisfaction; the amends are not possible, where the wrong is vniuersall: For this deede of the Queue shall come abroad to all woman, so that they shall despise their husbands in their eyes: Indeed so publiqte a fact must needs flie; That concourse gaue fit opportunitie to diffuse it all the world ouer; The examples of the great are easily drawne into rules. Bad lessons are apt to be taken out; as honour, so contempt fals downe from the head to the skirts; neuer ascends from the skirts to the head.

These wise men are so much the more sensible of this danger, as they saw it more likely, the case might proue their owne. Likewise shall the Ladies of Persia
B and Media say this day vnto all Kings Princes. The first precedentes of euill must be carefully auoided, if we care to keepe a constant order in good. Prudence cannot better bestirre it selfe, then in keeping mischiefe, from home.

The foundation of this doome of Memucan is not laid so deepe for nothing; If it please the King let there goe a royall commandement from him, and let it bee written among the lawes of Persians, and Medians, that it be not altered, that Vashti come no more before Ahasuerus; and let the King giue her royall estate to another that is better then she, How bold a word was this, and how hazardous? Had Ahasuerus more loued the beautie of Vashti, then his honor, Memucan had spoken against his owne life: Howsoeuer, a Queene of so great spirit, could not want strength of fauour, and faction, in the Persian Court; which could not but take fire at so desperate a motion. Faithfull Statesmen, ouerlooking priuate respects, must bend their eyes vpon publique dangers, labouring to preuent a common mischiefe, though with the aduenture of their owne. Nature had taught these Pagans the necessitie of a female subiection; and the hate and scorne of a proud disobedience. They haue vnlearned the verie dictates of Nature, that can abide the head to be set below the ribbe.

I cannor say but Vashti was worthy of a sharp censure; I cannot say she was wor-
C thy arepudiatiō. This plaister drew too hard; It was but heathen iustice to punish the wiues disobedience in one indifferent act, with a diuorce: Nothing but the violation of the marriage-bed, can either breake, or vntie the knot of marriage. Had she not beene a Queene, had not that contemptuous act beene publique, the sentence had not beene so hard; now the punishment must be exemplarie, lest the sinne should be so. Manie a one had smarted lesse, if their persons, if their places had beene meaner.

The King, the Princes approue this heauie iudgement of Memucan; It is not in the power of the faire face of Vashti, to warrant her stomacke: No doubt many messages passed ere the rigour of this execution: That great heart knowes not to relent, but will rather breake, then yeeld to an humble deprecation. When the stone, and the steele mete, fire it stricken; it is a soft answer that appeaseth wrath. Vashti is cast off, Letters are sent from the King, into all his Prouinces,
D to command that euerie man should rule at home; The Court affords them an awfull patterne of authoritie: Had not Ahasuerus doted much vpon Vashties beautie, he had not called her forth at the feast, to bee woundred at, by his Peeres and people, yet now he so feeles the wound of his reputation, that hee forgets he euer felt any wound of his affection. Euen the greatest loue may bee ouer-strained; It is not safe presuming vpon the deepest assurances of deareneſſe: There is no heart that may not be estranged. It is not possible that great Princes should want soothing vp in all their inclinations, in all their actions: Whiles Ahasuerus is folluwing the chace of his ambition, in the warres of Greece, his followers are prouiding for his lust at home; Nothing could sound more pleasing to a carnall care, then that all the faire young virgins, thorowout all his dominions. A ſhould bee gathered into his palace at Shuſhan, for his aſſay, and choice: The decree is ſoone publiſhed; The charge is committed to Hege, the Kings Chamberlaine, both of their purification, and ornaments.

What ſtrife, what emulation was now, amongſt all the Perſian damoſells, that either were, or thought themſelues faire? Euerie one hopes to be a Queene, and ſees no reaſon why any other ſhould bee thought more excellent; How happie were we, if we could be ſo ambitious of our eſpouſalls to the King of heauen?

Amongſt all this throng of Virgins, God hath prouided a wife for Ahaſuerus; hauing determined his choice, where moſt aduantage ſhall riſe to his forlorne people.

The Iewes were miſerably ſcattered ouer the world, in that wofull deportation vnder Ieconiah; ſcarce an handfull of them returned to Ieruſalem; the reſt remaine ſtill diſperſed where they may but haue leaue to liue. There are many thouſands of them turned ouer with the Babylonian Monarchy, to the Perſian; amongſt the reſt, was Mordecai, the ſoone of Iair, of the tribe of Beniamin; a man of no meane note, or abilitie; who, liuing in Shuſhan, had brought vp Hadaſſah, or Eſther, his vnkles daughter, in a liberall faſhion; It was happie for this Orphane, that in a region of captiuitie, ſhe light into ſuch good hands; Her wife kinſman B finds it fit, that her breeding, and habite ſhould be Perſian like; In outward and ciuill formes, there was no need to varrie from the heathen; her Religion muſt be her owne; the reſt was ſo altogether theirs, that her verie Nation was not diſcerned.

The ſame God that had giuen incomparable beautie to this Ieweſſe, gaue her alſo fauour in the eyes of Hegai; the keeper of the women; Shee is not onely taken into the Perſian Court, as one of the ſelected virgins, but obſerued with more then ordinarie reſpect; all neceſſaries for her ſpeedie purification are brought to her; Seuen maides are allowed for her attendance, and the beſt and moſt honourable place in that Seraglio is allotted to her; As if this great officer had deſigned her for a Queene, before the choiſe of his maſter.

What ſtrange preparation was here for the impure bed of an heathen? Euery Virgin muſt be ſixe moneths purified with oyle of myrrhe, and ſixe other C moneths perfumed with ſweet odors, beſides thoſe ſpeciall receits, that were allowed to each, vpon their owne election: O God, what care, what coſt is requiſite to that ſoule which ſhould be addreſſed a fit Bride for thine holy and glorious Maieſtie?

When we haue ſcoured our ſelues with the moſt cleanſing oyle of our repentance, and haue perfumed our ſelues with thy beſt graces, and our perfecteſt obedience, it is the onely praiſe of thy mercie, that we may bee accepted.

The other Virgins paſſed their probation, vnregarded; when Eſthers turne came, though ſhe required nothing; but tooke what was giuen her; though ſhe affected nothing; but brought that face, that demeanure, which nature had caſt vpon her, no eye ſees her without admiration; the King takes ſuch pleaſure in her beautie, that, contemning all the other vulger formes, his choyce is fully fixed vpon her; All things muſt proſper, wher God hath intended the ſucceſſe; the moſt D wiſe prouidence of the Almightie ferches his proiects from farre; The preſeruation and aduantage of his owne people is in hand; for the contriuing of this, Vaſhti ſhall be abandoned; the Virgins ſhall be choſen; Eſther onely ſhall pleaſe Ahaſuerus; Mordecai ſhall diſpleaſe Haman; Hamans ruine ſhall raiſe Mordecai: The purpoſes of God cannot be iudged by his remote actions; onely the accompliſhment ſhowes his deſignes; In the meane time, it pleaſeth him to looke another way, then he moues; and to worke his owne ends, by arbitrarie and vnlikely accidents.

None

A None but Esther shall succeed Vashti; she onely carries the heart of Ahasuerus from all her sexe; The royall Crowne is set vpon her head; And, as Vashti was cast off at a feast, so, with a solemne feast shall Esther bee espoused; Here wanted no triumph, to expresse the ioy of this great Bridegroome; and that the world might witnesse he could be no lesse louing, then seuere, all his Prouinces shall feele the pleasure of this happie match, in their immunities, in their rich gifts.

With what enuious eyes doe we thinke Vashti lookt vpon her glorious riuall? How doth she now (though too late) secretly chide her peeuish will, that had thus stript her of her royall crowne, and made way for a more happie successor? Little did shee thinke her refusall could haue had so hainous a construction: Little did shee feare, that one word (perhaps not ill meant) should haue forfeited her husband, her crowne, and all that she was. Who so is not wise enough to forecast the danger of an offence, or indiscretion, may haue leasure enough of an vnseasonable repentance.

B That minde is truly great and noble, that is not changed with the hiest prosperitie; Queene Esther cannot forget her cozen Mordecai; No pompe can make her sleight the charge of so deare a kinsman: In all her royaltie, she casts her eye vpon him, amongst the throng of beholders, but she must not know him; her obedience keepes her in awe, and will not suffer her to draw him vp with her, to the participation of her honor; it troubles her not a little, to forbeare this dutie; but shee must; It is enough for her, that Mordecai hath commanded her not to be acknowne, who, or whose she was.

Perhaps the wise Iew feared, that whiles her honour was yet greene, and vnsetled, the notice of her nation, and the name of a despised captiue might bee some blemish to her in that proud Court; when as afterwards, vpon the merit of her carriage, and the full possession of all hearts, her name might dignifie her nation, and countermand all reproches.

Mordecai was an officer in the Court of Ahasuerus; his seruice called him daily to attend in the Kings gate; Much better might he, being a Iew, serue a Pagan Master, then his foster-daughter might ascend to a Pagans bed.

If the necessitie or conuenience of his occasions called him to serue; his pie-
C tie and Religion called him to faithfulnesse in his seruice: Two of the Kings Chamberlaines, Bigthana, and Terish, conspire against the life of their Soueraine. No greatnesse can secure from trecherie, or violence: He that ruled ouer millions of men, through an hundred and seuen and twentie Prouinces, cannot assure himselfe from the hand of a vilaine; He that had the power of other mens liues, is in danger of his owne. Happie is that man, that is once possessed of a crowne incorruptible, vnfadable, reserued for him in heauen: no force, no treason can reach thither, there can be no perill of either violence, or forfaiture.

The likeliest defence of the person of any Prince, is the fidelitie of his attendants: Mordecai ouer-heares the whispering of these wicked conspirators; and
D reueales it to Esther; she (as glad of such an opportunitie to commend vnto Ahasuerus the loyaltie of him whom she durst but secretly honour) reueales it to the King; The circumstances are examined, the plot is discouered, the traytors executed, the seruice recorded, in the Persian Annalls. A good foundation is thus laid for Mordecaies aduancement, which yet is not ouer-hastened, on either part; Worthy dispositions labour onely to deserue well, leauing the care of their remuneration, to them, whom it concernes; It is fit that Gods leasure should be attended in all his designements; The houre is set, when Mordecai shall be raised: If in the meane time there bee an interuention, not onely of neglect, but of feares, and dangers; all these shall make his honour so much more sweet, more precious.

Haman diſreſpected by Mordecai. Mordecaies meſſage to Esther.

Esther 3.4. BEſides the charge of his office, the care of Eſthers proſperitie calls Mordecai to the Kings gate; and fixes him there: With what inward contentment did hee thinke of his ſo royall pupill? Here I ſit among my fellowes; little doth the world thinke, that mine adopted child ſits in the Throne of Perſia: that the great Empreſſe of the world owes her ſelfe to me; I might haue more honour, I could not haue ſo much ſecret comfort, if all Shuſhan knew what intereſt I haue in Queene Eſther.

Whiles his heart is taken vp with theſe thoughts, who ſhould come ruffling by him, but the new-raiſed fauorite of King Ahaſuerus, Haman the ſonne of Ammedatha the Agagite? Him hath the great King inexpectedly aduanced, and ſet his ſeat aboue all the Princes that were with him: The gracious reſpects of Princes are not alwaies led by merit, but by their owne will; which is euer affected to be ſo much the freer, as themſelues would be held more great. B

When the Sunne ſhines vpon the Diall, euerie paſſenger will be looking at it; There needed no command of reuerence, where Ahaſuerus was pleaſed to countenance; All knees will bow alone euen to forbidden Idols of honor; how much more where royall authoritie inioynes obeyſance? All the ſeruants, all the ſubiects of King Ahaſuerus are willingly proſtrate before this great mignon of their Soueraine; onely Mordecai ſtands ſtiffe, as if hee ſaw nothing more then a man in that proud Agagite.

They are not obſerued that doe as the moſt; but if any one man ſhall varie from the multitude, all eyes are turned vpon him: Mordecaies fellow-officers note this palpable irreuerence, and expoſtulate it; Why tranſgreſſeſt thou the Kings commandements? C

Conſidereſt thou not how farre this affront reacheth? It is not the perſon of Haman, whom thou refuſeſt to adore, but the King in him: Neither doe we regard ſo much the man, as the command; Let him bee neuer ſo vile whom the King bids to be honoured, with what ſafetie can a ſubiect examine the charge, or reſiſt it? his vnworthineſſe cannot diſpence with our loyaltie.

What a dangerous wilfulneſſe ſhould it bee to incurre the forfeiture of thy place, of thy life for a curteſie? If thou wilt not bow with others, expect to ſuffer alone; perhaps (they thought) this omiſſion was vnheedie, In a caſe of ignorance, or incogitancie, it was a friendly office to admoniſh the ſight of the errour had beene the remedie.

Mordecai heares their challenge, their aduice; and thinkes good to anſwer both, with ſilence; as willing they ſhould imagine, his inflexibleneſſe proceeded from a reſolution; and that reſolution from ſome ſecret grounds, which hee needed not impart: at laſt yet he imparts thus much: Let it ſuffice, that I am a Iew, and Haman an Amalekite. D

After a priuate expoſtulation, the continuance of that open neglect is conſtrued for a ſullen obſtinacie; and now, the monitors themſelues grow ſenſible of the contempt: Men are commonly impatient to loſe the thanke of their indeuours, and are prone to hate whom they cannot reforme. Partly therefore

A to picke a thanke, and partly to reuenge this contumacie, theſe officers turne informers againſt Mordecai, neither meant to make the matter fairer then it was; they tell Haman how proud, and ſtubborne a Iew ſate amongſt them, how ill they could brooke ſo ſaucie an affront to bee offered to his greatneſſe; how ſeriouſly they had expoſtulated, how ſtomackefully the offender perſiſted; and beſeech him, that he would be pleaſed in his next paſſage, to caſt ſome glances that way, and but obſerue the faſhion of that intolerable inſolencie.

The proud Agagite cannot long indure the verie expectation of ſuch an indignitie; On purpoſe doth he ſtalke thither; with higher then his ordinarie ſteps; ſnuffing vp the aire; as he goes, and would ſee the man, that durſt denie reuerence to the greateſt Prince of Perſia.

Mordecai holds his old poſture; onely he is ſo much more careleſſe, as he ſees Haman more diſdainefull, and imperious; neither of them goes about to hide his paſſion; one lookt, as if he ſaid, I hate the pride of Haman; the other lookt, as if he ſaid, I will plague the contempt of Mordecai: how did the eyes
B of Haman ſparkle with furie, and as it were dart out deadly beames in the face of that deſpightfull Iew? How did he ſwell with indignation; and then againe waxe pale with anger? ſhortly, his verie brow and his motion bad Mordecai looke for the vtmoſt of reuenge.

Mordecai foreſees his danger, and contemes it; no frownes, no threats can ſouple thoſe ioynts: he may breake, he will not bow.

What ſhall we ſay then to this obſtirmed reſolution of Mordecai? What is it, what can it be, that ſo ſtiffens the knees of Mordecai, that death is more eaſie to him, then their incuruation? Certainely, if meere ciuilitie were in queſtion, this wilfull irreuerence to ſo great a Peere, could not paſſe without the iuſt cenſure of a rude peruerſneſſe; It is Religion that forbids this obeiſance, and tels him, that ſuch curteſie could not be free from ſinne; Whether it were, that more then humane honor was required to this new-erected image of the great King, as the Perſians were euer wont to be noted for too much lauiſhneſſe in theſe courtly deuotions: Or whether it were, that the ancient curſe wherewith God had branded the bloud, and ſtocke of Haman, made it vnlawfull for an Iſraelite to giue him any obſeruance: For the Amalekites (of whoſe royall line Haman
C was deſcended) were the nation, with which God hath ſworne perpetuall hoſtilitie; and whoſe memorie he had ſtraitly charged his people to root out, from vnder heauen; How may I (thinks he) adore, where God commands mee to deteſt? How may I profeſſe reſpect, whete God profeſſeth enmitie? How may I contribute to the eſtabliſhment of that ſeed vpon earth, which God hath charged to be pull'd vp from vnder heauen? Outward actions of indefferencie, when once they are felt to trench vpon the conſcience, lay deepe obligations vpon the ſoule; euen whiles they are moſt ſleighted by careleſſe hearts.

Ex. 17. 16. Deu. 25. 19.

In what a flame of wrath doth Haman liue this while? wherewith he could not but haue conſumed his owne heart, had he not giuen vent to that rage in his aſſured purpoſes of reuenge: Great mens anger is like to themſelues, ſtrong, D fierce, ambitious of an exceſſiue ſatisfaction. Haman ſcornes to take vp with the bloud of Mordecai; This were but a vulgar amends; Poore men can kill where they hate, and expiate their owne wrong, with the life of a ſingle enemie: Hamans furie ſhall flie an higher pitch; Millons of threates are few enow to bleed for this offence: It is a Iew that hath deſpighted him; all the whole nation of the Iewes ſhall periſh for the ſtomach of this one: The Monarchie of the world was now in the hand of the Perſian, as Iudæa was within this compaſſe, ſo there was ſcarce a Iew vpon earth, without the verge of the Perſian dominions: The generation, the name ſhall now die at once; Neither ſhall there be any memorie of them, but this; There was a people, which hauing beene famous through the world, for three thouſand, foure hundred and foureſcore yeares, were in a moment, extinct by the power of Haman for de- A fault of a curteſie.

Perhaps, that hereditarie grudge, and old antipathie, that was betwixt Iſrael, and Amalek, ſtucke ſtill in the heart of this Agagite; he might know that God had comanded Iſrael to root out Amalek from vnder heauen; and now therefore an Amalekite ſhall be readie to take this aduantage againſt Iſrael. It is extreame iniuſtice to dilate the puniſhment, beyond the offence; and to enwrap thouſands of innocents within the treſpaſſe of one: How many that were yet vnborne when Haman was vnſaluted, muſt rue the fact they liued not to know? How many millions of Iewes were then liuing, that knew not there was a Mordecai? all of them are fetcht into one condition, and muſt ſuffer, ere they can know their offence. Oh the infinite diſtance betwixt the vniuſt crueltie of men, and the iuſt mercies of the Almightie; Euen Caiphas himſelfe could ſay, It is better that one man die, then that all the people ſhould periſh; and here Haman can ſay, It is better that all the people ſhould periſh then that one man ſhould die. Thy mercie, O God, by the willing death of one that had not ſinned, hath defraied the iuſt death of a world of ſinners: Whiles the iniurious rigour of a man, for the ſuppoſed fault of one, would deſtroy a whole nation, that had not offended: It is true, that by the ſinne of one, death raigned ouer all; but it was, becauſe all ſinned in that one, had not all men beene in Adam, all had not falne in him, all had not died in him; It was not the man, but mankind that fell into ſinne, and by ſinne, into death: No man can complaine of puniſhment, whiles no man can exempt himſelfe from the tranſgreſſion: Vnmercifull Haman would haue imbrued his hands in that bloud, which he could not but confeſſe innocent. B

It is a rare thing, if the height of fauour cauſe not preſumption; Such is Hamans greatneſſe, that he takes his deſigne for granted, ere it can receiue a motion; The fitteſt dayes for this great maſſacre, are determined by the lots of their common diuination; according whereunto, Haman chooſeth the houre of this bloudie ſuit; and now, waited on by opportunitie, he addreſſeth himſelfe to King Ahaſuerus. There is a certaine people ſcattered abroad, and diſperſed among the people, in all the Prouinces of the Kingdome, and their lawes are diuers from all people; neither keepe they the Kings lawes, therefore it is not for the Kings profit to ſuffer them; If it pleaſe the King, let it be written that they may bee deſtroyed, and I will pay tenne thouſand talents of ſiluer to the hands of the officers. With what cunning hath this man couched his malice? He doth not ſay, There is a Iew that hath affronted me, let me bee auenged of his nation; this rancour was to monſtrous to be confeſſed; perhaps this ſuggeſtion might haue bred in the mind of Ahaſuerus a conceit of Hamans ill nature, and intolerable immanitie; but his pretences are plauſible, and ſuch as driue at no other, then the publique good; Euery word hath his inſinuation: It is a ſcattered people; were the nation intire, their maintenance could not but ſtand with the Kings honour; but now ſince they are but ſtraglers, as their loſſe would be inſenſible, ſo their continuance, and mixture cannot but be preiudiciall; It was not the fault, it was the miſerie of theſe poore Iewes, that they were diſperſed; and now their diſperſion is made an argument of their extirpation; therefore muſt they be deſtroyed, from the earth, becauſe they were ſcattered ouer the earth. As good, ſo euills draw on each other; That which ſhould plead for pittie in the well affected, is a motiue to crueltie in ſauage minds. Seldome euer hath extremitie of miſchiefe ſeized, where eaſier afflictions haue not beene billeted before. C D

All faithfull Iewes had wont to ſay vnto God, Haue mercie vpon vs, O God, and ſaue vs, for our ſoule is full of contempt, and we are ſcattered amongſt the heathen; and here this enemie can ſay of them, to Ahaſuerus, Deſtroy them for they are ſcattered; Root them out, for they are contemned; How much better

A is it to fall into the hands of God, then of men; ſince that which whets the ſword of men, workes commiſeration in the Almightie: Beſides the diſſipation of the the perſons, Their lawes are diuers from all people: All other people liue by thy lawes, they onely by their owne: and how can this ſingularitie of their faſhions, but breed diſorder, and inconuenience? Did they liue in ſome corner of the earth apart, their difference in Religion and gouernement could not import much; now, that they are diſperſed amongſt all thy ſubiects, what doe theſe vncouth formes of theirs, but teach all the world to bee irregular? Why ſhould they liue vnder thy protection, that will not be gouerned by thy lawes?

Wicked Haman! what were the lawes of Iſrael, but the lawes of God? if this be a quarrell, what ſhall the death of the Iewes be other, then martyrdome?

The diuerſitie of iudgement, and practice from the reſt of the world hath beene an old, and enuious imputation caſt vpon Gods Church: What if wee be ſingled from others, whiles wee walke with God? In matters lawfull, arbitrarie, indifferent, wiſedome teacheth vs to conforme our ſelues to all others;
B but where God hath laid a ſpeciall impoſition vpon vs, we muſt either varie, or ſinne: The greateſt glorie of Iſrael was their lawes, wherein they as farre exceeded all other nations, as heauen is aboue earth; yet, here their lawes are quarrelled, and are made the inducements of their deſtruction; It is not poſſible the Church of God ſhould eſcape perſecution, whiles that which it hath good is maligned; whiles that offends which makes it happie.

Yet, that they haue lawes of their owne, were not ſo vnſufferable, if withall, they did obſerue thine, O King, but theſe Iewes, as they are vncomformable; ſo they are ſeditious: They keepe not the Kings lawes: Thou ſlandereſt Haman; they could not keepe their owne lawes, if they kept not the Kings; for their lawes call them to obedience vnto their ſoueraignes; and adiudge hell to the rebellious: In all thoſe hundred and ſeuen and twentie Prouinces, King Ahaſuerus hath no ſubiects, but them; They obey out of conſcience, others out of feare: why are they charged with that, which they doe moſt abhorre? What can be the ground of this crimination? Ahaſuerus commanded all knees to bow
C to Haman; A Iew onely refuſes; Malicious Haman; He that refuſed to bow vnto thee, had ſufficiently approued his loyaltie to Ahaſuerus; Ahaſuerus had not beene, if Mordecai had not beene a good ſubiect; Hath the King no lawes, but what concerne thine adoration? Set aſide Religion (wherein the Iew is readie to preſent if not actiue, yet paſſiue obedience) and name that Perſian law, which a Iew dares breake.

As I neuer yet read, or heard of a conſcionable Iſraelite, that hath not paſſed vnder this calumniation, ſo I cannot yeeld him a true Iſraelite, that deſerues it.

In vaine doth he profeſſe to acknowledge a God, in heauen, that denies homage to his deputie on earth.

It is not for the Kings profit to ſuffer them. Worldly hearts are not led by good, or euill, but by profit, or loſſe, neither haue they grace to know that nothing is profitable but what is honeſt, nothing ſo deſpetately incommodious, as wickedneſſe; They muſt needs offend by rule that meaſure all things by profit, and meaſure profit by their imagination. How eaſie is it to ſuggeſt
D ſtrange vntruths, when there is no bodie to giue an anſwer? Falſe Haman, how is it not for the Kings profit to ſuffer the Iewes? If thou conſtrue this profit, for honour, the Kings honour is in the multitude of ſubiects, and what people more numerous then they? If for gaine, The Kings profit is in the largeneſſe of his Tributes; and what people are more deepe in their payments? If for ſeruices? what people are more officious? How can it ſtand with the Kings profit to bereaue himſelfe of ſubiects, his ſubiects of their liues, his Exchequer of their tributes, his ſtate of their defence? He is a weake polititian that knowes not to guild ouer the worſt proiect, with a pretence of publike vtilitie. No name vnder heauen hath made ſo many fooles, ſo many vilaines, as this of profit. A

Laſtly, as Ahaſuerus reapes nothing but diſprofit by the liues of the Iewes, ſo he ſhall reape no ſmall profit by their deaths: I will pay tenne thouſand talents of ſiluer to the Kings treaſurie for this execution. If reuenge were not verie ſweet to the malicious man, he could not be content to purchaſe it at ſo high a rate; How doe we ſee daily that the thirſt hereof caries men to a riotous prodigalitie of eſtate, bodie, ſoule?

Cruell Haman, if thou couldſt haue ſwim'd in a whole Sea of Iewiſh bloud, if thou couldſt haue raiſed mountaines of their carcaſſes; if thou couldſt haue made all Perſia thy ſhambles; who would haue giuen thee one farthing for all thoſe piles of fleſh, for all thoſe ſtreames of bloud? yea who would not rather haue beene at charge for the auoiding of the annoyances of thoſe ſlaughtered bodies, which thou offereſt to buy at ten thouſand talents? It were an happie thing, if charitie could inlarge it ſelfe, but ſo much as malice; if the preſeruation of mankinde could be ſo much beholden to our bountie, as the deſtruction. B

Now when all theſe are laid together, the baſeneſſe and diſperſedneſſe of the people, the diuerſitie of the lawes, the irregularitie of their gouernment, the rebellion of their practice, the inconuenience of their toleration, the gaine of their extirpation; what could the wit or art of man deuiſe more inſinuatiue, more likely to perſwade? How could it bee but Ahaſuerus muſt needs thinke (ſince he could not ſuſpect the ground of this ſuit;) What a zealous patriot haue I raiſed that can be content to buy off the incommoditie of the ſtate, at his owne charge? How worthy is he rather of the aide both of my power, and purſe?. why ſhould I be fee'd to eaſe my Kingdomes of rebels: The ſiluer is giuen to thee, the people alſo, to doe with them as ſeemeth good to thee: Without all delay, the ſecretaries are call'd to write the warrants, the Kings ring is giuen to ſeale them, the poſts are ſent out to carrie them into all Prouinces; The day is ſet wherein all Iewes, of all ages, of both ſexes, thorow the hundred and ſeuen and twentie Prouinces of the King, ſhall be ſacrificed to the wrath of Haman.

In all the carriage of Ahaſuerus, who ſees not too much headdineſſe of paſſion? Vaſhti is caſt off for a trifle; the Iewes are giuen to the ſlaughter for nothing, his rage in the one, his fauour in the other is too impotent: He is not a worſe huſband then a King; the bare word of Haman is enough to kill ſo manie ſubiects: No diſpoſition can be more dangerous in great perſons, then violence of affection mixed with credulitie. Oh the ſeeming inequalitie of humane conditions: The King and Haman ſate downe to drinke, but the Citie of Shuſhan was perplexed: It is a wofull thing to ſee great ones quaffe the teares of the oppreſſed; and to heare them make muſicke of ſhriekes. C

With what lamentation doe we thinke all the Synagogues of Iewes thorow the world receiued this fatall meſſage of their proclaimed deſtruction? How doe they bemone themſelues, each to other? How doe their conioyned cries fill heauen, and earth? But aboue all, what ſack-cloth and aſhes could ſuffiſe wofull Mordecai, that found in himſelfe the occaſion of all this ſlaughter? What ſoule could be capable of more bitterneſſe, then he felt? Whiles he could not but thinke, Wretched man that I am; It is I, that haue brought all this calamitie vpon my nation; It is I, that haue been the ruine of my people: woe is me that euer I put my ſelfe into the Court, into the ſeruice of a Pagan; how vnhappie was I to caſt my ſelfe into theſe ſtraits, that I muſt either honour an Agagite, or draw a vengeance vpon Iſrael? Yet how could I imagine, that, the flame of Hamans rage would haue broken out ſo farre? might that reuenge haue determined in my bloud, how happie ſhould I haue beene? now, I haue brought death vpon many thouſands of innocents, that cannot know wherefore they die; D

A die; Why did I not hide my selfe rather from the place of that proud Amalekite? Why did I stand out in contestation with so ouer-powerfull an enemie? Alas, no man of Israel shall so much as liue to curse me, only mine enemies shall record my name, with ignominie, and say, Mordecai was the bane of his nation. Oh, that my zeale should haue reserued me for so heauie a seruice! Where now are those vaine ambitions, wherewith I pleased my selfe in this great match of Esther? How fondly did I hope by this vndue meanes to raise my selfe and my people? Yea, is not this carnall presumption the quarrell that God hath against me? Doe I not therefore smart from these Pagans, for that I secretly affected this vncircumcised alliance? Howsoeuer it be, yet, O God, what haue thy people done? Oh let it be thy iust mercie that I may perish alone!

In these sad thoughts did Mordecai spend his heart, whiles he walked mournfully in sackcloth, before that gate, wherein hee was wont to sit; now his habit bars his approch; no sackcloth might come within the Court: Loe, that which is welcomest in the court of heauen, is here excluded from the presence of this
B earthly royaltie: A broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise.

Neither did it a little adde to the sorrow of Mordecai, to here the bitter insultations of his former monitors: Did we not aduise thee better? Did wee not fore-admonish thee of thy danger? See now the issue of thine obstinacie: now see, what it is for thine earthen pitcher to knocke with brasse? now, where is the man that would needs contest with Haman? hast thou not now brought thy matters to a faire passe? Thy stomacke had long owed thee a spight, and now it hath paid thee; who can pittie thy wilfulnesse? since thou wouldest needs deride our counsell, we will take leaue to laugh at thy sackcloth. Nothing but scornes and griefes, and terrors present themselues to miserable Mordecai. All the externall buffets of aduersaries were sleight to the wounds that hee hath made, and felt in his owne heart.

The perpetuall intelligences that were closely held betwixt Esther and Mordecai, could not suffer his publique sorrow to be long concealed from her; The newes of his sackcloth afflicts her ere she can suspect the cause; her crowne doth but clog her head, whiles she heares of his ashes; True friendship transformes
C vs into the condition of those we loue; and if it cannot raise them to our cheerefulnesse, drawes vs downe to their deiection: Faine would shee vncase her foster-father of these mournfull weeds; and change his sackcloth for tissue; that yet, at least, his cloathes might not hinder his accesse to her presence, for the free opening of his griefes.

It is but a sleight sorrow that abides to take in outward comforts; Mordecai refuses that kinde offer; and would haue Esther see that his affliction was such, as that he might well resolue to put off his sackcloth and his skin at once; that he must mourne to death rather then see her face to liue.

The good Queene is astonisht with this constant humiliation of so deare a friend; and now she sends Hatach, a trustie (though a Pagan) attendant, to inquire into the occasion of this so irremediable heauinesse: It should seeme Esther inquired not greatly into matters of state; that which perplexed all Shushan, was not yet knowne to her; her followers, not knowing her to be a Ieweesse, conceiued not how the newes might concerne her, and therefore had
D forborne the relation: Mordecai first informes her, by her messenger, of the decree that was gone out against all her nation, of the day wherein they must all prepare to bleed, of the summe which Haman had profered for their heads, and deliuers the copie of that bloudie Edict; charging her, now, if euer, to bestirre her selfe; and to improue all her loue, all her power with King Ahasuerus, in a speedie and humble supplication for the sauing of the life (not of himselfe so much, as) of her people.

It was tydings able to confound a weake heart; and hers, so much the more,

as ſhe could apprehend nothing but impoſſibilitie of redreſſe: ſhe needs but to A put Mordecai in mind of that, which all the Kings ſeruants and ſubiects knew well enough, that the Perſian law made it no leſſe then death for whomſoeuer, man, or woman, that ſhould preſſe into the inner court of the King, vncalled.
Nothing but the royall ſcepter extented, could keepe that preſumptuous offender from the graue. For her, thirtie dayes were now paſſed ſince ſhe was called in to the King; an intermiſſion, that might bee iuſtly ſuſpicious; Whether the heate of his firſt affection were thus ſoone (of it ſelfe) allayed towards her; or whether ſome ſuggeſtions of a ſecret enemie (perhaps his Agagite) may haue ſet him off; or whether ſome more pleaſing obiect may haue laid hold on his eyes; what euer it might bee, this abſence could not but argue ſome ſtrangeneſſe, and this ſtrangeneſſe muſt needs imploy a danger in her bold intruſion:
She could bewaile therefore, ſhe could not hope to remedie this diſmall day of her people. This anſwer in the eares of Mordecai ſounded truth, but weakeneſſe; B neither can he take vp with ſo feeble a rerurne; Theſe occaſions require other ſpirits, other reſolutions, which muſt be quickened by a more ſtirring replie:
Thinke not with thy ſelfe that thou ſhalt eſcape in the Kings houſe, more then all the Iewes. For if thou altogether holdeſt thy peace at this time, then ſhall there inlarge-ment, and deliuerance ariſe to the Iewes from another place, but thou and thy fathers houſe ſhall be deſtroyed. And who knoweth whether thou art come to the Kingdome for ſuch a time as this.

The expectation of death had not quailed the ſtrong heart of faithfull Mordecai; euen, whiles he mournes, his zeale droupes not; there could haue beene no life in that breſt, which this meſſage could not haue rouzed.

What then? is it death that thou feareſt in this attempt of thy ſupplication;
what other then death awaits the in thee neglect of it? there is but this difference, ſue, and thou maiſt die, ſue not, and thou muſt die: what bloud haſt thou but Iewiſh? and if theſe vnalterable Edicts exempt no liuing ſoule, what ſhall become of thine? and canſt thou be ſo vainely timerous, as to die for feare of death? to preferre certaintie of danger, before a poſſibilitie of hopes? Away with this weake cowardiſe vnworthy of an Iſraelite, vnworthy of a Queene:
But if faint-heartedneſſe or priuate reſpects ſhall ſeale vp thy lips, or with- C hold thine hand from the aide of thy people; if thou canſt ſo farre neglect Gods Church, know thou that God will not neglect it; it ſhall not be in the power of Tyrants to root out his choſen ſeed; that holy one of Iſrael ſhall rather worke miracles from heauen, then his inheritance ſhall periſh vpon earth? and how iuſt ſhall it then be for that iealous God, to take vengeance vpon thee, and thy fathers houſe for this cold vnhelpfulneſſe to his diſtreſſed Church? Suffer me therefore to adiure thee by all that tenderneſſe of loue, wherewith I haue trained vp thine orphane infancie; by all thoſe deare and thankfull reſpects which thou haſt vowed to me againe; by the Name of the God of Iſrael whom we ſerue, that thou awaken and ſtirre vp thine holy courage, and dare to aduenture thy life, for the ſauing of many; It hath pleaſed the Almightie to raiſe thee vp to that height of honor, which our progenitors could little expect; why ſhouldſt thou be wanting to him, that hath beene ſo bountifull to thee? yea, why ſhould I not thinke that God hath put this verie act into the intendement of D thine exaltation? hauing on purpoſe thus ſeaſonably hoyſed thee vp to the throne, that thou maiſt reſcue his poore Church from an vtter ruine.

Oh the admirable faith of Mordecai, that ſhines thorow all theſe cloudes, and in the thickeſt of theſe fogges, deſcries a chearefull glimpſe of deliuerance; Hee ſaw the day of their common deſtruction enacted, he knew the Perſian decrees to bee vnalterable; but, withall, hee knew there was a Meſſias to come; he was ſo well acquainted with Gods couenanted aſſurances to his Church, that he can thorow the midſt of thoſe bloudie reſolutions foreſee indemnitie

A indemnitie to Iſrael; rather truſting the promiſes of God, then the threats of men. This is the victorie that ouercomes all the feares, and furie of the world, euen our faith.

It is quarrell enough againſt any perſon, or communitie not to haue beene aidfull to the diſtreſſes of Gods people. Not to ward the blow, if we may, is conſtrued for little better then ſtriking. Till we haue tried our vtmoſt, wee know not whether we haue done that we came for.

Mordecai hath ſaid enough; Theſe words haue ſo put a new life into Eſther, that ſhe is reſolute to hazard the old; Goe gather together all the Iewes that are preſent in Shuſhan, and faſt ye for me, and neither eate nor drink three dayes, night or day; I alſo and my maidens will faſt likewiſe, and ſo will I go in vnto the King, (which is not according to the law) and if I periſh, I periſh. Heroicall thoughts doe well befit great actions. Life can neuer be better aduentured, then where it ſhall bee gaine to leeſe it.

There can be no law againſt the humble deprecation of euils; where the ne-
B ceſſitie of Gods Church calls to vs, no danger ſhould with-hold vs from all honeſt meanes of reliefe. Deepe humiliations muſt make way for the ſucceſſe of great enterpriſes, we are moſt capable of mercie, when we are throughly emptie: A ſhort hunger doth but whet the appetite, but ſo long an abſtinence meets death halfe way, to preuent it; Well may they inioyne ſharpe penances vnto others, who practiſe it vpon themſelues.

It was the face of Eſther that muſt hope to win Ahaſuerus, yet that ſhall bee macerated with faſting, that ſhe may preuaile. A carnall heart would haue pampered the fleſh, that it might allure thoſe wanton eyes; ſhe pines it, that ſhe may pleaſe.

God, and not ſhe, muſt worke the heart of the King; Faith teaches her ra-

ESTHER ſuing to AHASVERVS.

THE Iewes are eaſily intreated to faſt, who had receiued in themſelues the ſentence of death; what pleaſure could they take in meat, that know what day they muſt eate their laſt? The three dayes of abſtinence are expired; now Eſter changes her ſpirits, no leſſe then her clothes; Who that ſees that face, & that habit, can ſay ſhee had mourned, ſhe had faſted? Neuer did her royall apparell become her ſo well. That God before Eſther 5.
D whom ſhe had humbled her ſelfe, made her ſo much more beautifull, as ſhee had beene more deiected; And now, with a winning confidence, ſhee walkes into the inner court of the King, and puts her ſelfe into that forbidden preſence: as if ſhe ſaid; Here I am with my life in my hand, if it pleaſe the King to take it, it is readie for him; Vaſhti, my predeceſſor, forfaited her place for not comming when ſhe was called; Eſther ſhall now hazard the forfaiture of her life, for comming when ſhe is not called: It is neceſſitie, not diſobedience that hath put me vpon this bold approch; according to thy conſtruction, O King, I doe either liue or die, either ſhall be welcome. The inexpectedneſſe of pleaſing obiects makes them many times the more acceptable: The beautifull countenance, the gracefull demeanour, and goodly preſence of Eſter, haue nooner taken the eyes, then they haue rauiſhed the heart of King Ahaſuerus: Loue hath ſoone A baniſhed all dreadfulneſſe; And the King held out to Eſther the golden ſcepter that was in his hand: Moderate intermiſſion is ſo farre from cooling the affection, that it inflames it: had Eſther beene ſeene euerie day, perhaps that ſatietie had abated of the height of her welcome; now, three and thirtie dayes retiredneſſe hath indeared her more to the ſurfeted eyes of Ahaſuerus.

Had not the golden Scepter beene held out, where had Queene Eſther beene? The Perſian Kings affected a ſterne awfulneſſe to their ſubiects; It was death to ſolicit them, vncalled; How ſafe, how eaſie, how happie a thing it is to haue to doe with the King of heauen, who is ſo pleaſed with our acceſſe, that hee ſolicits ſutors; who, as hee is vnweariable with our requeſts, ſo is infinit in his beneficences!

How gladly doth Eſther touch the top of that Scepter, by which ſhee holds her life? and now, whiles ſhe thinkes it well that ſhe may liue, ſhe receiues beſides pardon, fauour: What wilt thou Queene Eſther, and what is thy requeſt? it ſhall be giuen thee, euen to the halfe of the Kingdome. Commonly, when wee feare moſt, we ſpeed beſt; God then moſt of all magnifies his bountie to vs, when we haue moſt afflicted our ſelues. Ouer-confident expectations are ſeldome but diſappointed; whiles humble ſuſpitions goe laughing away: It was the benefit and ſafetie of but one peece of the Kingdome that Eſther comes to ſue for, and behold Ahaſuerus offers her the free power of the halfe: Hee that gaue B Haman, at the firſt word, the liues of all his Iewiſh ſubiects, is readie to giue Eſther halfe his Kingdome, ere ſhe aske: Now ſhe is no leſſe amazed at the louing munificence of Ahaſuerus, then ſhe was before afraid of his auſteritie; The Kings heart is in the hand of the Lord, as the riuers of water; hee turneth it whitherſoeuer he will.

It is not good to ſwollow fauours too greedily, leſt they either choke vs in the paſſage, or proue hard of digeſtion. The wiſe Queene, howeuer ſhe might ſeeme to haue a faire opportunitie offered to her ſuit, finds it not good to apprehend it too ſuddenly; as deſiring by this ſmall dilation, to prepare the eare and heart of the King for ſo important a requeſt.

Now, all her petition ends in a banquet; If it ſeeme good vnto the King, let the King and Haman come this day vnto the banquet, that I haue prepared for him. C
It is an eaſie fauour to receiue a ſmall courteſie, where we offer to giue great. Haman is called, the King comes to Eſthers table; and now highly pleaſed with his entertainment, he himſelfe ſolicites her to propound that ſuit, for which her modeſtie would, but durſt not ſolicit him: Baſhfulneſſe ſhall leeſe nothing at the hand of wel-gouerned greatneſſe.

Yet ſtill Eſthers ſuit ſtickes in her teeth, and dares not come forth without a further preface of time, and expectation; Another banquet muſt paſſe, ere this reckoning can be giuen in. Other ſuitors wait long for the deliuerie of their petition; longer for the receit of their anſwer: Here the King is faine to wait for his ſuit: Whether Eſthers heart would not yet ſerue her to conteſt with ſo ſtrong an aduerſarie, as Haman, without further recollection; or whether ſhe deſired to get better hold of the King, by indearing him with ſo pleaſing entertainments; or whether ſhe would thus ripen her hopes, by working in the mind of King Ahaſuerus a fore-conceit of the greatneſſe, and difficultie of that ſuit, D which was ſo loath to come forth; or, whether ſhe meant thus to giue ſcope to the pride, and malice of Haman, for his more certaine ruine: Howſoeuer it were, to morrow is a new day, ſet for Eſthers ſecond banquet, and third petition.

The King is not inuited without Haman; Fauours are ſometimes done to men, with a purpoſe of diſpleaſure; Doubtleſſe Haman taſteth of the ſame cates with his maſter; neither could he in the forehead of Eſther reade any other characters,

A characters, then of reſpect, and kind applauſe, yet had ſhe then, in her hopes, deſigned him to a iuſt reuenge. Little doe we know, by outward cariages, in what termes we ſtand with either God or men.

Euerie little winde raiſeth vp a bubble; How is Haman now exalted in himſelfe with the ſingular graces of Queene Eſther; and begins to value himſelfe ſo much more, as he ſees himſelfe higher in the rate of others opinion.

Onely ſurly, and ſullen Mordecai is an allay to his happineſſe; No Edict of death can bow the knees of that ſtout Iew: yea the notice of that bloudie cruelties of this Agagite, hath ſtiffned them ſo much the more: Before, he lookt at Haman as an Amalekite, now, as a perſecutor. Diſdaine and anger looke out at thoſe eyes; and bid that proud enemie doe his worſt. No doubt, Mordecai had beene liſtening after the ſpeed of Queene Eſther; how ſhe came in to the King, how ſhe was welcom'd with the golden ſcepter, and with the more precious words of Ahaſuerus; how ſhe had intertained the King, how ſhe pleaſed; the newes had quit his ſackcloth, and raiſed his courage to a more ſcornefull

Haman comes home, I know not whether more full of pride, or of rage; calls an inward counſell of his choiſe friends, together with his wife; makes a glorious report of all his wealth, magnificence, height of fauour, both with the King and Queene; and at laſt, after all his ſun-ſhine, ſets in this cloudie epilogue, Yet all this auaileth me nothing, ſo long as I ſee Mordecai the Iew ſitting at the Kings gate. It is ſeldome ſeene that God allowes euen to the greateſt dearelings of the world, a perfect contentment; ſomething they muſt haue to complaine of, that ſhall giue an vnſauorie verdure to their ſweeteſt morſels; and make their verie felicitie, miſerable.

The wit of women hath wont to bee noted for more ſudden and more ſharpe. Zereſh the wife of Haman ſets on foot that motion of ſpeedie reuenge, which is applauded by the reſt. Let a gallowes be made of fiftie cubits high, and to morrow, ſpeake thou to the King, that Mordecai may be hanged thereon; then goe thou in merily with the King, vnto the banquet. I doe not heare them ſay; Be patient a while, thouh aſt alreadie ſet Mordecai his laſt day; the moneth Adar will not be long in comming; the determination of his death hath made him de-C ſperate, let him in the meane time eate his owne heart in enuie at thy greatneſſe; but they reather aduiſe of a quicke diſpatch. Malice is a thing full of impacience, and hates delay of execution, next vnto mercie. Whiles any grudge lies at the heart, it cannot bee freely cheerefull. Forced ſmiles are but the hypocriſie of mirth. How happie were it for vs, if we could be ſo zealouſly carefull to remoue the hindrances of our true ſpirituall ioy, thoſe ſtubborne corruptions, that will not ſtoope to the D power of grace.

Mordecai honoured by Haman.

THe wit of Zeresh had like to haue gone beyond the wit of Esther; had not the working prouidence of the Almightie contriued these euents, beyond all hopes, all conceits, Mordecai had beene dispatched, ere Esthers second banquet. To morrow was the day pitched for both their designes; had not the streame beene inexpectedly turned, in vaine had the Queene blamed her delayes; Mordecaies breakefast had preuented Esthers dinner: for certainely, he that had giuen to Haman so many thousand liues, would neuer haue made daintie, vpon the same suit, to anticipate one of those, whom he had condemned to the slaughter: But, God meant better things to his Church, and fetches about all his holy purposes, after a wonderfull fashion, in the verie instant of oportunitie: He that keepeth Israel, and neither slumbreth, nor sleepeth, causeth sleepe to depart that night from him that had decreed to root out Israel. Great Ahasuerus, that commanded an hundred and seuen and twentie Prouinces, cannot command an houres sleepe. Pouertie is rather blessed with the freedome of rest, then wealth, and power: Cares and surfet with-hold that from the great, which presseth vpon the spare diet, and labour of the meanest. Nothing is more tedious then an eager pursuit of denied sleepe: which (like to a shadow) flyes away so much faster, as it is more followed: Experience tels vs, that this benefit is best solicited by neglect; and soonest found when we haue forgotten to seeke it. B

Whether to deceiue the time, or to bestow it well; Ahasuerus shall spend his restlesse houres in the Chronicles of his time. Nothing is more requisite for Princes, then to looke backe vpon their owne actions, and euents, and those of their predecessors; The examination of fore-past actions makes them wise, of euents, thankfull, and cautelous. C

Amongst those voluminous registers of Acts and Monuments, which so many scores of Prouinces must needs yeeld, the book shall open vpon Mordecais discouerie of the late treason of the two Eunuches: the reader is turned thither, by an insensible sway of Prouidence: Our most arbitrarie or casuall actions are ouer-ruled by a hand in heauen.

The King now feeles afresh the danger of that conspiracie; and (as great spirits a bide not to smother or burie good offices) inquires into the recompence of so loyall a seruice, What honour and dignitie hath beene done to Mordecai for this? Surely Mordecai did but his dutie; he had hainously sinned, if he had not reuealed this wicked treacherie; yet Ahasuerus takes thought for his remuneration: How much more carefull art thou, O God of all mercies, to reward the weake obedience of thine (at the best) vnprofitable seruants? D

That which was intended to procure rest, sets it off; King Ahasuerus is vnquiet in himselfe, to thinke that so great a merit should lye, but so long, neglected; neither can he find any peace in himselfe, till he haue giuen order for a speedie retribution: hearing therefore by his seruants, that Haman was below in the Court, he sends for him vp, to consult with him, What should be done to the man whom the King delighteth to honour: O maruellous concurrence of circumstances,

A circumſtances, drawne together by the infinit wiſedome, and power of the Almightie: Who but Haman ſhould be the man? And when ſhould Haman bee called to aduiſe of Mordecaies honour, but in the verie inſtant, when he came to ſue for Mordecaies hanging? Had Ahaſuerus but ſlept that night, Mordecai had beene that morning aduanced fiftie cubits higher then the earth, ere the King could haue remembred to whom he was beholden.

What ſhall we ſay then to reconcile theſe croſſe-paſſions in Ahaſuerus? Before he ſigned that decree of killing all the Iewes, he could not but know that a Iew had ſaued his life; and now, after that he hath enacted the ſlaughter of all Iewes, as rebels, he is giuing order to honour a Iew, as his preſeruer. It were ſtrange if great perſons in the multitude of their diſtractions ſhould not let fall ſome incongruities.

Yet, who can but thinke that King Ahaſuerus meant vpon ſome ſecond thoughts to make amends to Mordecai? neither can he chooſe but put theſe two together; The Iewes are appointed to death, at the ſuit of Haman; This Mordecai
B is a Iew; how then can I doe more grace to him, that hath ſaued my life, then to command him to be honoured by that man who would ſpill his?

When Haman heard himſelfe called vp to the bed-chamber of his maſter, he thinkes himſelfe too happie in ſo early an oportunitie of preſenting his ſuit; but yet more in the pleaſing queſtion of Ahaſuerus; wherein he could not but imagine that fauour forced it ſelfe vpon him with ſtrange importunitie; For how could he conceiue that any intention of more then ordinarie honour could fall beſides himſelfe? Selfe-loue, like to a good ſtomach, drawes to it ſelfe what nuriſhment it likes, and caſts off that which offends it. Haman will bee ſure to be no niggard in aduiſing thoſe ceremonies of honour, which he thinkes meant to his owne perſon. Could he haue once dreamed that this grace had beene purpoſed to any vnder heauen, beſides himſelfe, he had not beene ſo lauiſh in counſelling, ſo pompous a ſhew of exceſſiue magnificence. Now the Kings owne royall apparell, and his owne Steed is not ſufficient, except the royall Crowne alſo make vp the glorie of him, who ſhall thus triumph in the Kings fauour. Yet all this were nothing in baſe hands: The actor ſhall be the
C beſt part of this great Pageant. Let this apparell, and this horſe, be deliuered to one of the Kings moſt noble Princes, that they may aray the man withall, whom the King delighteth to honour, and bring him an horſe-backe thorow the ſtreets of the Citie, and proclaime before him, thus ſhall it be done to the man whom the King delighteth to honour. Honour is more in him that giues, then him that receiues it: To be honoured by the vnworthy is little better then diſgrace; No meaner perſon will ſerue to attend this Agagite, in his ſuppoſed greatneſſe, then one of the nobleſt Princes. The ambition is too high flowne that ſeekes glorie in the ſeruilitie of equals.

The place adds much to the act; There is ſmall heart in a concealed honour; It is nothing vnleſſe the ſtreets of the cittie Shuſhan be witneſſes of this pompe, and ring with that gracious acclamation.

The vaine hearts of proud men can eaſily deuiſe thoſe meanes, whereby they may beſt ſet out themſelues. Oh that we would equally affect the meanes of true and immortall glorie. The heart of man is neuer ſo cold within him, as
D when from the height of the expectation of good, it falles into a ſudden ſenſe of euill: So did this Agagite. Then the King ſaid to Haman, make haſte, and take the apparell, and the horſe, as thou haſt ſaid, and doe euen ſo to Mordecai the Iew, that ſitteth at the Kings gate; Let nothing faile of all that thou haſt ſaid. How was Haman thunder-ſtricken with this killing word? Do thou ſo to Mordecai? I dare ſay all the honors that Ahaſuerus had heaped vpon Haman, cannot counteruaile this one vexation: Doubtleſſe, at firſt, he diſtruſts his eare, and then muſes whether the King be in earneſt; at laſt, when he heares the charge ſo ſeriouſly doubled, and finds himselfe forced to beleeue it, he beginnes to thinke, What meanes A this vnconceiueable alteration? Is there no man in all the Court of Persia to be pickt out for extraordinarie honour, but Mordecai? Is there no man to bee pickt out for the performance of this honour to him, but Haman? haue I but one proud enemie in all the world, and am I singled out to grace him? Did it gall me to the heart, and make all my happinesse tedious to me, to see that this Iew would not bow to me, and must I now bow to him? That which hee would rather die, and forfait the life of all his nation, then doe to me, notwithstanding the Kings commands; shall I be forced by the Kings command to doe vnto him? Yea did he refuse to giue but a cap and a knee to my greatnesse, and must I lacquay so base a fellow thorow the streets, must I be his herald to proclaime his honour thorow all Shushan? Why doe I not let the King know the insolent affronts that he hath offered me? Why doe I not signifie to my Soue-raigne, that my errand now was for another kinde of aduancement to Mordecai? B

If I obtaine not my desired reuenge, yet at least, I shall preuaile so farre, as to exempt my selfe from this officious attendance vpon so vnequall an enemie.
And yet, that motion cannot be now safe; I see the Kings heart is (vpon what ground soeuer) bent vpon this action; should I flye off neuer so little (after my word so directly passed) perhaps my coldnesse, or opposition might bee construed as some way ward contestation with my master: Especially, since the seruice that Mordecai hath done to the King, is of an higher nature, then the despight which he hath done to me. I will, I must giue way for the time; mine humble yeeldance, (when all the carriage of this businesse shall be vnderstood) shall (I doubt not) make way for mine intended reuenge: Mordecai, I will honour thee now, that by these steps I may ere long raise thee many cubits higher.
I will obey the command of my Soueraigne in obseruing thee, that he may reward the merit of my loyaltie, in thine execution,

Thus resolued, Haman goes forth with a face and heart full of distraction, full of confusion; and addresses himselfe to the attyring, to the attending of his old aduersarie, and new master, Mordecai; What lookes doe we now thinke were cast vpon each other, at their first greeting? their eyes had not forgotten their old language; Certainly, When Mordecai saw Haman come into the roome C where hee was, he could not but thinke; This man hath long thirsted for my bloud, and now he comes to fetch it; I shall not liue to see the successe of Esther, or the fatall day of my nation: It was knowne that morning in the Court, what a loftie gibbet Haman had prouided for Mordecai; and why might it not haue come to Mordecaies eare? What could he therefore now imagine other, then that he was called out to that execution?? But, when he saw the royall robe that Haman brought to him; he thinkes, is it not enough for this man to kill me, but he must mocke me too, What an addition is this to the former cruelrie? thus to insult, and play vpon my last distresse? But, when he yet saw the royall crowne readie to be set on his head, and the Kings owne horse richly furnished, at his gate, and found himselfe raised by Princely hands, into that royall seat, he thinkes; what may all this meane? Is it the purpose of mine aduersarie that I shall die in state? Would he haue me hangd in triumph? At last, when he sees D such a traine of Persian Peeres attending him, with a graue reuerence; and heares Haman proclaime before him, Thus shall it be done to the man whom the King delighteth to honour; finding this pompe to be serious, and well meant, hee imagines (in all likelihood) that this inexpected change proceeds from the suit of his Esther; now he begins to lift vp his head, and to hope well of himselfe, and his people, and could not but say within himselfe, that he had not fasted for nothing. O the wonderous alteration that one morning hath made in the court of Persia; he that was yesternight despised by Hamans footemen, is now waited on by Haman, and all his fellow-Princes; he that yester-night had the homage

A homage of all knees but one, and was readie to burſt for the lacke of that, now doth obeyſance to that one, by whom he was wilfully neglected; It was not Ahaſuerus that wrought this ſtrange mutation, it was the ouer-ruling power of the Almightie, whoſe immediate hand would thus preuent Eſthers ſuit, that he might challenge all the thanke to himſelfe. Whiles Princes haue their owne wills, they muſt doe his; and ſhall either exalt, or depreſſe according to diuine appointment.

I ſhould commend Hamans obedience in his humble condiſcent to ſo vnpleaſing, and harſh a command of his maſter, Were it not, that either he durſt doe no other, or that he thus ſtoopt for an aduantage. It is a thankeleſſe reſpect that is either forced, or for ends: True ſubiection is free and abſolute; out of the conſcience of dutie, not out of feares, or hopes.

All Shuſhan is in an amaze at this ſudden glorie of Mordecai, and ſtudies how to reconcile this day with the thirteenth of Adar; Mordecai had reaſon to hope well; It could not ſtand with the honour of the King, to kill him whom hee
B ſaw cauſe to aduance; neither could this be any other, then the beginning of a durable promotion; otherwiſe, what recompence had an houres riding beene to ſo great a ſeruice?

On the other ſide, Haman droupes, and hath changed paſſions with Mordecai; Neither was that Iew euer more deepely afflicted with the decree of his owne death, then this Agagite was with that Iewes honour. How heauie doth it lie at Hamans heart, that no tongue, but his, might ſerue to proclaime Mordecai happie: Euen the greateſt mignons of the world muſt haue their turnes of ſorrow.

With a couered head, and a deiected countenance, doth he haſten home, and longs to impart his griefe, where he had receiued his aduice: It was but cold comfort that he finds from his wife Zeriſh, and his friends. If Mordecai bee of the ſeed of the Iewes, before whom thou haſt begunne to fall, thou ſhalt not preuaile againſt him, but ſhalt ſurely fall before him: Out of the mouth of Pagans, O God, haſt thou ordained ſtrength, that thou maiſt ſtill the enemie, and the auenger. What credit hath thy great name won with theſe barbarous nations, that they
C can out of all experience make maximes of thine vndoubted protection of thy people, and the certaine ruine of their aduerſaries? Men find no difference in themſelues; the face of a Iew lookes ſo like other mens, that Eſther and Mordecai were not (of long) taken for what they were: He that made them, makes the diſtinction betwixt them; ſo as a Iew may fall before a Perſian, and get vp and preuaile; but if a Perſian (or whoſoeuer of the Gentiles) beginne to fall before a Iew, he can neither ſtay, nor riſe: There is an inuiſible hand of omnipotencie that ſtrikes in for his owne, and confounds their oppoſites. O God, neither is thine hand ſhortned, nor thy bowels ſtraitned in thee; thou art ſtill and euer thy ſelfe; If wee be thy true ſpirituall Iſrael, neither earth nor hell ſhall preuaile againſt vs; we ſhall either ſtand ſure, or ſurely riſe, whiles our ene-

Esther 7.8. HAMANS day is now come; That vengeance which hath hitherto slept, is now awake, and rouzeth vp it selfe to a iust execution; That heauie morning was but the preface to his last sorrow, and the sad presage of friends is verified in the speaking; While the word was in their mouthes, the messengers were at the doore to fetch Haman to his funerall-banquet. B

Eccles. 9.12. How little doe we know what is towards vs? As the fishes that are taken in an euill net, and as the birds that are caught in the snare, so are the sonnes of men snared in an euill time, when it falleth suddenly vpon them.

It was (as Haman conceiued) the onely priuiledge of his deareneſſe, and the comfort of his present heauineſſe, that hee onely was called with the King, to Esthers banquet, when this onely was meant for his bane: The face of this inuitation was faire, and promiseth much; and now the ingenuous man begins to set good constructions vpon all euents. Surely (thinkes he) the King was tyed in his honour to giue some publique gratification to Mordecai; so good an office could deserue no lesse, then an houres glorie; But little doth my master know what termes there are betwixt me, and Mordecai; had he fully vnderstood the insolencies of this Iew, and should notwithstanding haue inioyned mee to honour him, I might haue had iust cause to complaine of disgrace, and disparagement; but now, since all this businesse hath beene carried in ignorance, and casualtie, why doe I wrong my selfe in being too much affected with that which was not ill meant? Had either the King, or Queene, abated ought of their fauour to me, I might haue dined at home; now this renued inuitation argues me to stand right in the grace of both: And why may not I hope, this day, to meet with a good occasion of my desired reuenge? How iust will it seeme to the King, that the same man whom he hath publikely rewarded for his loyaltie, should now be publikely punished for his disobedience? C

With such like thoughts Haman cheares vp himselfe; and addresseth himselfe to the royall banquet, with a countenance that would faine seeme to forget his mornings taske: Esther workes her face to an vnwilling smile vpon that hateful guest; and the king (as not inguiltie of any dignitie that he hath put vpon his fauorite) frames himselfe to as much cheerefulneſſe, as his want of rest would permit. The table is royally furnished with all delicate confections, with all pleasing liquors; King Ahasuerus so eates, as one that both knew he was, and meant to make himselfe welcome: Haman so poures in, as one that meant to drowne his cares; And now, in this fulneſſe of cheere, The King hungers for that long-delayed suit of Queene Esther; Thrice, hath he graciously call'd for it; and (as a man constant to his owne fauours) thrice hath he, in the same words vowed the performance of it, though to the halfe of his Kingdome: It falls out oftentimes, that when large promises fall suddenly from great persons, they abate by leisure; and shrinke vpon cold thoughts; here King Ahasuerus is not more liberall in his offer, then firme in his resolutions; as if his first word had beene, like his law, vnalterable. I am ashamed to misse that stedfastneſſe in Christians, which I finde in a Pagan. It was a great word that hee D

A had ſayd, yet he cares it not, as ouer-lauiſhly ſpoken: but doubles, and trebbles it with hartie aſſurances of a reall proſecution; whiles thoſe tongues which profeſſe the name of the true God, ſay, and vnſay at pleaſure; recanting their good purpoſes, contradicting their owne iuſt ingagements vpon no cauſe, but their owne changeableneſſe.

It is not for Queene Eſter to driue off any longer, the ſame wiſedome that taught her to deferre her ſuit, now teaches her to propound it; A well choſen ſeaſon is the greateſt aduantage of any action; which as it is ſeldome found in haſt, ſo is too often loſt in delay: Now therefore with an humble and graceſull obeyſance, and with a countenance full of modeſt feare, and ſad grauity, ſhe ſo deliueres her petition, that the King might ſee, it was neceſſitie that both forc'd it vpon her, & wrung it from her. If I haue found fauour in thy ſight O King, & if pleaſe the King, let my life be giuen me at my petition, and my people at my requeſt: Expectation is either a friend or an enemy, according to the occaſion: Ahaſuerus lookt for ſome high and difficult boone; now that he heares his Queene begge
B for her life, it could not be, but that the ſurpluſage of his loue to her muſt bee turned into fury againſt her aduerſary; and his zeale muſt bee ſo much more to her, as her ſuit was more meeke and humble. For we are ſould, I and my people, to be deſtroyed, to be ſlayne, and to periſh; but if we had beene ſould for bondmen, and bondwomen, I had held my tongue, although the enemie could not counteruaile the Kings damage. Crafty men are ſometimes choaked with their owne plots. It was the proffer of ten thouſand talents wherewith Haman hoped both to purchaſe his intended reuenge, and the reputation of a worthy patriot; that ſumme is now layd in his diſh, for a iuſt argument of malicious corruption; for, well might Eſther pleade; If wee Iewes deſerued death, what needed our ſlaughter to be bought ought? and if wee deſerued it not, what horrible cruelty was it to ſet a price vpon innocent blood? It is not any offence of ours, it is only the deſpight of an enemy that hath wrought our deſtruction.

Beſides, now it appeares the King was abuſed by miſ-information; the aduerſary ſuggeſted that the life of the Iewes could not ſtand with the Kings profit; whereas their very bondage ſhould be more damage to the ſtate, then all Hamans worth could counteruaile. Truth may be ſmothered, but it cannot dye;
C it may bee diſguiſed, but it will be knowne; it may be ſuppreſſed, but it will triumph.

But what ſhall we ſay to ſo harſh an aggrauation? Could Eſther haue beene ſilent in a caſe of decreed bondage; who is now ſo vehement in a caſe of death? Certainely, to a generous nature, death is farre more eaſie then bondage; why would ſhe haue endured the greater, and yet ſo abhorres the leſſe? Was it for that the Iewes were already too well inured to captiuity; and thoſe euils are more tollerable wherewith we are acquainted: Or, was it, for that there may be hopes in bondage, none in death? Surely, either of them were lamentable, and ſuch as might deſerue her humbleſt deprecation.

The Queene was going on, to haue ſayd, But, alas, nothing will ſatisfie our
D bloody enemie, ſaue the vtter extirpation of mee, and my nation; when the impatient rage of the King interrupts her ſentence in the midſt, & (as if hee had heard too much already, and could too eaſily ſupply the reſidue of her complaint) ſnatches the word out of her mouth, with a furious demaund; Who is he, & where is he that durſt preſume in his heart to do ſo? It was the intereſt of Queene Eſthers perſon that raiſed this ſtorme in Ahaſuerus; ſet that aſide, how quietly, how merily was the determined maſſacre of the Iewes formerly digeſted? Actions haue not the ſame face when we looke vpon them with contrary affections.

Now Qeene Eſther muſters vp her inward forces, and with an vndaunted courage, fixing her angry eyes vpon that hatred Agagite, ſhee ſaies, The aduerſarie, and enemy is this wicked Haman. The word was loath to come forth, but it ſtrikes home at the laſt. Neuer till now did Haman here his true title; Before ſome had ſtiled him, noble; others great; ſome, magnificent, and ſome perhaps, vertuous; onely Eſther giues him his owne, wicked Haman; Ill-deſeruing greatneſſe doth in vaine promiſe to it ſelfe a perpetuitie of applauſe: If our waies be foule, the time ſhall come, when after all vaine flattery, after all our momentaine glory, our ſinnes ſhall be ript vp; and our iniquities laid before vs to our vtter confuſſion. With what conſternation did Haman now ſtand? How doe wee thinke hee lookt to heare himſelfe thus enſtyled, thus accuſed, yea, thus condemned? Certainely, death was in his face, and horror in euery of his yonts; no ſenſe, no limme knowes his office: Faine would he ſpeake, but his tongue falters and his lips tremble; faine would hee make apologies vpon his knees, but his heart failes him; and tells him the euidence is too great, and the offenceaboue all pardon: Onely guiltineſſe, and feare looke through his eyes vpon the enraged countenance of his maſter; which now bodes nothing to him but reuenge, and death. A

In what a paſſionate diſtemper doth this banquet ſhut vp? King Ahaſuerus flyes from the table, as if he had beene hurried away with a tempeſt. His wrath is too great to come forth at his mouth; onely his eyes tels Haman that he hates to ſee him, and vowes to ſee his diſpatch: For ſolitarineſſe, and not for pleaſure, doth he now walke into his garden; and thinkes with himſelfe; What a monſter haue I fauoured? Is it poſſible that ſo much cruelty and preſuption ſhould harbour in a breſt that I thought ingenuous? Could I be ſo be witched as paſſe ſo bloody a decree? Is my credulity thus abuſed by the trecherous ſubtilty of a miſcreant whom I truſted? I confeſſe it was my weake raſhneſſe to yeeld vnto ſo prodigious a motion, but it was the villany of this Agagite, to circumuent me by falſe ſuggeſtions; Hee ſhall pay for my error; the world ſhall ſee, that as I exceeded in grace, ſo I will not come ſhort in iuſtice. Haman, thy guilty blood ſhall expiate that innocent blood, which thy malice might haue ſhed. B

In the meane time, Haman, ſo ſoone as euer he could recouer the qualme of his aſtoniſhment, finding himſelfe left alone with Queene Eſther, looſeth no time, ſpareth no breath to mitigate her anger, which had made way to his deſtruction. Doubtleſſe, with many vowes, and teares, and deierations, he labours to cleare his intentions to her perſon; bewailing his danger, imploring her mercy, confeſſing the vniuſt extent of his malice, profering indeauours of ſatisfaction: Wretched man that I am, I am condemned before I ſpeake and when I haue ſpoken, I am condemned: Vpon thy ſentence, O Queene, I ſee death awaits for me, in vaine ſhall I ſeeke to auoyd it; It is thy will that I ſhould periſh; but let that little breath I haue lefte, acquit me ſo farre with thee, as to cal heauen and earth to record, that in regard of thee, I dye innocent: It is true that mine impetuous malice miſcarried me againſt the nation of the Iewes, for the ſake of one ſtubborne offender; but did I know there was the leaſt drop of Iſraelitiſh blood in thy ſacred perſon? could I ſuſpect that Mordecai, or that people, did ought concerne thee? Let not one death be enough for me if I would euer haue entertained any thought of euill againſt nation, or man, that ſhould haue coſt but a frowne from thee: All the court of Perſia can ſufficiently witneſſe how I haue magnified and adored thee, euer ſince the royall crowne was ſet on thy head; neither did I euer faile to doe thee all good offices vnto that my Soueraigne Maiſter, whom thou haſt now mortally incenſed againſt me. O Queene, no hand can ſaue my life, but thine, that hath as good as bereaued it: ſhow mercy to him, that neuer meant but loyalty to thee: As euer thou wouldeſt oblige an humble and faithfull vaſſall to thee, as euer thou wouldeſt honour thy name, and ſexe, with the prayſe of tender compaſſion, take pitty vpon me, and ſpare that life which ſhall bee vowed to thy ſeruice: and whereas thy diſplea- C D

A ſure may iuſtly alleage againſt mee that rancorous plot for the extirpation of that people, whom I, too late know to bethine; let it ſuffice that I hate, I curſe mine owne cruelty; and onely vpon that condition ſhall beg the repriuall of my life, that I ſhall worke, and procure by thy gracious ayd, a full defeazance of that vniuſt execution. O let fall vpon thy deſpairing ſeruant one word of fauour to my diſpleaſed Maſter, that I may yet liue.

Whiles he was ſpeaking to this purpoſe, hauing proſtrate himſelfe (for the more humilitie) before the Queene, and ſpread his armes in a vehement implo-ration vp to her bed; the King comes in, and, as not vnwilling to miſconſter the poſture of him, whom he now hated, ſaies, what, will he force the Queene alſo before me in the houſe? That which Haman meant as an humble ſuppliant, is interpreted as from a preſumptuous offender; How oft might he haue done ſo, and more, whiles he was in fauour, vncenſured? Actions are not the ſame when the man alters. As charity makes a good ſenſe of doubtfull occurrents, ſo preiudice and diſpleaſure takes all things (though well-meant) at the worſt.

B It is an eaſie thing to picke a quarrell, where we intend a miſchiefe.

The wrath of the King is as a meſſenger of death: Whiles theſe words were yet in the mouth of Ahaſuerus, Haman, in turning his head towards the King, is ſuddenly muffled for his execution; he ſhall no more ſee either face, or Sun: he ſhall be ſeene no more but as a ſpectacle of ſhame, and horror: and now he thinkes, Wo is mee whoſe eyes ſerue mee onely to foreſee the approach of a diſhonorable, and painefull death! what am I the better to haue beene great? O that I had neuer beene, Oh that I could not be: How too truly haue Zereſh and my friends foretold mee of this beauie deſtiny? Now am I ready to feele what it is that I meant to thouſands of innocents; I ſhall dye with paine and ignominie: Oh that the conſcience of mine intended murder could dye with me. It is no maruell if wicked men finde nothing but vtter diſcomforts in their end: rather then faile, their former happineſſe ſhall ioyne with their imminent miſeries, to torment them. It is the iuſt iudgement of God that preſumptuous ſinners ſhould bee ſwallowed vp of thoſe euils, which they would not feare; Happy is that man, who hath grace to fore-ſee, and auoyd thoſe waies, which

C will leade him to a perfect confuſion. Happy is he that hath ſo liued that he can either welcome death as a friend, or defie it as an enemy.

Who was euer the better for fauour paſt? thoſe that had before kiſſed the feet, and ſmiled in the face of Haman, are now as ready to couer his head, and helpe him to the gallowes. Harbonah one of the Chamberlines, ſeaſonably tells the King how ſtately a gibbet Haman had newly ſet vp for well-deſeruing Mordecai, within his owne pallace.

I heare not one man open his mouth to intercede for the offender, to pacifie the King, to excuſe or leſſen the fact; euery one is ready to pull him downe that is falling, to trample on him that is downe; yet no doubt, there were ſome of theſe Courtiers whom Hamon had obliged; Had the cauſe beene better, thus it would haue beene. Euery curre is ready to fall vpon the dog that he ſees worried; But here, it was the iuſt hand of God to ſet off all hearts from a man that had beene ſo vnreaſonably mercileſſe; and to raiſe vp enemies (euen among friends) to him, that had profeſſed enmity to Gods Church: So let thine ene-

D mies periſh O Lord, vnſuccoured, vnpitied. Then the King ſaid hang him thereon: There can bee no truer iuſtice then in retaliation; who can complaine of his owne meaſure: Behold the wicked trauaileth with iniquitie, and hath conceiued miſchiefe, and brought forth falſhood. Hee made a pit and digged it, and is fallen into the ditch that he made, His miſchiefe ſhall returne vpon his owne head, and his violent dealing ſhall come downe vpon his owne pate.

There hangs Hamon, in more reproch, then euer he ſtood in honor; and Mordecai (who is now firſt knowne for what he was) ſucceeds his fauour, and changes inheritances with his enemie; for whiles Haman inherits the gibbet of Mordecai, Mordecai inherits the house and honour of Haman. O Lord, let the malice of the wicked come to an end, but establish thou the iust. A

One hower hath changed the face of the Persian Court; what stabilitie is there in earthly greatnesse? Hee who in the morning all knees bowed vnto, as more then a man, now hangs vp like a despised vermin, for a prey to the rauens: He, who this morning was destin'd to the gallowes, now rules ouer Princes; neither was it for nothing, that hee this day rode in triumph: The Kings ring that was taken from Haman, is now giuen to Mordecai, as the pledge of his authority; and hee that euen now sate in the the gate, is called vp next to the throne. Wickednesse, and honest innocence haue now payd their debts to both their clients.

Little ioy would it yet haue been to Ester, that her enemy was dead, her kinsman aduanced, if still her people must for all this expect their fatall day: Her next B suit therefore is for the safety of her nation, in the countermand of that bloody decree, which Haman had obtayned against them: That which was surreptitiously gotten, and rashly giuen, is so much more gladly reuersed; by how much mercy is more pleasing to a good nature, then cruell iniustice. Mordecai hath power to endite, seale, send out letters of fauour to the Iewes, which were causlesly sentenced to the slaughter. If a Persian law might not be reuersed, yet it might be countercharged: Mordecai may not write, Let no Iew be slaine, he may write, Let the Iewes meet, and stand for their liues against those that would slay them. This command flyes after the former, so fast, as if it would ouer-take that, which it cannot recall; The Iewes are reuiued with this happy tydings, that they may haue protection as well as enmity; that authority will not be their executioner; that their owne hands are allowed to be their auengers.

Who would imagine that after publike notice of this alteration at the Court; whē the world could not choose but know the malicious ground of that wrongful edict, the shameful death of the procurer, the power of the party opposite; any one should be found, throughout all the prouinces, that would once lift vp his hand against a Iew? that, with his own dāger, wold indeuour to execute a controlled decree? The Church of God should cease to be it selfe, if it wanted malicious C persecution; there needs no other quarrell then the name, the religion of Israel.

Notwithstanding the knowne fauour of the King, and the patronage of Mordecai, the thirteenth of Adar is meant to be a bloody day; Haman hath too many abettors in the Persian dominions; these ioyne together to performe that sentence, wherof the author repented: The Iewes take hart to defend themselues, to kill their murtherers. All the prouinces are turn'd into a field of ciuill war; wherein innocence vanquisheth malice. The Iewes are victors, and not onely are aliue, but are feared; the most resist them not, many assist them, and some become theirs: The countenance of the great leads the world at pleasure; feare of authority swayes thousands that are not guilty of a conscience.

Yea, besides the liberty of defence, the Iewes are now made their owne Iustices; That their may be none left from the loynes of that accursed Agagite, (who would haue left none of the Iewish seed) they slay the ten sons of Haman; D and obtaine new dayes of further executions; Neither can death satisfie their reuenge; those ten sonnes of Haman shall in their very carcasses beare the reproach of their father, and hang aloft vpon his gallowes.

Finally, no man doth, no man dares frowne vpon a Iew; they are now become Lords in the midst of their captiuity; no maruell if they ordaine, and celebrate their ioyfull Purim, for a perpetuall memory, to all posterities, of their happy deliuerance. It were pity that the Church of God should not haue sun-shines, as well as stormes, and should not meete with interchanges of ioy in their warfare, before they enter vpon the vnchangeable ioy of their endlesse triumph.

TO MY MVCH HONOVRED, AND RIGHT VVORSHIPFVLL FRIEND, SIR

KNIGHT, ATTVRNEY GENERALL TO HIS Maieſtie.

RIGHT WORSHIPFVLL,

IT is not out of any ſatietie, that I change from the old Teſtament to the new; Theſe two, as they are the Breſts of the Church, ſo they yeeld Milke equally wholſome, equally pleaſant vnto able Nurſelings. Herein I thought good to haue reſpect vnto my Reader, in whoſe ſtrength there may be difference. That other breſt perhaps, doth not let downe this nouriſhing liquor, ſo freely, ſo eaſily: Euen ſo ſmall a variety refreſheth a weake Infant; Neither will there perhaps want ſome palates, which will finde a more quick & pleaſing reliſh in this freſher ſubſtãce: theſe I thought good to pleaſe with a taſte, ere they come to ſate themſelues with a full Meale of this diuine nouriſhment; in emulation of the good Scribe, that brings forth both olde and new. If it please God to inable my life and opportunities, I hope at last, to present the Church with the last seruice of the Historie of either Page: wherein my Ioy, and my Crowne shall bee the edification of many. In the meane time, I dedicate this part vnto your Name, whom I haue so much cause to obserue, and honour. The blessing of that God (whose Church you haue euer made your chiefe Client) bee still vpon your head, and that honourable Societie which reioyces in so worthy a Leader. To it, and your selfe, I shall be euer (as I haue cause)

The Angell and Zacharie.

WHen things are at worſt, then God beginnes a change: The ſtate of the Iewiſh Church was extremely corrupted, immediately before the newes of the Goſpell; yet, as bad as it was, not onely the Prieſthood, but the courſes of attendance continued, euen from Dauids time till Chriſts: It is a deſperately depraued condition of a Church, where no good orders are left: Iudea paſſed many troubles, many alterations, yet this orderly combination endured about an eleuen hundred yeares: A ſetled good will not eaſily be defeated, but in the change of perſons will remayne vnchanged, and if it be forced to giue way, leaues memorable footſteps behinde it: If Dauid fore-ſaw the prepetuation of this holy Ordinance, how much did he reioyce in the knowledge of it? who would not bee glad to doe good, on condition, that it may ſo long out-liue him?

The ſucceſſiue turnes of the Legall miniſtration held on in a Line neuer interrupted: Euen in a forlorne and miſerable Church, there may bee a perſonall ſucceſſion: How little were the Iewes better for this, when they had loſt the Vrim and Thummim, ſinceritie of Doctrine and Manners? This ſtayed with them euen whiles they and their Sonnes crucified Chriſt; What is more ordinary, than wicked Sonnes of holy Parents? It is the ſucceſſion of Truth and Holineſſe, that makes or inſtitutes a Church, what euer become of the perſons: Neuer times were ſo barren, as not to yeeld ſome good: The greateſt dearth affoords ſome few good Eares to the Gleaners: Chriſt would not haue come into the World, but hee would haue ſome faithfull to entertayne him: Hee, that had the diſpoſing of all times and men, would caſt ſome holy ones into his owne times: There had bin no equalitie, that all ſhould either ouer-run, or follow him, and none attend him. Zachary and Elizabeth are iuſt, both of Aarons bloud, and Iohn Baptiſt of theirs; whence ſhould an holy Seede ſpring, if not of the Loynes of Leui? It is not in the power of Parents to traduce Holineſſe to their Children: It is the bleſſing of God, that feoffes them in the vertues of their Parents, as they feoffe them in their ſinnes: There is no certaintie, but there is likelyhood, of an holy Generation, when the Parents are ſuch: Elizabeth was iuſt, as well as Zachary, that the fore-runner of a Sauiour might bee holy on both ſides: If the ſtocke and the griffe bee not both good, there is much danger of the fruit: It is an happy match, when the Husband and the Wife are one, not only in themſelues, but in God, not more in fleſh, than in the ſpirit: Grace makes no difference of ſexes, rather the weaker carries away the more honour, becauſe it hath had leſſe helps: It is eaſie to obſerue, that the New Teſtament affordeth more ſtore of good women, than the old: Elizabeth led the ring of this mercy, whoſe barrenneſſe ended in a miraculous fruit both of her body, and of her time.

This religious paire made no leſſe progreſſe in vertue, than in age, & yet their vertue could not make their beſt age fruitfull: Elizabeth was barren. A iuſt ſoule and a barren wombe may wel agree together: Amongſt the Iewes barrenneſſe was not a defect only, but a reproach, yet while this good woman was fruitfull of holy obedience, ſhe was barren of children: as Iohn, which was miraculouſly conceiued by man, was a fit forerunner of him, that was conceiued by the Holy Ghoſt, ſo a barren Matron was meet to make way for a Virgin.

None, but a ſonne of Aaron, might offer incenſe to God in the Temple; and not euery ſonne of Aaron, and not any one at all ſeaſons: God is a God of order, and hates confuſion no leſſe than irreligion: Albeit he hath not ſo ſtraitned himſelfe vnder the Goſpell, as to tie his ſeruice to perſons, or places, yet his choice is now no leſſe curious, becauſe it is more large: Hee allowes none, but the authoriſed; Hee authoriſeth none but the worthy. The Incenſe doth euer ſmell of the hand, that offers it; I doubt not but that perfume was ſweeter, which aſcended vp from the hand of a iuſt Zacharie: The ſacrifice of the wicked is abomination to God: There were courſes of miniſtration in the legall ſeruices: God neuer purpoſed to burthen any of his creatures with deuotion: How vaine is the ambition of any ſoule, that would loade it ſelfe with the vniuerſall charge of all men? How thankleſſe is their labour, that doe wilfully ouerſpend themſelues in their ordinarie vocations? As Zacharie had a courſe in Gods houſe, ſo hee carefully obſerued it; The fauour of theſe reſpites doubled his diligence: The more high and ſacred our calling is, the more dangerous is neglect: It is our honour, that wee may be allowed to wait vpon the God of heauen in theſe immediate ſeruices: Woe be to vs, if wee ſlacken thoſe duties, wherein God honours vs more, than we can honour him,

Many ſonns of Aaron, yea of the ſame familie, ſerued at once in the Temple, according to the varietie of imployments: To auoid all difference, they agreed by lot to aſſigne themſelues to the ſeuerall offices of each day; The lot of this day called Zacharie to offer Incenſe in the outer Temple: I doe not finde any preſcription they had from God of this particular manner of deſignement: Matters of good order in holy affaires may be ruled by the wiſe inſtitution of men according to reaſon and expediencie.

It fell out well, that Zacharie was choſen by lot to this miniſtration, that Gods immediate hand might be ſeene in all the paſſages, that concerned his great Prophet, that as the perſon, ſo the occaſion might be of Gods owne chooſing: In lots and their ſeeming caſuall diſpoſition, God can giue a reaſon, though we can giue none: Morning and Euening, twiſe a day their Law called them to offer Incenſe to God, that both parts of the day might be conſecrate to the maker of time: The outer Temple was the figure of the whole Church vpon earth, like as the holy of holieſt repreſented heauen: Nothing can better reſemble our faithfull prayers, than ſweet perfume: Theſe, God lookes, that wee ſhould (all his Church ouer) ſend vp vnto him Morning and Euening: The eleuations of our hearts ſhould be perpetuall, but if twiſe in the day we doe not preſent God with our ſolemne inuocations, we make the Goſpell leſſe officious, than the Law.

That the reſemblance of prayers and incenſe might be apparent, whiles the Prieſt ſends vp his incenſe within the Temple, the people muſt ſend vp their prayers without: Their breath and that incenſe, though remote in the firſt riſing, met, ere they went vp to heauen: The people might no more goe into the Holy place to offer vp the incenſe of prayers vnto God, than Zacharie might goe into the Holy of holies: Whiles the partition wall ſtood betwixt Iewes and Gentiles, there were alſo partitions betwixt the Iewes, and themſelues: Now every man is a Prieſt vnto God;

Euery man (ſince the veile was rent) prayes within the Temple: What are we the better for our greater freedome of acceſſe to God vnder the Goſpell, if wee doe not make vſe of our priuiledge?

Whiles they were praying to God, hee ſees an Angell of GOD; as Gideons Angell went vp in the ſmoke of the ſacrifice, ſo did Zacharies Angell (as it were) come downe in the fragrant ſmoake of his incenſe: It was euer great newes to ſee an Angell of God, but now more; becauſe God had long with-drawne from them all the meanes of his ſupernaturall reuelations: As this wicked people were ſtrangers to their God in their conuerſation, ſo was God growne a ſtranger to them in his apparitions; yet now that the ſeaſon of the Goſpel approached, he viſited them with his Angels, before he viſited them by his Sonne: He ſends his Angell to men in the forme of man, before hee ſends his Sonne to take humane forme: The preſence of Angels is no noueltie, but their apparition; they are alwayes with vs, but rarely ſeene, that wee may awfully reſpect their meſſages, when they are ſeene; In the meane time our faith may ſee them, though our ſenſes doe not; their aſſumed ſhapes doe not make them more preſent, but viſible.

There is an order in that heauenly Hierarchie, though we know it not: This Angell, that appeared to Zacharie, was not with him in the ordinarie courſe of his attendances, but was purpoſely ſent from God with this meſſage: Why was an Angell ſent? and why this Angell? It had beene eaſie for him to haue raiſed vp the propheticall ſpirit of ſome Simeon to this prediction; the ſame Holy Ghoſt, which reuealed to that iuſt man, that he ſhould not ſee death, ere hee had ſeene the Meſſias, might haue as eaſily reuealed vnto him the birth of the fore-runner of Chriſt, and by him to Zacharie: But God would haue this voyce, which ſhould goe before his Sonne, come with a noiſe: He would haue it appeare to the world, that the harbinger of the Meſſiah ſhould be conceiued by the maruellous power of that God, whoſe comming hee proclaimed: It was fit the firſt Herald of the Goſpell begin in wonder: The ſame Angell, that came to the bleſſed Virgin with the newes of Chriſts conception, came to Zacharie with the newes of Iohns, for the honour of him, that was the greateſt of them which were borne of women, and for his better reſemblance to him, which was the ſeede of the woman: Both had the Goſpell for their errand, one as the meſſenger of it, the other as the Author; Both are foretold by the ſame mouth.

When could it bee more fit for the Angell to appeare vnto Zacharie, then when prayers and incenſe were offered by him? Where could hee more fitly appeare, then in the Temple? In what part of the Temple more fitly, then at the Altar of Incenſe? and where-abouts rather, then on the right ſide of the Altar? Thoſe glorious ſpirits as they are alwayes with vs, ſo moſt in our deuotions, and as in all places, ſo moſt of all in Gods houſe: They reioyce to be with vs, whiles we are with God, as contrarily they turne their faces from vs, when we goe about our ſinnes.

Hee that had wont to liue, and ſerue in the preſence of the maſter, was now aſtoniſhed at the preſence of the ſeruant; ſo much difference there is betwixt our faith, and our ſenſes, that the apprehenſion of the preſence of the God of ſpirits by faith goes downe ſweetely with vs, whereas the ſenſible apprehenſion of an Angell diſmayes vs: Holy Zacharie, that had wont to liue by faith, thought hee ſhould dye, when his ſenſe began to be ſet on worke: It was the weakeneſſe of him, that ſerued at the Altar without horror, to be daunted with the face of his fellow ſeruant: In vaine doe wee looke for ſuch Miniſters of GOD, as are without infirmities, when iuſt Zacharie was troubled in his deuotions with that wherewith hee ſhould haue beene comforted: It was partly the ſuddenneſſe, and partly the glory of the apparition, that affrighted him: The good Angell was both apprehenſiue, and compaſſionate of Zacharies weakeneſſe, and preſently incourages him with a cheerefull excitation; (Feare not ZACHARIAS.) The bleſſed ſpirits, though they doe not often vocally expreſſe it, doe pittie our humane frailties, and ſecretly ſuggeſt comfort vnto vs, when

when we perceiue it not: Good and euill Angels, as they are contrary in eſtate, ſo alſo in diſpoſition: The good deſire to take away feare, the euill to bring it: It is a fruit of that deadly enmity, which is betwixt Satan and vs, that hee would, if hee might kill vs with terrour; whereas the good ſpirits affecting our reliefe and happineſſe, take no pleaſure in terrifying vs, but labour altogether for our tranquilitie and cheerefulneſſe.

There was not more feare in the face, then comfort in the ſpeech; Thy prayer is heard: No Angell could haue told him better newes; Our deſires are vttered in our praiers: What can we wiſh but to haue what we would? Many good ſuites had Zacharie made, and amongſt the reſt for a ſonne: Doubtleſſe it was now ſome ſpace of yeares, ſince he made that requeſt: For he was now ſtricken in age, and had ceaſed to hope; yet had God laid it vp all the while, and when hee thinkes not of it, brings it forth to effect: Thus doth the mercie of our God deale with his patient, and faithfull ſuppliants: In the feruour of their expectation hee many times holds them off, and when they leaſt thinke of it, and haue forgotten their owne ſuite, hee graciouſly condeſcends: Delay of effect may not diſcourage our faith; It may bee God hath long granted, ere wee ſhall know of his grant. Many a father repents him of his fruitfulneſſe, and hath ſuch ſonnes, as he wiſhes vnborne: but to haue ſo gracious and happy a ſonne as the Angell foretold, could not be leſſe comfort, then honour to the age of Zacharie: The proofe of children makes them either the bleſſings, or croſſes of their parents: To heare what his ſonne ſhould bee before he was; to heare that hee ſhould haue ſuch a ſonne; A ſonne, whoſe birth ſhould concerne the ioy of many; A ſonne, that ſhould be great in the ſight of the Lord; A ſonne, that ſhould bee ſacred to God, filled with God, beneficiall to man; An harbinger to him, that was God and man, was newes enough to preuent the Angell, and to take away that tongue with amazement, which was after loſt with incredulity.

The ſpeech was ſo good, That it found not a ſudden beliefe: This good newes ſurpriſed Zacharie; If the intelligence had taken leiſure, that his thoughts might haue had time to debate the matter, hee had eaſily apprehended the infinite power of him that had promiſed; the patterne of Abraham and Sara; and would ſoone haue concluded the appearance of the Angell more miraculous then his prediction: Whereas now, like a man masked with the ſtrangeneſſe of that hee ſaw and heard, hee miſdoubts the meſſage, and askes: How ſhall I know? Nature was on his ſide, and alledged the impoſſibility of the euent, both from age and barrenneſſe; Supernatuall tidings at the firſt hearing aſtoniſh the heart, and are entertained with doubts by thoſe, which vpon further acquaintance giue them the beſt wel-come.

The weake apprehenſions of our imperfect faith are not ſo much to be cenſured, as pitied: It is a ſure way for the heart, to be preuented with the aſſurance of the omnipotent power of God, to whom nothing is impoſſible: ſo ſhall the hardeſt points of faith goe downe eaſily with vs: If the eye of our mind looke vpward, it ſhall meet with nothing to auert, or interrupt it; but if right forward, or downeward, or round about, euery thing is a blocke in our way.

There is a difference betwixt deſire of aſſurance, and vnbeliefe, wee cannot bee too carefull to raiſe vp our ſelues arguments to ſettle our faith; although it ſhould be no faith, if it had no feete to ſtand vpon, but diſcurſiue: In matters of faith, if reaſons may bee brought for the conuiction of the gaine-ſayers, it is well; if they bee helpes, they cannot be grounds of our beliefe: In the moſt faithfull heart there are ſome ſparkes of infidelitie; ſo to beleeue, that we ſhould haue no doubt at all, is ſcarſe incident into fleſh and blood: It is a great perfection, if wee haue attained to ouercome our doubts. What did miſ-leade Zacharie, but that which vſes to guide others, Reaſon? (I am old, and my wife is of great age,) As if yeares, and drie loynes could be any let to him, which is able of very ſtones to raiſe vp children vnto Abraham: Faith and reaſon haue their limits; where reaſon ends, faith begins; and if reaſon will be encroching vpon the bounds of faith, ſhe is ſtreight taken captiue by infidelity:

fidelitie: Wee are not fit to follow Christ, if wee haue not denied our ſelues; and the chiefe peece of our ſelues is our reaſon: We muſt yeeld God able to doe that, which we cannot comprehend, and we muſt comprehend that by our faith, which is diſclaimed by reaſon; Hagar muſt be driuen out of doores, that Sara may rule alone.

The authoritie of the reporter, makes way for beliefe in things, which are otherwiſe hard to paſſe; although in the matters of God, we ſhould not ſo much care, who ſpeakes, as what is ſpoken, and from whom: The Angell tels his name, place, office, vnasked, that Zacharie might not thinke any newes impoſſible, that was brought him by an heauenly meſſenger: Euen where there is no vſe of language, the ſpirits are diſtinguiſhed by names, and each knowes his owne appellation, and others: Hee that gaue leaue vnto man his Image, to giue names vnto all his viſible and inferiour creatures, did himſelfe put names vnto the ſpirituall; and as their name is, ſo are they mighty and glorious: But leſt Zacharie ſhould no leſſe doubt of the ſtile of the meſſenger, then of the errand it ſelfe, He is at once both confirmed, and puniſhed with dumbneſſe: That tongue, which mooued the doubt, muſt be tyed vp: He ſhall aske no more queſtions for forty weekes, becauſe he asked this one diſtruſtfully.

Neither did Zacharie loſe his tongue for the time, but his eares alſo, he was not only mute, but deafe; For otherwiſe, when they came to aske his allowance for the name of his Sonne, they needed not to haue demanded it by ſignes, but by words: God will not paſſe ouer ſleight offences, and thoſe which may plead the moſt colourable pretences in his beſt children, without a ſenſible checke: it is not our holy entireneſſe with God, that can beare vs out in the leaſt ſinne; yea rather the more acquaintance we haue with his Maieſtie, the more ſure we are of correction, when we offend: This may procure vs more fauour in our wel-doing, not leſſe iuſtice in euill.

ZACHARIE ſtaied, and the people waited, whether ſome longer diſcourſe betwixt the Angell and him, then needed to be recorded, or whether aſtoniſhment at the apparition and newes, with-held him; I inquire not; the multitude thought him long, yet though they could but ſee a farre off, they would not depart, till hee returned to bleſſe them: Their patient attendance without, ſhames vs, that are hardly perſwaded to attend within, whiles both our ſenſes are imploied in our diuine ſeruices, and wee are admitted to be coagents with our Miniſters.

At laſt Zacharie comes out ſpeechleſſe, & more amaſes them with his preſence, then with his delay. The eyes of the multitude, that were not worthy to ſee his viſion, yet ſee the ſignes of his viſion, that the world might be put into the expectation of ſome extraordinarie ſequell: GOD makes way for his voice, by ſilence: His ſpeech could not haue ſaid ſo much, as his dumbneſſe: Zacharie would faine haue ſpoken, and could not; with vs too many are dumbe, and need not: Negligence, Feare, Partialitie ſtop the mouthes of many, which ſhall once ſay, Woe to mee, becauſe I held my peace. His hand ſpeakes that which he cannot with his tongue, and he makes them by ſignes to vnderſtand that, which they might reade in his face: Thoſe powers wee haue, we muſt vſe: But though he haue ceaſed to ſpeake, yet he ceaſed not to miniſter; Hee takes not this dumbneſſe for a diſmiſſion, but ſtayes out the eight dayes of his courſe, as one, that knew the eyes, and hands, and heart would be accepted of that God, which had bereaued him of his tongue: We may not ſtraight take occaſions of withdrawing our ſelues from the publike ſeruices of our God, much leſſe vnder the Goſpel: The Law, which ſtood much vpon bodily perfection, diſpenſed with age for attendance. The Goſpell, which is all for the ſoule, regards thoſe inward powers, which whiles they are vigorous, exclude all excuſes of our miniſtration.

The Annuntiation of CHRIST.

THE Spirit of GOD was neuer ſo accurate in any deſcription, as that which concernes the Incarnation of GOD: It was fit no circumſtance ſhould be omitted in that Story, whereon the faith and ſaluation of all the World dependeth: Wee cannot ſo much as doubt of this truth, and bee ſaued; no not the number of the moneth, not the name of the Angell is concealed: Euery particle imports not more certainty, then excellence: The time is the ſixt moneth after Iohns Conception, the prime of the Spring: Chriſt was conceiued in the Spring, borne in the Solſtice: He in whom the World receiued a new life, receiues life in the ſame ſeaſon, wherein the World receiued his firſt life from him; and he which ſtretches out the dayes of his Church, and lengthens them to Eternitie, appeares after all the ſhort and dimme light of the Law, and enlightens the World with his glory. The Meſſenger is an Angell; A man was too meane to carry the newes of the Conception of God: Neuer any buſineſſe was conceiued in Heauen, that did ſo much concerne the earth, as the Conception of the GOD of Heauen in Wombe of earth: No leſſe then an Arch-Angell was worthy to beare this tydings, and neuer any Angell receiued a greater honour, then of this Embaſſage.

It was fit our reparation ſhould anſwer our fall; an euill Angell was the firſt motioner of the one to Eue a Virgin, then eſpouſed to Adam, in the Garden of Eden: A good Angel is the firſt reporter of the other to Mary a Virgin eſpouſed to Ioſeph, in that place, which (as the Garden of Galile;) had a name from flouriſhing: No good Angell could be the Author of our reſtauration, as that euill Angell was of our ruine; But that which thoſe glorious ſpirits could not doe themſelues, they are glad to report as done by the God of Spirits: Good newes reioyces the bearer; With what ioy did this holy Angell bring the newes of that Sauiour, in whom we are redeemed to life, himſelfe eſtabliſhed in life and glory? The firſt Preacher of the Goſpell was an Angell; that office muſt needs be glorious, that deriues it ſelfe from ſuch a Predeceſſor: God appointed his Angell to be the firſt Preacher, and hath ſince called his Preachers Angels: The meſſage is well ſuited; An Angell comes to a Virgin, Gabriel to Mary; He that was by ſignification the ſtrength of God, to her that was by ſignification exalted by God, to the conceiuing of him, that was the God of ſtrength: To a Maid but eſpouſed; a Maid for the honour of Virginity, eſpouſed for the honour of Marriage: The mariage was in a ſortmade, not conſummate, through the inſtinct of him, that meant to make her not an example, but a miracle of women: in this whole worke God would haue nothing ordinary: It was fit that ſhe ſhould be a marryed Virgin, which ſhould bee a Virgin-mother: He that meant to take mans nature without mans corruption, would bee the Sonne of man without mans ſeed, would bee the ſeed of the woman without man; and amongſt all women, of a pure Virgin; but amongſt Virgins, of one eſpouſed, that there might be at once a Witneſſe, and a Guardian of her fruitfull Virginitie; If the ſame God had not bin the author of Virginitie and Mariage, he had neuer countenanced Virginity by Marriage.

Whither doth this glorious Angell come to finde the Mother of him that was GOD, but to obſcure Galile? A part, which euen the Iewes themſelues deſpiſed, as forſaken of their priuiledges, (Out of Galile ariſeth no Prophet.) Behold; an Angell comes to that Galile, out of which no Prophet comes, and the God of Prophets, and Angels deſcends to bee conceiued in that Galile, out of which no Prophet ariſeth: He that filleth all places, makes no difference of places: It is the perſon which giues honour and priuiledge to the place, not the place to the perſon; as the preſence of God

God makes the Heauen, the Heauen doth not make the honor glorious: No blind corner of Nazareth can hide the blessed Virgin from the Angell: The fauours of God will finde out his children, whersoeuer they are with-drawne.

It is the fashion of God to seeke out the most despised, on whom to bestow his honours, we cannot runne away as from the iudgements, so not from the mercies of our God: The cottages of Galile are preferred by God to the famous Palaces of Ierusalem, he cares not how homely he conuerse with his owne: Why should we be transported with the outward glory of places, whiles our God regards it not? Wee are not of the Angels diet, if we had not rather be with the blessed Virgin at Nazareth, then with the proud Dames in the Court of Ierusalem: It is a great vanitie to respect any thing aboue goodnesse, and to dis-esteeme goodnesse for any want. The Angell salutes the Virgin, he prayes not to her; He salutes her as a Saint, he prayes not to her as a Goddesse: For vs to salute her, as he did, were grosse presumption; For neither are we, as he was, neither is she, as she was: If he that was a spirit saluted her, that was flesh and blood here on earth, it is not for vs, that are flesh and blood to salute her, which is a glorious spirit in Heauen: For vs, to pray to her in the Angels salutation, were to abuse the Virgin, the Angell, the salutation.

But how gladly doe we second the Angell in the praise of her, which was more ours, then his? How iustly doe we blesse her, whom the Angell pronounceth blessed? How worthily is she honoured of men, whom the Angell proclaimeth beloued of God? O blessed Mary, he cannot blesse thee, he cannot honour thee too much, that deifies thee not: That which the Angell said of thee, thou hast professed of thy selfe, we beleeue the Angell, and thee: All Generations shall call thee blessed, by the fruit of whose wombe all Generations are blessed: If Zacharie were amazed with the sight of this Angell, much more the Virgin: That very Sex had more disaduantage of feare: If it had bin but a man, that had come to her in that secrecie and suddennesse, she could not but haue bin troubled; how much more, when the shining glorie of the person doubled the astonishment.

The troubles of holy mindes end euer in comfort: Ioy was the errand of the Angel, and not terrour. Feare (as all passions) disquiets the heart and makes it for the time vnfit to receiue the messages of God: Soone hath the Angell cleared these troublesome mists of passions; and sent out the beames of heauenly consolation in the remotest corner of her soule by the glad newes of her Sauiour: How can ioy, but enter into her heart, out of whose wombe shall come saluation: What roome can feare finde in that breast, that is assured of fauour? Feare not Mary; for thou hast found fauour with God: Let those feare, who know they are in displeasure, or know not they are gracious: Thine happie estate cals for confidence, and that confidence for ioy: What should, what can they feare, who are fauoured of him, at whom the Deuils tremble? Not the presence of the good Angels, but the temptations of the euill strike many terrors into our weaknesse; we could not be dismaied with them, if wee did not forget our condition. We haue not receiued the spirit of bondage to feare againe, but the spirit of Adoption, whereby we cry, Abba Father: If that Spirit (O God) witnesse with our spirits, that wee are thine, how can we feare any of those spirituall wickednesses? Giue vs assurance of thy fauour, and let the powers of Hell doe their worst.

It was no ordinarie fauour, that the Virgin found in Heauen: No mortall Creature was euer thus graced, that hee should take part of her nature, that was the God of nature; that he, which made all things, should make his humane bodie of hers; that her wombe should yeeld that flesh, which was personally vnited to the Godhead; that shee should beare him, that vpholds the world: Loe, thou shalt conceiue and beare a Sonne, and shalt call his name Iesus. It is a question, whether there be more wonder in the Conception, or in the Fruit; the Conception of the Virgin; or Iesus conceiued: Both are maruellous, but the former doth not more exceed al other wonders, then the latter exceedeth it. For the childe of a virgin is the reimprouement of that power, which which created the world: but that God ſhould bee incarnate of a Virgin, was an abaſement of his Maieſtie, and an exaltation of the creature beyond all example. Well was that Child worthy to make the Mother bleſſed: Here was a double Conception; one in the wombe of her bodie, the other of the ſoule: If that were more miraculous, this was more beneficiall; That was her priuiledge, this was her happineſſe: If that were ſingular to her, this is common to all his choſen: There is no renewed heart, wherein thou, O Sauiour, art not formed againe. Bleſſed bee thou, that haſt herein made vs bleſſed. For what wombe can conceiue thee, and not partake of thee? Who can partake of thee, and not be happie?

Doubtleſſe the Virgin vnderſtood the Angell, as hee meant, of a preſent Conception, which made her ſo much more inquiſitiue into the manner and meanes of this euent: How ſhall this bee, ſince I know not a man? That ſhee ſhould conceiue a Son by the knowledge of man after her Marriage conſummate, could haue beene no wonder: But how then ſhould that Sonne of hers bee the Sonne of God? This demand was higher, how her preſent Virginity ſhould bee inſtantly fruitfull, might bee well worthy of admiration, of inquirie: Here was deſire of information, not doubts of infidelitie; yea rather this queſtion argues Faith: It takes for granted, that, which an vnbeleeuing heart would haue ſtuck at: Shee ſayes not, who and whence art thou? what Kingdome is this, where and when ſhall it bee erected? but ſmoothly ſuppoſing all thoſe ſtrange things would be done, ſhe inſiſts onely in that which did neceſſarily require a further intimation, and doth not diſtruſt, but demand: Neither doth ſhe ſay, this cannot be, nor how can this be; but how ſhall this be? ſo doth the Angell anſwer, as one, that knew he needed not to ſatisfie curioſitie, but to informe iudgement, and vphold faith: He doth not therefore tell her of the manner, but of the Author of this act; The Holy Ghoſt ſhall come vpon thee, and the power of the moſt High ſhall ouer-ſhaddow thee: It is enough to know, who is the vndertaker, and what he will doe: O God, what doe wee ſeeke a cleere light, where thou wilt haue a ſhaddow? No Mother knowes the manner of her naturall Conception; what preſumption ſhall it bee for fleſh and blood, to ſearch how the Sonne of God tooke fleſh and blood of his Creature? It is for none, but the Almighty to know thoſe workes, which he doth immediatly concerning himſelfe; thoſe that concerne vs, hee hath reuealed: Secrets to God, things reuealed to vs.

The anſwer was not ſo full, but that a thouſand difficulties might ariſe out of the particularities of ſo ſtrange a meſſage, yet after the Angels Solution, wee heare of no more Obiections, no more Interrogations: The faithfull heart, when it once vnderſtands the good pleaſure of God, argues no more, but ſweetly reſts it ſelfe in a quiet expectation; Behold the Seruant of the Lord, bee it to mee according to thy Word. There is not a more noble proofe of our Faith, then to captiuate all the powers of our vnderſtanding and will to our Creator, and without all ſciſcitations to goe blindfold, whither he will leade vs: All diſputations with God (after his will knowne) ariſe from infidelitie: Great is the Myſtery of godlineſſe, and if we will giue Nature leaue to cauill, we cannot be Chriſtians. O God, thou art faithfull, thou art powerfull: It is enough, that thou haſt ſaid it; In the humilitie of our obedience we reſigne our ſelues ouer to thee: Behold the Seruants of the Lord, bee it vnto vs, according to thy Word.

How fit was her wombe to conceiue the fleſh of the Sonne of God by the power of the ſpirit of God, whoſe breſt had ſo ſoone by the power of the ſame Spirit conceiued an aſſent to the will of God; and now of an Hand-mayd of God, ſhe is aduanced to the Mother of God: No ſooner hath ſhe ſaid (bee it done) then it is done, the Holy Ghoſt ouer-ſhaddowes her, and formes her Sauiour in her owne bodie. This very Angell, that talkes with the bleſſed Virgin, could ſcarce haue beene able to expreſſe the ioy of her heart in the ſenſe of this diuine burden: Neuer any mortall Creature had ſo much cauſe of exultation: How could ſhee, that was full of God be other then full of ioy in that God? Griefe growes greater by concealing; Ioy by expreſſion:

preſſion: The holy Virgin had vnderſtood by the Angell, how her Couſin Elizabeth was no leſſe of kin to her in condition; the fruitfulneſſe of whoſe age did ſomewhat ſuit the fruitfulneſſe of her Virginitie: Happineſſe communicated, doubles it ſelfe; Here is no ſtrayning of courteſie; The bleſſed Maid whom vigor of age had more fitted for the way, haſtens her iourney into the Hill-countrey to viſit that gracious Matron, whom God had made a ſigne of her miraculous Conception: Onely the meeting of Saints in Heauen can parallel the meeting of theſe two Couſins: The two wonders of the World are met vnder one roofe, and congratulate their mutuall happineſſe: When we haue Chriſt ſpiritually conceiued in vs, we cannot be quiet, till we haue imparted our ioy: Elizabeth that holy Matron did no ſooner wel-come her bleſſed Couſin, than her Babe wel-comes his Sauiour; Both in the retyred Cloſſets of their Mothers Womb are ſenſible of each others preſence; the one by his omniſcience, the other by inſtinct. He did not more fore-runne Chriſt, then ouer-runne Nature: How ſhould our hearts leape within vs, when the Son of God vouchſafes to come into the ſecret of our ſoules, not to viſit vs, but to dwell with vs, to dwell in vs!

The Birth of CHRIST.

AS all the actions of men, ſo eſpecially the publike actions of publike men are ordered by God to other ends then their owne: This Edict went not ſo much out from Auguſtus, as from the Court of Heauen. What, did Cæſar know Ioſeph and Mary? His charge was vniuerſall to a world of ſubiects, through all the Roman Empire: God intended this Cenſion onely for the bleſſed Virgin and her Sonne, that Chriſt might be borne, where he ſhould: Cæſar meant to fill his Coffers, God meant to fulfill his Propheſies, and ſo to fulfill them, that thoſe, whom it concerned might not feele the accompliſhment: If God had directly commanded the Virgin to goe vp to Bethleem, ſhee had ſeene the intention, and expected the iſſue; but that wiſe Moderatour of all things, that workes his will in vs, loues ſo to doe it, as may be leaſt with our fore-ſight, and acquaintance, and would haue vs fall vnder his Decrees vnawares, that we may ſo much the more adore the depths of his Prouidence: Euery Creature walkes blind-fold, onely he that dwels in light, ſees whither they goe.

Doubtleſſe, bleſſed Mary meant to haue beene deliuered of her diuine burden at home, and little thought of changing the place of Conception for another of her Birth: That houſe was honoured by the Angell, yea, by the ouer-ſhaddowing of the Holy Ghoſt, none could equally ſatisfie her hopes, or deſires: It was fit, that hee, which made choice of the Wombe, wherein his Sonne ſhould bee conceiued, ſhould make choice of the place, where his Sonne ſhould be borne: As the worke is all his, ſo will he alone contriue all the circumſtances to his owne ends: Oh the infinite Wiſedome of God in caſting all his Deſignes! There needes no other proofe of Chriſt, then Cæſar and Bethleem; and of Cæſars, then Auguſtus; his Gouernment, his Edict pleades the truth of the Meſſias: His Gouernment, now was the deepe peace of all the World vnder that quiet Scepter, which made way for him, who was the Prince of Peace: If Wars be a ſigne of the time of his ſecond comming, Peace was a ſigne of his firſt: His Edict, now was the Scepter departed from Iuda: It was the time for Shilo to come; No power was left in the Iewes, but to obey: Auguſtus is the Emperor of the World, vnder him Herod is the King of Iudea; Cyrenius is Preſident of Syria; Iuric hath nothing of her owne. For Herod if hee were a King, yet hee was no Iew, and if hee had bin a Iew, yet he was no otherwiſe a King, then tributary and titular: The Edict came out from Auguſtus, was executed by Cyrenius; Herod is no actor in this ſeruice: Gaine and glory are the ends of this taxation, each man profeſt himſelfe a ſubiect, and payd for the priuiledge of his ſeruitude: Now their very heads were not their owne, but muſt bee payed for to the head of forreine State: They which before ſtood vpon the termes of their immunitie, ſtoope at the laſt: The proud ſuggeſtions of Iudas the Galilean might ſhed their blood, and ſwell their ſtomacks,

but could not ease their yoke, neither was it the meaning of God, that holinesse (if they had bin as they pretended) should shelter them from subiection: A Tribute is imposed vpon Gods free people; This act of bondage brings them libertie: Now when they seemed most neglected of God, they are blessed with a Redeemer; when they are most pressed with forreine Soueraignty, God sends them a King of their owne, to whom Cæsar himselfe must be a subiect: The goodnesse of our God picks out the most needfull times of our relieſe, and comfort: Our extremities giue him the most glory. Whither must Ioseph and Mary come to be taxed, but vnto Bethleem Dauids Citie? The very place proues their descent: He that succeeded Dauid in his Throne, must succeed him in the place of his Birth; so cleerely was Bethleem designed to this honour by the Prophets, that euen the Priests and the Scribes could point Herod vnto it, and assured him, the King of the Iewes could be no where else borne. Bethleem iustly the house of bread, the bread that came downe from Heauen is there giuen to the World; whence should we haue the bread of life, but from the house of bread? O holy Dauid, was this the Well of Bethleem, whereof thou didst so thirst to drinke of old, when thou saidst; O that one would giue me drinke of the water of the Well of Bethleem! Surely that other water, when it was brought thee by thy Worthies, thou powredst it on the ground, and wouldst not drinke of it: This was that liuing Water, for which thy soule longed, whereof thou saidst else-where; As the Hart brayeth after the water-brooks, so longeth my soule after thee O God: My soule thirsteth for God, for the liuing God.

It was no lesse then foure dayes iourney from Nazareth to Bethleem: How iust an excuse might the blessed Virgin haue pleaded for her absence? What woman did euer vndertake such a iourney so neere her deliuery? and doubtlesse Ioseph, which was now taught of God to loue and honour her, was loth to draw forth a deare Wife in so vnwieldy a case, into so manifest hazard: But the charge was peremptory, the obedience exemplary; The desire of an inoffensiue obseruance euen of Hethenish authority, digests all difficulties: Wee may not take easie occasions to withdraw our obedience to supreme commands; yea how didst thou (O Sauiour) by whom Augustus reigned, in the wombe of thy Mother yeeld this homage to Augustus: The first lesson that euer thy example taught vs, was obedience.

After many steps are Ioseph and Mary come to Bethleem: The plight, wherein she was, would not allow any speed, and the forced leisure of the iournie causeth disappointment: the end was worse then the way, there was no rest in the way, there was no roome in the Inne: It could not be, but that there were many of the kindred of Ioseph and Mary at that time in Bethleem: For both there were their Ancestors, borne, if not themselues; and thither came vp all the Cousins of their blood: yet there and then doth the holy Virgin want roome to lay either her head, or her burthen. If the house of Dauid had not lost all mercy and good nature, a Daughter of Dauid could not so neere the time of her trauell, haue bin destitute of lodging in the City of Dauid. Little did the Bethleemites thinke what a guest they refused. Else they would gladly haue opened their doores to him, which was able to open the gates of heauen to them. Now their inhospitality is punishment enough to it selfe: They haue lost the honour and happinesse of being host to their God: Euen still, O blessed Sauior, thou standest at our doores and knockest; euery motion of thy good Spirit tells vs, thou art there: Now thou commest in thine owne name, and there thou standest, whiles thy head is full of dew, and thy locks wet with the drops of the night: If we suffer carnall desires, and worldly thoughts to take vp the lodging of our heart, and reuell within vs, whiles thou wayt'st vpon our admission, surely our iudgement shall be so much the greater, by how much better we know, whom we haue excluded. What doe we cry shame on the Bethleemites, whilest wee are wilfully more churlish, more vnthankfull? There is no roome in my heart for the wonder at this humilitie: He, for whom heauen is too strait, whom the heauen of heauens cannot containe, lies in the strait cabbin of the wombe, and when he would inlarge himselfe for the world, is not allowed the roome of an Inne: The many mansions of heauen were at his disposing, the earth was his, and the fulnes of it, yet he ſuffers himſelfe to be refuſed of a baſe cottage, and complaineth not: What meaſure ſhould diſcontent vs wretched men, when thou (O God) fareſt thus from thy creatures? How ſhould we learne both to want and abound, from thee, which abounding with the glory and riches of heauen, wouldſt want a lodging in thy firſt welcome to the earth? Thou cameſt to thine owne, and thy owne receiued thee not: How can it trouble vs to be reiected of the world, which is not ours? what wonder is it, if thy ſeruants wandred abroad in ſheeps skins, and goats skins, deſtitute and afflicted, when their Lord is denied harbour? how ſhould all the world bluſh at this indignity of Bethleem? Hee that came to ſaue men, is ſent for his firſt lodging to the beaſts: The ſtable is become his Inne, the cratch his bed: O ſtrange cradle of that great King, which heauen it ſelfe may enuy! O Sauiour, thou that wert both the Maker and Owner of heauen, of earth, couldſt haue made thee a Palace without hands, couldſt haue commanded thee an empty room in thoſe houſes, which thy creatures had made? When thou didſt but bid the Angels auoid their firſt place, they fell downe from heauen like lightning; & when in thine humbled eſtate thou didſt but ſay, I am he, who was able to ſtand before thee? How eaſie had it bin for thee to haue made place for thy ſelfe in the throngs of the ſtatelieſt Courts? Why wouldſt thou be thus homely, but that by contemning worldly glories, thou mightſt teach vs to cõtemne them? that thou mightſt ſanctifie pouerty to them, whom thou call'ſt vnto want? that ſince thou which hadſt the choice of al earthly conditions, wouldſt be borne poore and deſpiſed, thoſe which muſt want out of neceſſity, might not thinke their pouerty grieuous. Here was neither friend to entertaine, nor ſeruant to attend, nor place wherein to be attended, onely the poore beaſts gaue way to the God of al the world: It is the great myſtery of godlines, that God was manifeſted in the fleſh, and ſeene of Angels; but here which was the top of all wonders, the very beaſts might ſee their Maker: For thoſe ſpirits to ſee God in the fleſh, it was not ſo ſtrange, as for the brute creatures to ſee him, which was the God of ſpirits: He, that would be led into the wilderneſſe amongſt wilde beaſts to be tempted, would come into the houſe of beaſts to be borne, that from the height of his diuine glory his humiliation might be the greater: How can we be abaſed low enough for thee (O Sauiour) that haſt thus neglected thy ſelfe for vs? That the viſitation might be anſwerable to the homelines of the place, attendants, prouiſion, who ſhall come to congratulate his birth, but poore ſhepherds? The Kings of the earth reſt at home, and haue no ſummons to attend him, by whom they reigne: God hath choſen the weake things of the world to confound the mighty: In an obſcure time (the night) vnto obſcure men (ſhepherds) doth God manifeſt the light of his Son, by glorious Angels: It is not our meanneſſe (O God) that cã exclude vs from the beſt of thy mercies; yea thus far doſt thou reſpect perſons, that thou haſt put downe the mighty, and exalted them of low degree. If theſe ſhepherds had beene ſnorting in their beds, they had no more ſeene Angels, nor heard newes of their Sauior, then their neighbours; Their vigilancy is honored with this heauenly viſion: thoſe which are induſtrious in any calling, are capable of further bleſſings, whereas the idle are fit for nothing but temptation. No leſſe then a whole Chore of Angels are worthy to ſing the hymne, of Glory to God, for the incarnation of his Son: What ioy is enough for vs, whoſe nature he tooke, and whom he came to reſtore by his incarnation? If we had the tongues of Angels, wee could not raiſe this note high enough to the praiſe of our glorious Redeemer. No ſooner doe the ſhepherds heare the newes of a Sauiour, then they run to Bethleem to ſeek him; Thoſe that left their beds to tend their flocks, leaue their flocks to enquire after their Sauiour: No earthly thing is too deare to be forſaken for Chriſt: If we ſuffer any worldly occaſion to ſtay vs from Bethleem, we care more for our ſheep, then our ſoules: It is not poſſible that a faithfull heart ſhould heare where Chriſt is, and not labour to the ſight, to the fruition of him. Where art thou, O Sauiour, but at home in thine owne houſe, in the aſſembly of thy Saints? Where art thou to be fouud but in thy word and Sacraments? yea there thou ſeekeſt for vs: if there we haſt not to ſeek for thee, we are worthy to want thee, worthy that our want of thee here, ſhoud make vs want the preſence of thy face for euer.

The Sages and the Starre.

THe ſhepheards and the cratch accorded well; yet euen they ſaw nothing which they might not contemne; neither was there any of thoſe ſhepherds that ſeemed not more like a king, then that King, whom they came to ſee. But oh the Diuine Maieſty, that ſhined in this baſenes! There lies the Babe in the ſtable, crying in the manger, whom the Angels came downe from heauen to proclaime, whom the Sages come from the Eaſt to adore, whom an heauenly Star notifies to the world, that now men might ſee, that heauen and earth ſerues him that neglected himſelfe. Thoſe lights that hang low, are not far ſeene, but thoſe which are high placed, are equally ſeene in the remoteſt diſtances. Thy light, O Sauior was no leſſe then heauenly: The Eaſt ſaw that, which Bethleem might haue ſeen: oft-times thoſe which are neereſt in place, are fartheſt off in affection: Large obiects when they are too cloſe to the eie, doe ſo ouer-fill the ſenſe, that they are not diſcerned. What a ſhame is this to Bethleem? the Sages came out of the Eaſt to worſhip him, whom that village refuſed: The Bethleemites were Iewes; The wiſe-men Gentiles: This firſt entertainment of Chriſt was a preſage of the ſequel; The Gētiles ſhall come from far to adore Chriſt, whiles the Iewes reiect him. Thoſe Eaſterlings were great ſearchers of the depths of nature, profeſſed Philoſophers, them hath God ſingled out to the honor of the manifeſtation of Chriſt: Humane learning well improued makes vs capable of diuine: There is no knowledge, wherof God is not the Author; he would neuer haue beſtowed any gift, that ſhould leade vs away from himſelfe; It is an ignorant conceit, that inquiry into nature ſhould make men Atheous: No man is ſo apt to ſee the Star of Chriſt, as a diligent diſciple of Philoſophy: doubtleſſe this light was viſible vnto more, only they followed it, which knew it had more then nature: He is truly wiſe, that is wiſe for his owne ſoule: If theſe wiſe men had bin acquainted with all the other ſtars of heauen, & had not ſeene the Star of Chriſt, they had had but light enough to lead them into vtter darkneſſe; Philoſophy without the ſtar, is but the wiſp of error. Theſe Sages were in a mean between the Angels and the ſhepherds: God would in all the ranks of intelligent creatures haue ſome to be witneſſes of his Son: The Angels direct the ſhepherds, the Star guides the Sages; the duller capacity hath the more cleare & powerfull helps; the wiſedome of our good God proportions the means vnto the diſpoſition of the perſons; their Aſtronomy had taught them, this ſtar was not ordinary, whether in ſight or in brightnes, or in motion. The eies of nature might well ſee, that ſome ſtrange newes was portended to the world by it; but that this ſtar deſigned the birth of the Meſſias, there needed yet another light: If the ſtar had not beſides had the commentary of a reuelation from God, it could haue led the wiſe-men only into a fruitleſſe wōder: giue them to be the of-ſpring of Balaam, yet the true prediction of that falſe prophet was not enough warrant: If he told them, the Meſſias ſhould ariſe as a ſtar out of Iacob, he did not tel them, that a ſtar ſhould ariſe far from the poſterity of Iacob, at the birth of the Meſſias; He that did put that Propheſie into the mouth of Balaam, did alſo put this illumination into the heart of the Sages: the Spirit of God is free to breathe where he liſteth: Many ſhal come from the Eaſt and the Weſt to ſeeke Chriſt, when the children of the Kingdome ſhall ſhut out: euen then God did not ſo confine his election to the pale of the Church, as that he did not ſometimes looke out for ſpeciall inſtruments of his glory. Whither doe theſe Sages come, but to Hieruſalem? where ſhould they hope to heare of the new King, but in the mother City of the Kingdom? The conduct of the ſtar was firſt only general to Iudea: the reſt is for a time left to enquiry: they were not brought thither for their own ſakes, but for Iewries, for the worlds; that they might help to make the Iewes inexcuſable, & the world faithfull: That their tongues threfore might blazon the birth of Chriſt, they are brought to the head Citie of Iudea, to report, and inquire: their wiſdome could not teach them to imagine, that a King could be borne to Iudea, of that note and magnificence, that a Starre from heauen ſhould publiſh him to the earth, and that his ſubiects ſhould not know it: and therefore as preſuppoſing a common notice, they ſay, Where is

be, that is born King of the Iewes? There is much deceit in probabilities, especially when we meddle with spirituall matters. For God vses still to goe a way by himselfe.

If we iudge according to reason and appearance, who is so likely to vnderstand heauenly truths, as the profound Doctors of the world? these God passes ouer, and reueales his will to babes? Had these Sages met with the shepherds of the villages neer Bethleem they had receiued that intelligence of Christ, which they did vainly seek from the learned Scribes of Ierusalem: The greatest clerkes are not alwaies the wisest in the affaires of God; these things goe not by discourse, but by reuelation.

No sooner hath the Star brought them within the noise of Ierusalem, then it is vanished out of sight: God would haue their eyes lead them so far, as till their tongues might be set on worke to win the vocall attestation of the chiefe Priests & Scribes, to the foreappointed place of our Sauiours natiuity: If the Star had carried them directly to Bethleē, the learned Iewes had neuer searched the truth of those prophecies, wherwith they are since iustly conuinced: God neuer withdraws our helps, but for a further aduantage; Howeuer our hopes seem crossed, where his Name may gain, we cānot cōplain of losse.

Little did the Sages thinke, this question would haue troubled Herod; they had (I feare) concealed their message, if they had suspected this euent: Sure, they thought it might be some Sonne, or grandchild of him, which then held the Throne, so as this might winne fauour from Herod, rather then an vnwelcome fear of riualitie. Doubtlesse they went first to the Court; where else should they aske for a King? The more pleasing this newes had bin, if it had falne vpon Herods owne loines, the more grieuous it was to light vpon a stranger: If Herod had not ouer-much affected greatnesse, he had not vpon those indirect termes aspired to the Crown of Iewry; so much the more therfore did it trouble him to heare the rumour of a successor, and that not of his owne. Setled greatnesse cannot abide either change, or partnership: If any of his subiects had moued this question I feare his head had answered it. It is well, that the name of forrainers could excuse these Sages: Herod could not be brought vp among the Iewes, & not haue heard many and confident reports of a Messias, that should ere long arise out of Israel; and now when he heares the fame of a King borne, whom a Star from heauen signifies and attends; he is netled with the newes: Euery thing affrights the guilty: Vsurpation is full of iealousies, and feare, no lesse full of proiects and imaginations; it makes vs think euery bush a man, and euery man a theefe.

Why art thou troubled (O Herod?) A King is borne, but such a King, as whose Scepter may euer concur with lawfull soueraignty; yea such a King, as by whom Kings doe hold their Scepters, not lose them: If the wise-men tell thee of a King, the Starre tells thee hee is heauenly: Here is good cause of security, none of feare: The most generall enmities and oppositions to good, arise from mistakings: If men could but know, how much safety and sweetnesse there is in all diuine truth, it could receiue nothing from them but welcomes and gratulations: Misconceits haue beene still guilty of all wrongs, and persecutions. But if Herod were troubled (as Tyranny is still suspitious) why was all Ierusalem troubled with him? Hierusalem which now might hope for a relaxation of her bonds, for a recouery of her liberty, and right! Hierusalem which now onely had cause to lift vp her drooping head in the ioy and happinesse of a redeemer? yet not Herods Court, but euen Hierusalem was troubled; so had this miserable City beene ouertoiled with change, that now they were setled in a condition quietly euill, they are troubled with the newes of better: They had now got a habit of seruility, & now they are so acquainted with the yoke, that the very noise of libertie, (which they supposed would not come with ease) began to be vnwelcome.

To turne the causes of ioy into sorrow, argues extreme deiectednesse, and a distemper of iudgement no lesse then desperate: Feare puts on a visor of deuotion; Herod calls his learned councell, & as not doubting, whether the Messiah should be borne, he askes, where he shal be borne? In the disparition of that other light, there is a perpetually fixed Star, shining in the writings of the Prophets, that guides the chiefe Priests & Scribes directly vnto Bethleem: As yet enuy, and preiudice had not blinded the eies, & peruerted the hearts of the Iewiſh teachers; ſo as now they clearely iuſtifie that Chriſt, whom they afterwards condemne, and by thus iuſtifying him, condemne themſelues in reiecting him: The water, that is vntroubled, yeelds the viſage perfectly: If God had no more witneſſe, but from his enemies, we haue ground enough of our faith.

Herod feared, but diſſembled his feare, as thinking it a ſhame that ſtrangers ſhould ſee there could any power ariſe vnder him, worthy of his reſpect or awe: Out of an vnwillingneſſe therefore to diſcouer the impotency of his paſſion, he makes little adoe of the matter, but only, after a priuy inquiſitiō into the time, imploies the informers in the ſearch of the perſon; Goe, and ſearch diligently for the Babe, &c. It was no great iourney from Ieruſalem to Bethleem; how eaſily might Herods cruelty haue ſecretly ſuborned ſome of his bloody Courtiers to this inquiry, and execution? If God had not meant to mock him, before he found himſelfe mocked of the wiſe men, he had rather ſent before their iourney, then after their diſappointment: But that God, in whoſe hands all hearts are, did purpoſely beſot him, that he might not finde the way to ſo horrible a miſchiefe.

There is no villany ſo great, but it will maske it ſelfe vnder a ſhew of piety: Herod will alſo worſhip the Babe; The courteſie of a falſe Tyrant is death; A crafty hypocrite neuer meanes ſo ill, as when he ſpeaketh faireſt: the wiſe-men are vpon their way ful of expectation, full of deſire; I ſee no man either of the City, or Court to accompany them; Whether diſtruſt, or feare hindred them, I inquire not: but of ſo many thouſand Iewes, no one ſtirs his foot to ſee that King of theirs, which ſtrangers came ſo far to viſite: yet were not theſe reſolute Sages diſcouraged with this ſolitarineſſe, and ſmall reſpect, nor drawne to repent of their iourney, as thinking, What doe we come ſo farre to honour a King whom no man will acknowledge? What meane we to trauell ſo many hundred miles to ſee that, which the inhabitants will not looke out to behold? but cheerfully renew their iourney to that place, which the ancient light of propheſie had deſigned; And now behold, God encourages their holy forwardneſſe from heauen, by ſending them their firſt guide, as if he had ſaid, What need ye care for the neglect of men, when ye ſee heauen honours the King whom ye ſeek? What ioy theſe Sages conceiued, when their eyes firſt beheld the re-appearance of that happy Starre, they onely can tell, that after a long and ſad night of tentation, haue ſeene the louing countenance of God ſhining forth vpon their ſoules: If with obedience and courage wee can follow the calling of God, in difficult enterpriſes, we ſhall not want ſupplies of comfort. Let not vs be wanting to God, we ſhall be ſure, he cannot be wanting to vs.

Hee that led Iſrael by a Pillar of fire into the Land of Promiſe, leads the wiſe-men by a Starre, to the Promiſed ſeed: All his directions partake of that light, which is in him; For God is light: this Star moues both ſlowly and low, as might be fitteſt for the pace, for the purpoſe of theſe Pilgrimes. It is the goodnes of God that in thoſe meanes wherin we cannot reach him, he deſcends vnto vs. Surely when the Wiſe-men ſaw the Star ſtand ſtill, they looked about to ſee, what Palace there might be neare vnto that ſtatiō, fit for the birth of a King, neither could they thinke that ſorry ſhed was it, which the Star meant to point out, but finding their guide ſetled ouer that baſe roofe, they go in to ſee, what gheſt it held. They enter, and, O God, what a King doe they finde! how poore? how contemptible? wrapt in clouts, laid in ſtraw, cradled in the manger, attended with beaſts! what a ſight was this, after all the glorious promiſes of that Star, after the predictions of Prophets, after the magnificence of their expectation?

All their way afforded nothing ſo deſpicable, as that Babe, whom they came to worſhip: But as thoſe, which could not haue bin wiſe-men, vnleſſe they had knowne that the greateſt glories haue ariſen from meane beginnings, they fall down, & worſhip that hidden maieſty: This baſeneſſe hath bred wonder in them, not contempt; they wel knew, the Star could not lie: they which ſaw his Star a far off in the Eaſt, when hee lay ſwadled in Bethleem, doe alſo ſee his roialty further off, in the deſpiſed eſtate of his infancy: A roialty more then humane: They well knew, that Stars did not vſe to attend earthly Kings; and if their ayme had not beene higher, what was a Iewiſh King to Perſian ſtrangers? anſwerable therfore hereunto was their adoration. Neither did they lift vp emptie hands to him, whom they worshipt, but presented him with the most precious commodities of their country, Gold, Incense, Myrrh; not as thinking to enrich him with these, but by way of homage acknowledging him the Lord of these: If these Sages had beene Kings, and had offered a Princely weight of gold, the blessed Virgin had not needed in her purification to haue offered two young pigeons, as the signe of her penury: As God loues not empty hands, so he measures fulnesse by the affection: Let it be Gold, or Incense, or Myrrh, that we offer him, it cannot but please him, who doth not vse to aske, how much, but how good.

The Purification.

THere could be no impurity in the Sonne of God, & if the best substance of a pure Virgin, carried in it any taint of Adam, that was scowred away by sanctification in the wombe, and yet the Sonne would be circumcised and the Mother purified: He that came to be sinne for vs, would in our persons be legally vncleane, that by satisfying the law, he might take away our vncleanesse: Though he were exempted from the common condition of our birth, yet he would not deliuer himselfe from those ordinary rites, that implied the weakenesse, & blemishes of humanity: He would fulfill one law to abrogate it, another to satisfie it; He that was aboue the Law, would come vnder the Law, to free vs from the Law: Not a day would be changed, either in the Circumcision of Christ, or the Purification of Mary. Here was neither conuenience of place, nor of necessaryes for so painfull a worke, in the stable of Bethleem; yet he that made, and gaue the Law, will rather keepe it with difficulty, than transgresse it with ease.

Why wouldest thou, O blessed Sauiour, suffer that sacred foreskin to be cut off but that by the power of thy circumcision, the same might be done to our soules, that was done to thy body? we cannot be therefore thine, if our hearts bee vncircumcised: Doe thou that in vs, which was done to thee for vs; cut off the superfluitie of our maliciousnes, that we may be holy, in, & by thee, which for vs wert content to be legally impure.

There was shame in thy birth, there was paine in thy circumcision: After a contemptible welcome into the world, that a sharp rasor should passe thorow thy skin for our sakes, (which can hardly endure to bleed for our owne) it was the praise of thy wonderfull mercy, in so early humiliation: What paine, or contempt should we refuse for thee, that hast made no spare of thy selfe for vs? Now is Bethleem left with too much honour, there is Christ borne, adored, circumcised: No sooner is the blessed virgin either able, or allowed to walke, than she trauels to Ierusalem, to performe her holy Rites for her selfe, for her Son; to purifie her-selfe, to present her son: She goes not to her owne house at Nazareth, shee goes to Gods House at Ierusalem: If purifying were a shadow, yet thanksgiuing is a substance: Those whom God hath blessed with fruit of body, and safety of deliuerance, if they make not their first iourney to the Temple of God, they partake more of the vnthankfulnesse of Eue, than Maries deuotion.

Her forty daies therefore were no sooner out, than Mary comes vp to the holy City. The rumour of a new King borne at Bethleem, was yet fresh at Ierusalem, since the report of the wise-men: & what good newes had this beene for any picke-thanke to carry to the Court, Here is the Babe, whom the Starre signified, whom the Sages inquired for, whom the Angells proclaimed, whom the Shepherds talkt of, whom the Scribes and high Priests notified, whom Herod seekes after? Yet vnto that Ierusalem, which was troubled at the report of his Birth, is Christ come, and all tongues are so lockt vp, that he, which sent frō Ierusalem to Bethleem to seeke him, findes him not, who (as to countermine Herod) is come from Bethleem to Ierusalem. Dangers that are aloose off, and but possible, may not hinder vs from the duty of our deuotion: God saw it not yet time to let loose the fury of his aduersaries, whom hee holds vp, like some eager mastiues, & then onely lets goe, when they shall most shame themselues, & glorifie him.

munity from all ceremonies of purification; what ſhould I neede purging, which did not conceiue in ſinne? This is for thoſe mothers, whoſe births are vncleane, mine is from God, which is purity it ſelfe: The law of Moſes reaches onely to thoſe women, which haue conceiued ſeed, I conceiued not this ſeed, but the Holy Ghoſt in me: The law extends to the mothers of thoſe ſons, which are vnder the law, mine is aboue it. But as one, that cared more for her peace, than her priuiledge, & more deſired to be free frō offence, than from labour & charge, ſhe dutifully fulfils the Law of that God, whom ſhe carried in her wombe, & in her armes: Like the mother of him, who though he knew the children of the Kingdome free: yet would pay tribute vnto Cæſar: Like the mother of him, whom it behoued to fulfill all righteouſneſſe: And if ſhe were ſo efficious in ceremonies, as not to admit of any excuſe in the very circumſtance of her obedience, how much more ſtrict was ſhe in the maine duties of moralitie? That ſoule is fit for the Spirituall conception of Chriſt, that is conſcionably ſcrupulous in obſeruing all Gods Commandements, whereas he hates all alliance to a negligent, or froward heart.

The law of Purification proclaimes our vncleanneſſe: The mother is not allowed after her child-birth to come vnto the Sanctuary, or to touch any hallowed thing, till her ſet time be expired; What are we whoſe very birth infects the mother that beares vs? At laſt, ſhe comes to the Temple, but with ſacrifices, either a Lambe, & a Pigeon, or Turtle, or (in the meaner eſtate) two Turtle doues, or yong Pigeons: Whereof one is for a burnt offring, the other for a ſin-offring: The one for thanksgiuing, the other for expiation: For expiation of a double ſinne, of the mother, that conceiued, of the childe, that was conceiued. We are all born ſinners, & it is a iuſt queſtion, whether we doe more infect the world, or the world vs? They are groſſe flatterers of nature, that tell her, ſhe is clean: If our liues had no ſin, we bring enough with vs; the very infant, that liues not to ſinne as Adam, yet he ſinned in Adam, & is ſinfull in himſelfe. But oh, the vnſpeakeable mercy of our God! we prouide the ſin, he prouides the remedy: Behold an expiation welneare, as early, as our ſin; the bloud of a young lambe, or doue, yea rather the bloud of Him, whoſe innocence was repreſented by both, cleanſeth vs preſently from our filthineſſe. Firſt, went circumciſion, then came the ſacrifice, that by two holy acts, that which was naturally vnholy, might be hallowed vnto God: Vnder the Goſpell our Baptiſme hath the force of both: It does away our corruption by the water of the Spirit: It applies to vs the ſacrifice of Chriſts bloud, wherby we are cleāſed: Oh that we could magnifie this goodnes of our God, which hath not left our very infancy without redreſſe, but hath prouided helps, wherby we may be deliuered from the danger of our hereditary euils.

Such is the fauourable reſpect of our wiſe God, that he would not haue vs vndoe our ſelues with deuotion: the ſeruice he requires of vs, is ruled by our abilities: Euery poore mother was not able to bring a lambe for her offring: there was none ſo poore, but might procure a paire of turtles or pigeons. Theſe doth God both preſcribe, and accept from poorer hands, no leſſe, than the beaſts of a thouſand mountaines: Hee lookes for ſomewhat of euery one, not of euery one alike: Since it is he, that makes differences of abilities (to whom it were as eaſie to make all rich) his mercy will make no difference in the acceptation: The truth and heartineſſe of obedience is that, which hee will crowne in his meaneſt ſeruants: A mite from the poore widdow, is more worth to him, than the talents of the wealthy.

After all the preſents of thoſe Eaſterne worſhippers (who intended rather homage, than ditation (the bleſſed Virgin comes in the forme of pouerty with her two doues vnto God; ſhe could not without ſome charge lie all this while at Bethleem, ſhe could not without charge trauell from Bethleem to Ieruſalem; Her offring confeſſeth her penury; The beſt are not euer the wealthieſt: Who can deſpiſe any one for want, when the mother of Chriſt was not rich enough to bring a lambe for her purification? We may be as happy in ruſſet, as in tiſſue.

While the bleſſed Virgin brought her Son into the Temple, with that paire of doues, here were more doues than a paire: They, for whoſe ſake that offring was brought, were more doues, than the doues that were brought for that offring: Her Son, for whom ſhe brought that doue to be ſacrificed, was that ſacrifice, which the doue repreſēted: There was nothing in him but perfection, of innocence, & the oblation of him is that, whereby all mothers and ſons are fully purified. Since in our ſelues we cannot be innocent, happy are we, if we can haue the ſpotleſſe Doue ſacrificed for vs, to make vs innocent in him.

The bleſſed Virgin had more buſineſſe in the temple then her owne; ſhe came, as to purifie her ſelfe, ſo to preſent her Son: Euery male that firſt opened the wombe, was holy vnto the Lord. He that was the Son of God by eternall generation before times, & by miraculous conception in time, was alſo by cõmon courſe of nature conſecrate vnto God: It is fit the holy mother ſhould preſent God with his own: Her firſt born was the firſt born of all creatures; It was he, whoſe Temple it was, that he was preſented in, to whom all the firſt born of all creatures were conſecrated, by whom they were accepted; and now is he brought in his mothers armes to his owne houſe, and as man is preſented to himſelfe as God. If Moſes had neuer written Law of Gods ſpeciall proprietie in the firſt borne, this Son of Gods Eſſence and Loue had taken poſſeſſion of the Temple: His right had beene a perfect law to himſelfe: Now his obedience to that law: which himſelfe had giuen, doth no leſſe call him thither, than the challenge of his peculiar intereſt.

He that was the Lord of all creatures (euer ſince he ſtrooke the firſt born of the Egyptians) requires the firſt male of all creatures, both man & beaſt, to be dedicated to him; wherein God cauſed a miraculous euent to ſecond nature, which ſeemes to challenge the firſt & beſt for the Maker: By this rule, God ſhould haue had his ſeruice done only by the hieres of Iſrael: But ſince God, for the honor & remuneration of Leui, had choſen out that Tribe to miniſter vnto him, now the firſt borne of all Iſrael muſt be preſented to God, as his due, but by allowance redeemed to their parents: As for beaſts, the firſt male of the cleane beaſts muſt be ſacrificed, of vnclean exchanged for a price. So much morality is there in this conſtitution of God, that the beſt of all kindes is fit to be conſecrated to the Lord of all, Euery thing we haue is too good for vs, if we thinke any thing we haue too good for him.

How glorious did the Temple now ſeeme, that the Owner was within the walls of it? Now was the houre, & gheſt come, in regard whereof the ſecõd Temple ſhold ſurpaſſe the firſt: this was his houſe built for him, dedicated to him: There had he dwelt long in his ſpirituall Preſẽce, in his typicall: There was nothing either placed, or done within thoſe walls, wherby he was not reſembled, & now the body of thoſe ſhadowes is come, & preſents himſelfe, where he had been euer repreſẽted: Ieruſalem is now euery where: There is no Church, no Chriſtian hart, which is not a Temple of the liuing God: There is no Temple of God wherein Chriſt is not preſented to his Father: Looke vpon him (O God) in whom thou art wel pleaſed, & in him, and for him be well pleaſed with vs.

Vnder the Goſpell we are all firſt-borne, all heires: Euery ſoule is to bee holy vnto the Lord, we are a royall generation, an holy Prieſthood: Our baptiſme as it is our circumciſion, and our ſacrifice of purification, ſo is it alſo our preſentation vnto God: Nothing can become vs but holineſſe. O God, to whom we are deuoted, ſerue thy ſelfe of vs, glorifie thy ſelfe by vs, till we ſhall by thee be glorified with thee.

WEll might theſe wiſe men haue ſuſpected Herods ſecrecy; If hee had meant well, what needed that whiſpering? That which they publiſhed in the ſtreets, he asks in his priuy chamber; yet they not miſdoubting his intention purpoſe to fulfil his charge: It could not in their apprehenſion but be much honour to them, to make their ſucceſſe knowne, that now both King and people might ſee, it was not fancie that led them, but an aſſured reuelation: That God, which brought them thither, diuerted them, & cauſed their eies ſhut, to guide them the beſt way home.

Theſe Sages made a happy voyage: for now they grew into further acquaintance with God: They are honoured with a ſecond meſſenger from heauen: They ſaw the ſtarre in the way, the Angell in their bed: The ſtarr guided their iourney vnto Chriſt, the Angell directed their returne: They ſaw the ſtarre by day, a viſion by night: God ſpake to their

eies by the ſtarre, he ſpeakes to their heart by a dreame: No doubt, they had left much noiſe of Chriſt behinde them: they that did ſo publiſh his birth by their inquiry at Ieruſalem, could not be ſilent when they found him at Bethleem. If they had returned by Herod, I feare they had come ſhort home; He that meant death to the Babe for the name of a King, could meane no other to thoſe that honoured and proclaimed a new King, and erected a Throne beſides his: they had done what they came for; and now that God, whoſe buſineſſe they came about, takes order at once for his Sonnes ſafety, & for theirs: God, which is perfection it ſelfe, neuer beginnes any buſineſſe, but he makes an end, and ends happily; When our waies are his, there is no danger of miſcariage.

Well did theſe wiſe-men know the difference, as of ſtars, ſo of dreames; they had learned to diſtinguiſh betweene the naturall and diuine; & once apprehending God in their ſleepe, they follow him waking, & returne another way. They were no ſubiects to Herod, his command preſſed them ſo much the leſſe, or if the being within his dominions had bine no leſſe bound, than natiue ſubiection, yet where God d.d countermand Herod, there could be no queſtion, whom to obey. The ſay not, We are in a ſtrange countrey, Herod may meet with vs, It can be no leſſe than death to mocke him in his owne territories; but cheerfully put themſelues vpon the way, & truſt God with the ſucceſſe: Where men command with God, we muſt obey men for God, and God in men; when againſt him, the beſt obedience is to deny obedience, & to turne our backes vpon Herod.

The wiſe-men are ſafely arriued in the Eaſt, and fill the world full of expectation, as themſelues are full of wonder: Ioſeph and Mary are returned with the Babe to that Ieruſalem, where the wiſe men had inquired for his birth. The Citie was doubtleſſe ſtil full of that rumor, and little thinkes, that he whom they talke of, was ſo neere them: From thence they are, at leaſt in their way to Nazareth, where they purpoſe their abode: God preuents them by his Angell, and ſends them for ſafety into Egypt; Ioſeph was not wont to bee ſo full of viſions: It was not long ſince the Angell appeared vnto him to iuſtifie the innocency of the mother, and the Deity of the Sonne; now hee appeares for the preſeruation of both, and a preſeruation by flight: Could Ioſeph now chooſe, but thinke, Is this the King, that muſt ſaue Iſrael, that needs to be ſaued by me? If he be the Sonne of God, how is he ſubiect to the violence of men? How is he Almighty, that muſt ſaue himſelfe by flight? or how muſt be flie to ſaue himſelfe out of that land, which he comes to ſaue? But faithfull Ioſeph hauing beene once tutored by the Angell, and hauing heard, what the wiſe-men ſaid of the Starre, what Simeon & Anna ſaid in the Temple, labours not ſo much to reconcile his thoughts, as to ſubiect them; and as one, that knew it ſafer to ſuppreſſe doubts, than to aſſoile them, can beleeue, what he vnderſtands not; and can wonder, where he cannot comprehend.

Oh ſtrange condition of the King of all the world! He could not be borne in a baſer eſtate, yet euen this he cannot enioy with ſafety. There was no roome for him in Bethleem, there will be no roome for him in Iudea: He is no ſooner come to his owne, than he muſt flie from them; that he may ſaue them, he muſt auoid them: Had it not beene eaſie for thee (O Sauiour) to haue acquit thy ſelfe from Herod, a thouſand waies? What could and arme of fleſh haue done againſt the God of ſpirits? What had it beene for thee to haue ſet Herod fiue yeeres ſooner vnto his place? what to haue commanded fire from heauen on thoſe, that ſhould haue come to apprehend thee? or to haue bidden the earth to receiue them aliue, whom ſhe meant to ſwallow dead? We ſuffer miſery, becauſe we muſt; thou, becauſe thou wouldeſt: The ſame will that brought thee from heauen into earth, ſends thee from Iury to Egypt; as thou wouldſt be borne meane and miſerable, ſo thou wouldſt liue ſubiect to humane vexations, that thou, which haſt taught vs how good it is to beare the yoake euen in our youth, mightſt ſanctifie to vs early afflictions. Or whether (O Father) ſince it was the purpoſe of thy wiſdom to manifeſt thy Sonne by degrees vnto the world, was it thy will thus to hide him for a time, vnder our infirmity? & what other is our condition? we are no ſooner borne thine, than we are perſecuted. If the Church trauell, and bring forth a male, ſhe is in danger of the Dragons ſtreames: What doe the members complaine of the ſame meaſure, which

Euen of thoſe, whoſe mature age is full of trouble, yet the infancie is commonly quiet, but here life and toile began together. O bleſſed Virgin! euen already did the ſword begin to pierce thy ſoule: thou which wert forced to beare thy Son in thy wombe, from Nazareth to Bethleem, muſt now beare him in thy armes from Iury into Egypt; yet couldſt thou not complaine of the way, whileſt thy Sauiour was with thee: His preſence alone was able to make the ſtable a Temple, Egypt a Paradiſe, the way more pleaſing than reſt. But whither then? O whither doſt thou carry that bleſſed burthen, by which thy ſelfe & the world are vpholden? To Egypt, the ſlaughter houſe of Gods people, the furnace of Iſraels ancient affliction, the ſinke of the world: Out of Egypt haue I called my Son (ſaith God.) That thou calledſt thy Sonne out of Egypt, O God, is no maruell; It is a maruell, that thou calledſt him into Egypt; but that we know, all earths are thine, and all places and men are like figures vpon a table, ſuch as thy diſpoſition makes them: What a change is here? Iſrael the firſt borne of God, flies out of Egypt, into the promiſed Land of Iudea; Chriſt the Firſt borne of all creatures, flies from Iudea into Egypt: Egypt is become the Sanctuary, Iudea the Inquiſition-houſe of the Sonne of God: He, that is euery where the ſame, makes all places alike to his: He makes the fiery furnace a gallery of pleaſure, the Lyons denne an houſe of defence, the Whales belly a lodging chamber, Egypt an harbour.

Hee flees that was able to preſerue himſelfe from danger, to teach vs, how lawfully we may flee from thoſe dangers, wee cannot auoid otherwiſe. It is a thankleſſe fortitude, to offer our throat vnto the knife: Hee, that came to die for vs, fled for his owne preſeruation, and hath bid vs follow him; When they preſecute you in one Citie, flee into another: We haue but the vſe of our liues, and wee are bound to husband them to the beſt aduantage of God and his Church: God hath made vs, not as Butts to be perpetually ſhot at, but as the marks of rouers moueable, as the wind and ſunne may beſt ſerue.

It was warrant enough for Ioſeph and Mary that God commands them to flee, yet ſo familiar is God growne with his approued ſeruants, that he giues them the reaſon of his commãded flight: (For Herod will ſeeke the yong childe to deſtroy him:) What wicked men will doe, what they would doe, is knowne vnto God before-hand: He that is ſo infinitely wiſe to know the deſignes of his enemies before they are, could as eaſily preuent them, that they might not be, but he lets them runne on in their owne courſes, that he may fetch glory to himſelfe out of their wickednеſſe.

Good Ioſeph hauing this charge in the night, ſtaies not till the morning; no ſooner had God ſaid Ariſe, then he ſtarts vp and ſets forward: It was not diffidence, but obedience that did ſo haſten his departure; The charge was direct, the buſines important: He dares not linger for the light, but breakes his reſt for the iourney, and taking vantage of the darke, departs towards Egypt: How knew he this occaſion would abide any delay? We cannot be too ſpeedy in the execution of Gods commands, we may be too late: Here was no treaſure to hide, no hangings to take downe, no lands to ſecure; The poore Carpenter needs doe no more but locke the doores, and away: He goes lightly that wants a lode: If there be more pleaſure in abundance, there is more ſecurity in a meane eſtate: The Buſtard or the Oſtridge, when he is purſued, can hardly get vpon his wings, wheras the Larke mounts with eaſe. The rich hath not ſo much aduantage of the poore in the enioying, as the poore hath of the rich in leauing.

Now is Ioſeph come downe into Egypt: Egypt was beholden to the name, as that whereto it did owe no leſſe than their vniuerſall preſeruation: Well might it repay this act of Hoſpitality to that name and bloud: the going down into Egypt had not ſo much difficulty, as the ſtaying there: Their abſence from their countrey was little better than a baniſhment; but what was this other, than to ſerue a prentiſhip in the houſe of bondage? to be any where ſaue at home, was irkeſome: but to be in Egypt ſo many yeares amongſt idolatrous Pagans, muſt needs be painefull to religious hearts: The Command of their God, and the Preſence of Chriſt makes amends for all: How long ſhould they haue thought it to ſee the Temple of God, if they had not had the God of the Temple with them? How long to preſent their ſacrifices at the Altar of God, if they had not had him with them, which made all ſacrifices accepted, and which did accept the ſacrifice of their hearts?

Herod was ſubtle in mocking the wiſe-men, whiles he promiſed to worſhip him whom he meant to kill; now God makes the wiſe-men to mocke him, in diſappointing his expectation: It is iuſt with God to puniſh thoſe, which would beguile others with illuſion: Great ſpirits are ſo much more impatient of diſgrace; How did Herod now rage, and fret, and vainely wiſh to haue met with thoſe falſe ſpies, and tells, with what torments he would reuenge their trechery, and curſes himſelfe for truſting ſtrangers in ſo important a buſineſſe?

The Tyrants ſuſpition wold not let him reſt long: Ere many daies he ſends to inquire of them, whom he ſent to inquire of Chriſt. The notice of their ſecret departure increaſeth his ielouſie, & now his anger runnes mad, & his feare proues deſperate: All the infants of Bethleem ſhall bleed for this one; And (that he may make ſure worke) he cuts out to himſelfe large meaſures both of time, & place: It was but very lately that the Starre appeared, that the wiſe-men re-appeared not: They asked for him that was borne, they did not name when he was borne: Herod for more ſecuritie ouer-reaches their time, & fetches into the ſlaughter all the children of two years age: The Prieſts and Scribes had told him, the towne of Bethleem muſt be the place of the Meſſia's natiuity: He fetches in all the children of the coaſts adioyning; yea his owne ſhall for the time be a Bethlee mite: A tyrannous guiltineſſe neuer thinkes it ſelfe ſafe, but euer ſeekes to aſſure it ſelfe in the exceſſe of cruelty. Doubtleſſe he, which ſo priuily inquired for Chriſt, did as ſecretly brew this maſſacre: The mothers were ſet with their children on their laps, feeding them with the breſt, or talking to them in the familiar language of their loue, when ſuddenly the Executioner ruſhes in, and ſnatches them from their armes, and at once pulling forth his Commiſſion and his knife, without regard to ſhrikes or teares, murthers the innocent babe, and leaues the paſſionate mother in a meane betweene madneſſe and death. What curſing of Herod? what wringing of hands? what condoling? what exclaiming was now in the ſtreets of Bethleem?

O bloudy Herod, that couldſt ſacrifice ſo many harmleſſe liues to thine ambition! What could thoſe infants haue done? If it were thy perſon, whereof thou wert afraid, what likelihood was it, thou couldſt liue, till thoſe ſucklings might endanger thee? This newes might affect thy ſucceſſors, it could not concerne thee, if the heate of an impotent & furious enuy had not made thee thirſty of bloud: It is not long, that thou ſhalt enioy this cruelty; After a few hateful yeers, thy ſoul ſhal feel the weight of ſo many innocents, of ſo many iuſt curſes.

He, for whoſe ſake thou killedſt ſo many, ſhall ſtrike thee with death; & then what wouldeſt thou haue giuen to haue bin as one of thoſe infants whom thou murtheredſt? In the meane time, when thine executioners returned, and told thee of their vnpartiall diſpatch, thou ſmiledſt to thinke, how thou had defeated thy riuall, and beguiled the ſtarre, and deluded the propheſies, whiles God in heauen, & his Son on earth laugh thee to ſcorne, and make thy rage an occaſion of further glory to him, whom thou meanteſt to ſuppreſſe.

He that could take away the liues of other, cannot protract his owne: Herod is now ſent home; The coaſt is cleare for the returne of that holy family; Now God cals them from their exile: Chriſt and his Mother had not ſtayed ſo long out of the confines of the reputed viſible Church, but to teach vs continuance vnder the Croſſe: Sometimes God ſees it good for vs not to ſip of the cup of affliction, but to make a diet-drink of it, for conſtant and common vſe: If he allow vs no other liquor for may yeeres, we muſt take it off cheerefully, and know, that it is but the meaſure of our betters.

Ioſeph & Mary ſtirre not without a command; their departure, ſtay, remoouall is ordered by the voice of God: If Egypt had bin more tedious vnto them, they durſt not moue their foot, till they were biddē: It is good in our own buſines to follow reaſon, or cuſtome: but in Gods buſines, if we haue any other guide but himſelf, we preſume, & cānot expect a bleſſing.

O the wonderfull diſpenſation of God in concealing of himſelfe from men! Chriſt was now ſome fiue yeeres old; he beares himſelfe as an infant, & knowing all things, neither takes nor giues notice of ought concerning his remoouall & diſpoſing, but appoints that to be done by his Angell, which the Angel could not haue done, but by him: Since he would take our nature, he would be a perfect child, ſuppreſſing the manifeſtation & exerciſe of that God head, whereto that infant-nature was conioyned. Euen ſo, O Sauiour, the humility of thine infancy was anſwerable to that of thy birth: The more thou hideſt and abaſeſt thy ſelfe for vs, the more ſhould we magnifie thee, the more ſhould we deiect our ſelues for thee.

TO THE HONORABLE GENERALL, SIR EDVVARD CECILL KNIGHT,

Moſt Honored Sir,

THe ſtore of a good Scribe is (according to our Sauiour) both old and new; I would (if I durſt) be ambitious of this onely honor; hauing therefore drawne forth thoſe not-friuolous thoughts, out of the old Teſtament, I fetch theſe following from the new; God is the ſame in both; as the body differs not with the age of the ſute, with the change of robes: The olde and new wine of holy Truth, came both out of one vineyard; yet here may wee ſafely ſay to the Word of his Father, as was ſaid to the Bridegroome of Cana, Thou haſt kept the beſt wine till the laſt; The authority of both is equally ſacred; the vſe admits no leſſe difference, than is betwixt a Sauiour fore-ſhadowed, and come. The intermiſſion of thoſe military imployments, which haue won you iuſt honor, both in forraine nations, and at home, is in this only gainefull, that it yeelds you leaſure to theſe happy thoughts, which ſhall more fully acquaint you with him that is at once the God of Hoſts, & the Prince of Peace: To the furtherance whereof theſe my poore labours ſhall doe no thankeleſſe offices. In lieu of your noble fauours to me both at home, and where you haue merited command, nothing can bee returned but humble acknowledgements, and hearty prayers for the increaſe of your Honor, and all happineſſe to your ſelfe, and your thrice-worthy and vertuous Lady, by him that is deeply obliged, and truly deuoted to you both,

Ios. HALL.

THE SECOND BOOKE.

Christ among the Doctors.

EVen the Spring ſhewes vs what wee may hope for of the tree in Summer; In his nonage therefore, would our Sauiour giue vs a taſte of his future proofe, leſt, if his perfection ſhould haue ſhewed it ſelfe without warning to the world, it ſhould haue beene entertained with more wonder, than beliefe; now this act of his Childhood ſhall prepare the faith of men by fore-expectation: notwithſtanding all this early demonſtration of his diuine graces, the incredulous Iewes could afterwards ſay, Whence hath this man his wiſdome and great works? What would they haue ſaid, if hee had ſuddenly leapt forth into the cleare light of the world? The Sun would dazle all eyes, if he ſhould breake forth at his firſt riſing into his full ſtrength; now he hath both the day ſtar to goe before him, and to bid men looke for that glorious body, and the liuely colours of the day, to publiſh his approach; the eye is comforted, not hurt by his apperance.

The Parents of Chriſt went vp yeerely to Ieruſalem at the feaſt of the Paſſouer; the law was only for the males: I doe not finde the bleſſed Virgin bound to this voiage, the weaker ſex receiued indulgence from God: yet ſhe knowing the ſpirituall profit of that iourney, takes paines voluntarily to meaſure that long way euery yeare; piety regards not any diſtinction of ſexes or degrees, neither yet doth Gods acceptation; rather doth it pleaſe the mercy of the higheſt more to reward that ſeruice, which, though he like in all, yet out of fauour he will not impoſe vpon all. It could not be but that ſhee whom the holy Ghoſt ouerſhaddowed, ſhould be zealous of Gods ſeruice: thoſe that will goe no further then they are dragged in their religious exerciſes, are no whit of kin to her whom all generations ſhall call bleſſed.

The childe Ieſus in the minority of his age, went vp with his Parents to the holy ſolemnity, not this yeare onely, but in all likelihood others alſo; hee, in the power of whoſe Godhead, and by the motion of whoſe Spirit, all others aſcended thither, would not himſelfe ſtay at home. In all his examples he meant our inſtruction: this pious act of his nonage intended to leade our firſt yeares into timely deuotion. The firſt liquor ſeaſons the veſſell for a long time after: It is euery way good for a man to beare Gods yoke, euen from his infancy: it is the policie of the Deuill to diſcourage early holineſſe: he that goes out betimes in the morning, is more like to diſpatch his iourney, then he that lingers till the day be ſpent. This bleſſed Family came not to looke at the feaſt and be gone; but they duly ſtaid out all the appointed dayes of vnleauened bread: they and the reſt of Iſrael could not want houſhold buſineſſes at home; thoſe ſecular affaires could not either keepe them from repairing to Ieruſalem, or ſend them away immaturely; Worldly cares muſt giue place to the ſacred: Except wee will depart vnbleſſed, we muſt attend Gods ſeruices till we may receiue his diſmiſſion.

It

It was the fashion of those times and places, that they went vp, and so returned by troupes, to those set meetings of their holy festiualls. The whole Parish of Nazareth went and came together. Good fellowship doth no way so well, as in the passage to Heauen: much comfort is added by society to that iourney, which is of it selfe pleasant; It is an happy word, Come let vs goe vp to the house of the Lord. Mutuall incouragement is none of the least benefits of our holy assemblies: Many sticks laid together, make a good fire, which if they lie single, lose both their light and heat.

The feast ended, what should they doe but returne to Nazareth? Gods seruices may not be so attended, as that wee should neglect our particular callings: Himselfe cals vs from his owne House to ours, and takes pleasure to see a painfull Client: They are foully mistaken, that thinke God cares for no other trade but deuotion: Piety and diligence must keepe meet changes with each other; neither doth God lesse accept of our returne to Nazareth, then our going vp to Ierusalem:

I cannot thinke that the blessed Virgine, or good Ioseph, could be so negligent of their diuine charge, as not to call the childe Iesus to their setting forth from Ierusalem: But their back was no sooner turned vpon the Temple, than his face was towards it; he had businesse in that place, when theirs was ended: there he was both worshipped and represented: He, in whom the Godhead dwelt bodily, could doe nothing without God: his true Father led him away from his supposed: Sometimes the affaires of our ordinary vocation, may not grudge to yeeld vnto spirituall occasions: The Parents of Christ knew him well, to be of a disposition, not strange, nor sullen and stoicall, but sweet and sociable: and therefore they supposed, he had spent the time and the way, in company of their friends and neighbours: They doe not suspect him wandred into the solitary fields: but when euening came, they goe to seeke him among their kinsfolke and acquaintance. If he had not wonted to conuerse formerly with them, hee had not now beene sought amongst them: Neither as God, nor man, doth he take pleasure in a sterne froward austerity, and wilde retiredness: but in a milde affableness, and amiable conuersation.

But, O blessed Virgine, who can expresse the sorrowes of thy perplexed soule, when all that euening-search could affoord thee no newes of thy Sonne Iesus? Was not this one of those swords of Simeon, which should pierce thorow thy tender breast? How didst thou chide thy credulous neglect, in not obseruing so precious a charge, and blame thine eyes, for once looking beside this obiect of thy loue? How didst thou, with thy carefull husband, spend that restlesse night, in mutuall expostulations and bemonings of your losse? How many suspitious imaginations did that while racke thy grieued spirit? Perhaps thou mightest doubt, lest they which laid for him, by Herods command, at his birth, had now by the secret instigation of Archelaus, surprised him in his childhood: or it may be thou thoughtest thy diuine Son had now withdrawn himselfe from the earth, and returned to his heauenly Glory, without warning: or peraduenture thou studiest with thy selfe, whether any carelesnesse on thy behalfe, had not giuen occasion to this absence.

O deare Sauiour who can misse and not mourne for thee? Neuer any soule conceiued thee by faith, that was lesse afflicted with the sense or thy desertion, then comforted with the ioy of thy presence: Iust is that sorrow, and those teares seasonable, that are bestowed vpon thy losse; What comfort are we capable of, whiles we want thee? What relish is there in these earthly delights without thee? What is there to mitigate our passionate discomforts, if not from thee? Let thy selfe loose, O my soule, to the fulnesse of sorrow, when thou findest thy selfe bereaued of him, in whose presence is the fulnes of ioy, and deny to receiue comfort from any thing saue from his returne.

In vaine is Christ sought among his kindred, according to the flesh: So far are they still from giuing vs their aide, to finde the true Messias, that they leade vs from him: Back againe therefore are Ioseph and Mary gone to seeke him at Ierusalem: She goes about in the City, by the streets and by the open places, & seekes him whom her soule loueth: she sought him for the time, & found him not. Do we think she spared her search?

The euening of her returne, ſhe haſtes to the Inne, where ſhe had left him, where miſſing him, ſhe inquires of euery one ſhe met, Haue you not ſeene him, whom my ſoule loueth? At laſt, the third day, ſhe findes him in the Temple: One day was ſpent in the iourney towards Galile; another in the returne to Ieruſalem: The third day recouers him: He, who would riſe againe the third day, and be found amongſt the liuing, now alſo would the third day be found of his Parents, after the ſorrow of his abſence. But where wert thou, O bleſſed Ieſu, for the ſpace of theſe three dayes? where didſt thou beſtow thy ſelfe, or who tended thee, whiles thou wert thus alone at Ieruſalem? I know, if Ieruſalem ſhould haue beene as vnkinde to thee as Bethleem, thou couldſt haue commanded the Heauens to harbour thee, and if men did not miniſter to thee, thou couldeſt haue commanded the ſeruice of Angels; but ſince the forme of a ſeruant called thee to a voluntary homelineſſe, whether it pleaſed thee to exerciſe thy ſelfe thus early with the difficulties of a ſtranger, or to prouide miraculouſly for thy ſelfe; I inquire not, ſince thou reuealeſt not; onely this I know, that hereby thou intendedſt to teach thy Parents, that thou couldeſt liue without them, and that not of any indigency, but out of a gracious diſpenſation, thou wouldeſt ordinarily depend vpon their care.

In the meane time, thy diuine wiſdome could not but fore-know all theſe corroding thoughts, wherewith the heart of thy deare mother muſt needes bleed, through this ſudden dereliction; yet wouldeſt thou leaue her for the time to her ſorrow: Euen ſo, O Sauiour, thou thoughteſt fit to viſit her, that bore thee, with this early affliction; Neuer any loued thee, whom thou doeſt not ſometimes exerciſe with the griefe of miſſing thee, that both we may be more carefull to hold thee, and more ioyfull in recouering thee. Thou haſt ſaid, and canſt not lie, I am with you to the end of the world: but euen whiles thou art really preſent, thou thinkeſt good to be abſent vnto our apprehenſions: yet if thou leaue vs, thou wilt not forſake vs; if thou leaue vs for our humiliation, thou wilt not forſake vs to our finall diſcomfort; thou mayeſt for three dayes hide thy ſelfe, but then we ſhall finde thee in the Temple; None euer ſought thee with a ſincere deſire, of whom thou wert not found: Thou wilt not be either ſo little abſent, as not to whet our appetites, nor ſo long, as to fainten the heart; After three dayes we ſhall finde thee; and where ſhould we rather hope to finde thee than in the Temple? There is the habitation for the God of Iſrael, there is thy reſting place for euer; Oh all ye that are grieued with the want of your Sauiour, ſee where you muſt ſeeke him: In vaine ſhall ye hope to finde him in the ſtreets, in the Tauernes, in the Theaters: ſeeke him in his holy Temple: Seeke him with piety, ſeeke him with faith, there ſhall ye meet him, there ſhall ye recouer him. Whiles children of that age were playing in the ſtreets, Chriſt was found ſitting in the Temple, not to gaze on the outward glory of that houſe, or on the golden Candleſtickes, or Tables, but to heare and appoſe the Doctors; He, who as God, gaue them all the wiſdome they had, as the Sonne of man hearkens to the wiſdome he had giuen them: He, who ſate in their hearts, as the Author of all learning and knowledge, ſits in the midſt of their ſchoole, as an humble Diſciple: That by learning of them, he might teach all the younger ſort humility, and due attendance vpon their Inſtructours; hee could at the firſt haue taught the great Rabbins of Iſrael the deepe myſteries of God; but becauſe he was not yet called by his Father, to the publique function of a Teacher, he contents himſelfe to heare with diligence, and to aske with modeſty, and to teach onely by inſinuation. Let thoſe conſider this, which will needes run as ſoone as they can goe: and when they finde ability, thinke they need not ſtay for a further vocation of God or men. Open your eyes, ye rathe ripe inuaders of Gods Chaire: and ſee your Sauiour in his yonger yeeres, not ſitting in the eminent pulpits of the Doctors, but in the lowly floores of the Auditors: See him that could haue taught the Angells, liſtning in his minority to the voice of men; Who can thinke much to learne of the Ancients when he lookes vpon the Sonne of God, ſitting at the feet of the Doctors of Iſrael? Firſt he heares, then he askes: how much more doth it concerne vs to be hearers, ere we offer to be teachers of others? he gathers that heares, he ſpends that teacheth; if we ſpend before we gather, we ſhall ſoone proue bankrupts.

When

When he hath heard, he askes, and after that, he answers: doubtlesse those very questions were instructions, and meant to teach more than to learne: Neuer had these great Rabbins heard the voice of such a tutor; in whom they might see the wisedome of God so concealing it selfe, that yet it would be knowne to be there: Now maruel then if they all wondred at his vnderstanding and answers: Their eyes saw nothing but humane weakenesse, their eares heard diuine sublimity of matter; betwixt what they saw, and what they heard, they could not but be distracted with a doubting admiration. And why did yee not (O ye Iewish teachers) remember, That to vs a Childe is borne, and vnto vs a Sonne is giuen, and the gouernment is vpon his shoulder, & his name shall be called Wonderful Counsellor, the mighty God, the euerlasting Father, the Prince of peace? Why did ye not now bethinke your selues, what the Star, the Sages, the Angels, the Shepheards, Zachary, Simeon, Anna, had premonished you? Fruitlesse is the wonder that endeth not in faith; No light is sufficient where the eyes are held through vnbeliefe or preiudice.

The Doctors were not more amazed to heare so profound a childhood, than the parents of Christ were to see him among the Doctors; the ioy of finding him, did striue with the astonishment of finding him thus: And now, not Ioseph, (he knew how little right he had to that diuine Sonne) but Mary breakes forth into a louing expostulation (Sonne, why hast thou dealt so with vs?) that she might not seeme to take vpon her as an imperious Mother, it is like she reserued this question till she had him alone: wherein she meant rather to expresse griefe than correption: Onely herein the blessed Virgin offended, that her inconsideration did not suppose (as it was) that some higher respects, than could be due to flesh and bloud, called away the Sonne of God from her, that was the daughter of man: She that was but the mother of humanity, should not haue thought that the businesse of God must for her sake be neglected: We are all partiall to our selues naturally, and prone to the regard of our owne rights; questionlesse this gratious Saint would not for all the world, haue willingly preferd her owne attendance, to that of her God; through heedlesnes she doeth so: her Sonne and Sauiour is her monitor, out of his diuine loue reforming her naturall: How is it that yee sought me? Knew yee not that I must goe about my Fathers, businesse? Immediately before the blessed Virgin had said, Thy father and I sought thee with heauy hearts: Wherein both according to the supposition of the world, she called Ioseph the Father of Christ, and according to the fashion of a dutifull wife, she names her Ioseph, before her selfe. She well knew that Ioseph had nothing but a name in this businesse, she knew how God had dignified her beyond him; yet she sayes: Thy father and I sought thee; The Sonne of God stands not vpon contradiction to his mother, but leading her thoughts from his supposed father, to his true; from earth to heauen, he answers, (Knew yee not thou I must goe about my Fathers businesse?) It was honor enough to her, that he had vouchsafed to take flesh of her; It was his eternall honour, that hee was God of God, the euerlasting Sonne of the heauenly Father: good reason therefore was it, that the respects to flesh should giue place to the God of Spirits: How well contented was holy Mary with so iust an answer? how doth she now againe in her heart, renew her answer to the Angell, Behold the seruant of the Lord, be it according to thy word?

We are all the Sonnes of God in another kind, Nature and the world thinkes wee should attend them; we are not worthy to say; we haue a Father in heauen, if we cannot steale away from these earthly distractions, and imploy our selues in the seruices of our God.

Christs Baptisme.

Iohn did euery way forerunne Christ, not so much in the time of his Birth, as in his office; neither was there more vnlikelinesse in their disposition and cariage, then similitude in their function; both did preach and baptize; onely Iohn baptized by himselfe, our Sauiour by his Disciples; our Sauiour wrought miracles by himselfe, by his Disciples; Iohn wrought none by either; Wherein Christ meant to shew himselfe a Lord, and Iohn a seruant; and Iohn meant to approue himselfe a true seruant to him, whose harbinger he was; he that leapt in the wombe of his mother, when his Sauiour (then newly conceiued) came in presence, bestird himselfe, when he was brought forth into the light of the Church, to the honor and seruice of his Sauiour: he did the same before Christ, which Christ charged his Disciples to doe after him, Preach and Baptize. The Gospell ran alwayes in one tenor, and was neuer but like it selfe; So it became the Word of him in whom there is no shadow by turning, and whose Word it is, I am Iehoua, I change not.

It was fit that he which had the Prophets, the starre, the Angell to foretell his comming into the world, should haue his Vsher to goe before him, when he would notifie himselfe to the world: Iohn was the voyce of a Cryer: Christ was the Word of his Father; it was fit this Voyce should make a noyse to the world, ere the Word of the Father should speake to it; Iohns note was still, Repentance; The Axe to the root, the Fan to the floore, the Chaffe to the fire; as his raiment was rough, so was his tongue, and if his foode were wilde Hony, his speech was stinging Locusts: Thus must the way be made for Christ in euery heart: Plausibility is no fit preface to regeneration: if the heart of man had continued vpright, God might haue beene entertained without contradiction; but now violence must be offered to our corruption, ere we can haue roome for grace; if the great Way-maker doe not cast downe hills, and raise vp valleys in the bosomes of men, there is no passage for Christ; neuer will Christ come into that soule, where the Herald of repentance hath not beene before him.

That Sauiour of ours, who from eternity lay hid in the Counsaile of God, who in the fulnesse of time, so came, that hee lay hid in the wombe of his mother, for the space of forty weekes, after hee was come, thought fit to lye hid in Nazareth, for the space of thirty yeeres, now at last begins to shew himselfe to the world, and comes from Galile to Iordan. He that was God alwayes, and might haue beene perfect man in an instant, would by degrees rise to the perfection both of his Manhood, and execution of his mediator-ship; to teach vs, the necessity of leasure in spirituall proceedings; that many Suns, and successions of seasons, and meanes must be stayed for, ere we can attaine our maturity; and that when we are ripe for the imployments, of God, we should no lesse willingly leaue our obscurity, then we took the benefit of it for our preparation. He that was formerly circumcised would now be baptized; what is Baptisme, but an Euangelicall circumcision? What was circumcision, but a legall Baptisme? One both supplied and succeeded the other; yet the Author of both will vndergoe both: He would be circumcised, to sanctifie his Church that was; and baptized, to sanctifie his Church that should be; that so in both Testaments hee might open a way into heauen. There was in him neither filthinesse, nor foreskin of corruption, that should need either knife, or water: He came not to be a Sauiour for himselfe, but for vs: we are all vncleanesse, and vncircumcision: he would therefore haue that done to his most pure body, which should be of force to cleare our impure soules: thus making himselfe sinne for vs, that we might be made the righteousnesse of God in him.

His Baptisme giues vertue to ours. His last action (or rather passion) was his baptizing with blood: his first was his baptization with water: both of them wash the world from their sins. Yea, this latter did not onely wash the soules of men, but washeth that very very water, by which we are waſhed; from hence is that made both cleane and holy, and can both cleanſe and hallow vs; And if the very handkerchiefe which touched his Apoſtles, had power of cure, how much more that Water, which the ſacred body of Chriſt touched? Chriſt comes far, to ſeeke his baptiſme: to teach vs (for whoſe ſake hee was baptized) to wait vpon the ordinances of God, and to ſue for the fauour of ſpirituall bleſſings; They are worthleſſe commodities, that are not worth ſeeking for; it is rarely ſeene, that God is found of any man vnſought for: that deſire which onely makes vs capable of good things, cannot ſtand with neglect.

Iohn durſt not baptize vnbidden: his Maſter ſent him to doe this ſeruice, and behold, the Maſter comes to his ſeruant, to call for the participation of that priuiledge, which he himſelfe had inſtituted, and inioyned; how willingly ſhould we come to our ſpirituall Superiours, for our part in thoſe myſteries, which God hath left in their keeping; yea, how gladly ſhould we come to that Chriſt, who giues vs theſe bleſſings, who is giuen to vs in them!

This ſeemed too great an honor for the modeſty of Iohn to receiue; If his mother could ſay, when her bleſſed couſin the Virgin Mary came to viſit her (Whence is this to me, that the mother of my Lord ſhould come to me?) how much more might he ſay ſo, when the diuine Son of that mother came to call for a fauour from him? I haue need to be baptized of thee, and comm'ſt thou to me? O holy Baptiſt, if there were not a greater borne of women then thou; yet thou couldeſt not be borne of a woman, and not need to be baptized of thy Sauiour. Hee baptized with fire, thou with water; Little would thy water haue auailed thee without his fire: If he had not baptized thee, how wert thou ſanctified from the wombe? There can be no fleſh without filthineſſe; neither thy ſupernaturall conception, nor thy auſtere life could exempt thee from the need of baptiſme: Euen thoſe, that haue not liued to ſinne after the ſimilitude of Adam, yet are they ſo tainted with Adam, that vnleſſe the ſecond Adam cleanſe them by his baptiſme, they are hopeleſſe; There is no leſſe vſe of baptiſme vnto all, then there is certainety of the need of baptiſme; Iohn baptized without, Chriſt within. The more holy a man is, the more ſenſible he is of his vnholineſſe; No carnall man could haue ſaid (I haue need to be baptized of thee;) neither can he finde, what hee is the better for a little Font-water. The ſenſe of our wretchednеſſe, and the valuation of our ſpirituall helps, is the beſt tryall of our regeneration: Our Sauiour doth not deny, that either Iohn hath need to bee baptized of him, or that it is ſtrange, that he ſhould come to be baptized of Iohn, but he will needs thus farre both honour Iohn, and diſparage himſelfe, to be baptized of his Meſſenger; hee that would take fleſh of the Virgin, education from his Parents, ſuſtenance from his creatures, will take baptiſme from Iohn: It is the prayſe of his mercy that he will ſtoope ſo low, as to bee beholden to his creatures, which from him receiue their being and power, both to take and giue.

Yet not ſo much reſpect to Iohn, as obedience to his Father, drew him to this point of humiliation, (Thus it behoues vs to fulfill all righteouſnes.) The Counſels & Appointmẽts of God are righteouſneſſe it ſelfe; There needs no other motiue, either to the ſeruant, or the Son, then the knowledge of thoſe righteous purpoſes. This was enough to leade a faithfull man thorow all difficulties, and inconueniences; neither will it admit of any reply, or any demurre: Iohn yeeldeth to this honor, which his Sauiour puts vpon him, in giuing baptiſme to the Author of it: He baptized others to the remiſſion of their ſinnes: now he baptizes him, by whom they are remitted both to the Baptizer, and to others.

No ſooner is Chriſt baptized, then hee comes forth of the water: The element is of force, but during the vſe: It turnes common, when that is paſt; neither is the water ſooner powred on his head, then the Heauens are opened, and the Holy Ghoſt deſcendeth vpon that Head which was baptized: The Heauens are neuer ſhut whiles either of the Sacraments is duly adminiſtred, and receiued: neither doe the Heauens euer thus open, without the deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt: But now that the God of Heauen is baptized, they open vnto him, which are opened to all the faithfull by him: and that

Holy

Holy Ghost which proceeded from him, together with the Father, ioynes with the Father in a sensible testimony of him; that now the world might see what interest he had in the Heauens, in the Father, in the holy Spirit, and might expect nothing but diuine, from the entrance of such a Mediator.

Christ tempted.

NO sooner is Christ come out of the water of Baptisme, than he enters into the fire of tentation: No sooner is the holy Spirit descended vpon his head, in the forme of a Doue, than he is led by the Spirit to be tempted. No sooner doth God say, (This is my Sonne): than Satan sayes, (If thou be the Sonne of God.) It is not in the power, either of the gift or scales of Grace, to deliuer vs from the assaults of Satan; they may haue the force to repell euill suggestions, they haue none to preuent them; yea, the more we are ingaged vnto God by our publike vowes, and his pledges of fauour, so much more busie and violent is the rage of that euill one, to encounter vs; We are no sooner stept forth into the field of God, than he labours to wrest our weapons out of our hands, or to turne them against vs.

The voyce from Heauen acknowledged Christ to be the Sonne of God; this diuine Testimony did not allay the malice of Satan, but exasperate it: Now that venomous Serpent swels with inward poison, and hastes to assaile him, whom God hath honoured from Heauen. O God, how should I looke to escape the suggestions of that wicked one, when the Sonne of thy loue cannot be free? when euen grace it selfe drawes on enmity? That enemy, that spared not to strike at the Head, will he forbeare the weakest and remotest limme? Arme thou me therefore, with an expectation of that euill I cannot auoid; Make thou me as strong, as he is malicious; Say to my soule also (Thou art my Sonne) and let Satan doe his worst.

All the time of our Sauiours obscurity I doe not finde him set vpon; Now, that he lookes forth to the publike execution of his diuine Office, Satan bends his forces against him: Our priuacy, perhaps, may sit downe in peace, but neuer man did endeuour a common good without opposition. It is a signe, that both the worke is holy, and the Agent faithfull, when we meet with strong affronts.

We haue reason to be comforted with nothing so much, as with resistance; If wee were not in a way to doe good, we should find no rubs; Satan hath no cause to molest his owne, and that whiles they goe about his owne seruice; He desires nothing more, than to make vs smooth paths to sinne; but when we would turne our feet to holinesse, he blocks vp the way with tentations.

Who can wonder enough at the sawcinesse of that bold spirit, that dares to set vpon the Sonne of the euerliuing God? who can wonder enough at thy meekenesse and patience, O Sauiour, that wouldst be tempted? He wanted not malice and presumption to assault thee; thou wantedst not humility to endure those assaults. I should stand amazed at this voluntary dispensation of thine, but that I see the susception of our humane nature, laies thee open to this condition. It is necessarily incident to manhood to be liable to tentations; Thou wouldest not haue put on flesh, if thou hadst meant vtterly to put off this consequence of our infirmity: If the state of innocence could haue beene any defence against euill motions, the first Adam had not beene tempted, much lesse the second. It is not the presenting of tentations that can hurt vs, but their entertainement, Ill counsell is the fault of the Giuer, not of the Refuser; We cannot forbid lewd eyes to locke in at our windowes, we may shut our doores against their entrance; It is no lesse our praise to haue resisted, than Satans blame to suggest euill. Yea, O blessed Sauiour, how glorious was it for thee, how happy for vs, that thou wert tempted? Had not Satan tempted thee, how ſhouldeſt thou haue ouercome? Without blowes there can be no victory, no triumph: How had thy power beene manifeſted, if no aduerſary had tried thee? The firſt Adam was tempted and vanquiſhed; the ſecond Adam, to repay and repaire that foile, doth vanquiſh in being tempted. Now haue we not a Sauiour, and High Prieſt, that cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but ſuch an one, as was in all things tempted in like ſort, yet without ſinne; how boldly therefore may we goe vnto the Throne of grace, that we may receiue mercy, and finde grace of helpe in time of need? Yea, this Duell was for vs; Now we ſee by this conflict of our Almighty Champion, what manner of Aduerſary we haue, how he fights, how he is reſiſted, how ouercome. Now our very temptation affords vs comfort, in that we ſee, the dearer we are vnto God, the more obnoxious we are to this triall; neither can we be diſcouraged by the hainouſneſſe of thoſe euils, whereto wee are moued, ſince we ſee the Sonne of God ſolicited to infidelity, couetouſneſſe, idolatry; How glorious therefore was it for thee O Sauiour, how happy for vs that thou wert tempted?

Where then waſt thou tempted, O bleſſed Ieſu; or whither wenteſt thou to meet with our great Aduerſary? I doe not ſee thee led into the market-place, or any other part of the city, or thy home-ſtead of Nazareth, but into the vaſt wilderneſſe, the habitation of beaſts; a place that carrieth in it, both horror and opportunity; why wouldſt thou thus retire thy ſelfe from men? but as confident Champions are wont to giue aduantage of ground or weapon, to their Antagoniſt, that the glory of their victory may be the greater: So wouldeſt thou, O Sauiour, in this conflict with our common enemy, yeeld him his owne termes for circumſtances, that thine honour and his foile may be the more. Solitarineſſe is no ſmall helpe to the ſpeed of a tentation: Woe to him that is alone, for if he fall, there is not a ſecond to lift him vp. Thoſe that out of an affectation of holineſſe ſeeke for ſolitude in rocks and caues of the deſerts, doe no other than run into the mouth of the danger of tentation, whiles they thinke to auoid it. It was enough for thee to whoſe diuine power the gates of hel were weakneſſe, thus to challenge the Prince of darkneſſe; Our care muſt be alwaies to eſchew all occaſions of ſpirituall danger; and (what we may) to get vs out of the reach of tentations.

But, O the depth of the Wiſdome of God! How cameſt thou, O Sauiour, to be thus tempted? That Spirit whereby thou waſt conceiued, as man, and which was one with thee and the Father, as God, led thee into the wilderneſſe to bee tempted of Satan; Whiles thou taughteſt vs to pray to thy Father, Leade vs not into temptation, thou meanteſt to inſtruct vs, that if the ſame Spirit led vs not into this perilous way, we goe not into it; Wee haue ſtill the ſame conduct: Let the path bee what it will, how can wee miſcary in the hand of a Father? Now may wee ſay to Satan, as thou didſt vnto Pilate; Thou couldſt haue no power ouer me, except it were giuen thee from aboue; The Spirit led thee, it did not driue thee; here was a ſweet inuitation, no compulſion of violence. So abſolutely conformable was thy will to thy Deity, as if both thy natures had but one volition; In this firſt draught of thy bitter potion, thy ſoule ſaid in a reall ſubiection, Not my will, but thy will be done. We imitate thee, O Sauiour, though we cannot reach to thee; All thine are led by thy Spirit: Oh teach vs to forget that we haue wils of our owne. The Spirit led thee; thine inuincible ſtrength did not animate thee into this combat vncalled. What do we weaklings ſo far preſume vpon our abilities, or ſucceſſe, as that we dare thruſt our ſelues vpon temptations vnbidden, vnwarranted? Who can pitty the ſhipwracke of thoſe Marriners, which will needes put forth, and hoiſe ſailes in a tempeſt?

Forty dayes did our Sauiour ſpend in the wilderneſſe, faſting, and ſolitary, all which time was worne out in temptation; how euer the laſt brunt, becauſe it was moſt violent, is onely expreſſed: Now could not the aduerſary complaine of diſaduantage, whiles he had the full ſcope both of time and place to doe his worſt; And why did it pleaſe thee, O Sauiour, to faſt forty dayes, and forty nights, vnleſſe as Moſes faſted forty dayes at the deliuery of the Law, and Elias at the reſtitution of the Law: So thou thoughteſt fit at the accompliſhment of the Law, and the promulgation of the

the Gospel to fulfil the time of both these Types of thine, wherein thou intendest our wonder, not our imitation; Not our imitation of the time, though of the act. Here were no faulty desires of the flesh in thee, to be tamed, no possibility of a freer & more easie assent of the soule to God, that could bee affected of thee, who wast perfectly vnited vnto God; but as for vs thou wouldest suffer death, so for vs thou wouldst suffer hunger, that we might learne by fasting, to prepare our selues for tentations: In fasting so long, thou intendest the manifestation of thy power; in fasting no longer, the truth of thy man-hood; Moses & Elias, through the miraculous sustentation of God, fasted so long, without any question made of the truth of their bodies; So long therefore thou thoughtest good to fast, as by the reason of these precedents, might be without preiudice of thine humanitie; which if it should haue pleased thee to support, as thou couldest without meanes, thy very power might haue opened the mouth of cauils against the veritie of thine humane nature; That thou mightest therefore well approue, that there was no difference betwixt thee and vs, but sinne, thou that couldst haue fasted without hunger, and liued without meat; wouldest both feed, and fast, and hunger.

Who can bee discouraged with the scantinesse of friends, or bodily prouisions, when hee sees his Sauiour thus long destitute of all earthly comforts, both of Societie and sustenance. Oh the policie and malice of that old Serpent, when hee sees Christ bewray some infirmitie of nature in being hungry, then hee layes forest at him by temptations; His eye was neuer off from our Sauiour, all the time of his sequestration; and now that hee thinke he espyes any one part to lye open, hee driues at it with all his might; Wee haue to doe with an Aduersary, no lesse vigilant than malicious, who will bee sure to watch all opportunities of our mischiefe, and where he sees any aduantage of weakenesse, will not neglect it. How should wee stand vpon our guard for preuention; that both we may not giue him occasions of our hurt, nor take hurt by those we haue giuen.

When our Sauiour was hungrie, Satan tempts him in matter of food; not then, of wealth or glorie; He well knowes both what baits, to fish withall, and when, and how to lay them; How safe and happie shall we be, if we shall bend our greatest care where we discerne the most danger?

In euery temptation there is an appearance of good, whether of the bodie, of minde, or estate; The first is the lust of the flesh, in any carnall desire; the second the pride of heart, and life; the third the lust of the eyes: To all these, the first Adam is tempted, and in all miscarryed; the second Adam is tempted to them all, and ouercommeth: The first man was tempted, to carnall appetite by the forbidden fruit; to pride, by the suggestion of being as God: To couetousnesse, in the ambitious desire of knowing good and euill: Satan hauing found all the motions so successefull with the first Adam in his innocent estate, will now tread the same steppes in his temptations of the second; The stones must be made bread, there is the motion to a carnall appetite; The guard and attendance of Angels must bee presumed on, there is a motion to pride; The Kingdomes of the Earth, and the glory of them must be offered, there, to couetousnesse and ambition.

Sathan could not but haue heard God say, This is my welbeloued Sonne, hee had heard the Message and the Caroll of the Angels, he saw the Starre, and the iourney, and Offerings, of the Sages, hee could not but take notice of the gratulations of Zachary, Simeon, Anna, hee well knew the Predictions of the Prophets, yet now that hee saw Christ fainting with hunger, as not comprehending how infirmities could consist with a God-head, hee can say, (If thou bee the Sonne of God;) Had not Sathan knowne that the Sonne of God was to come into the World, he had neuer said (If thou be the Sonne of God.) His very supposition conuinces him: The ground of his tempration, answers it selfe: If therefore Christ seemed to bee a meere man, because after fortie dayes hee was hungry, why was hee not confessed more than a man, in that for fortie dayes hee hungred not? The motiue of the temptation is worse than the mo-motion, (If thou bee the Sonne of God) Sathan could not chooſe another ſuggeſtion of ſo great importance. All the worke of our Redemption, of our Saluation, depends vpon this one Truth, Chriſt is the Sonne of God; How ſhould hee elſe haue ranſomed the World, how ſhould hee haue done, how ſhould hee haue ſuffered that, which was ſatisfactory to his Fathers wrath? How ſhould his actions, or paſſion bin valuable to the ſinnes of all the World? What maruell is it if wee that are ſonnes by Adoption, be aſſaulted with the doubtes of our intereſt in God when the naturall Sonne, the Sonne of his Eſſence is thus tempted? Since all our comfort conſiſts in this point, heere muſt needes bee laid the chiefe battery; and heere muſt bee placed our ſtrongeſt defence.

To turne ſtones into bread, had bin no more faultie in it ſelfe, than to turne Water into Wine; But to doe this in a diſtruſt of his Fathers Prouidence, to abuſe his power and libertie in doing it, to worke a miracle of Sathans choice, had beene diſagreeable to the Sonne of God: There is nothing more ordinary with our ſpirituall enemie, than by occaſion of want to moue vs to vnwarrantable courſes; Thou art poore, ſteale; Thou canſt not riſe by honeſt meanes, vſe indirect; How eaſie had it beene for our Sauiour, to haue confounded Sathan by the power of his Godhead? But hee rather chuſes to vanquiſh him by the Sword of the Spirit, that hee might teach vs how to reſiſt and ouercome the powers of darkneſſe? If hee had ſubdued Sathan by the Almighty power of the Deitie, wee might haue had what to wonder at, not what to imitate: now hee vſeth that weapon which may be familiar vnto vs, that hee may teach our weakneſſe how to bee victorious. Nothing in heauen or earth can beate the forces of hell, but the word of God: How carefully ſhould wee furniſh our ſelues with this powerfull munition, how ſhould our hearts and mouthes bee full of it? Teach mee, O Lord, the way of thy Statutes; O take not from mee the words of Truth; Let them be my Songs in the houſe of my pilgrimage; So ſhall I make anſwere to my Blaſphemers. What needed Chriſt to haue anſwered Sathan at all, if it had not beene to teach vs, that temptations muſt not haue their way; but muſt be anſwered by reſiſtance, and reſiſted by the Word.

I doe not heare our Sauiour auerre himſelfe to be a God, againſt the blaſphemous inſinuation of Sathan; neyther doe I ſee him working this miraculous Conuerſion, to proue himſelfe the Sonne of God; but moſt wiſely hee takes away the ground of the temptation; Sathan had taken it for granted, that man cannot bee ſuſtayned without bread; and therefore inferres the neceſſitie of making bread of ſtones; Our Sauiour ſhewes him from an infallible Word, that hee had miſlayed his ſuggeſtion; That man liues not by vſuall food only, but by euery word that proceedeth from the mouth of God; Hee can either ſuſtaine without bread, as hee did Moſes and Elias, or with a miraculous bread, as the Iſraelites with Manna, or ſend ordinary meanes miraculouſly, as food to his Prophet by the Rauens, or miraculouſly multiply ordinary meanes, as the Meale and Oyle to the Sareptan Widdow: All things are ſuſtayned by his Almighty Word: Indeed wee liue by food, but not by any vertue that is without God; without the concurrence of whoſe Prouidence, bread would rather choak, than nouriſh vs; Let him withdraw his hand from his creatures, in their greateſt abundance wee periſh; Why doe we therefore bend our eyes on the meanes, and not looke vp to the hand that giues the bleſſing.

What ſo neceſſary dependance hath the bleſſing vpon the creature, if our Prayers hold them not together; As wee may not neglect the meanes, ſo wee may not neglect the procurement of a bleſſing vpon the meanes, nor bee vnthankfull to the hand that hath giuen the bleſſing.

In the firſt aſſault Sathan moues Chriſt to doubt of his Fathers Prouidence, and to vſe vnlawfull meanes to help himſelfe: in the next, hee moues him to preſume vpon his Fathers protection, and the ſeruice of his bleſſed Angels; Hee grounds the firſt vpon a conceit of want, the next of abundance; If hee be in extreames, it is all to one end, to miſlead vnto euill: If wee cannot be driuen downe to deſpayre, he labours to lift vs vp to presumption; It is not one foile that can put this bold spirit out of countenance: Temptations like waues, breake one in the necke of another; Whiles wee are in this warfare, wee must make account, that the repulse of one temptation doth but inuite to another.

That blessed Sauiour of ours, that was content to bee led from Iordan into the Wildernesse, for the aduantage of the first temptation, yeelds to bee ledde from the Wildernesse to Ierusalem, for the aduantage of the second; The place doth not a little auayle to the act, The Wildernesse was fit for a temptation, arising from want, it was not fit for a temptation mouing to vain-glory. The populous Citie was the fittest for such a motion; Ierusalem was the glory of the World, the Temple was the glory of Ierusalem, the Pinacles, the highest peece of the Pinacle, there is Christ content to be set, for the opportunitie of tentation: O Sauiour of men, how can wee wonder enough at this humilitie of thine, that thou wouldest so farre abase thy selfe, as to suffer thy pure and sacred Body to bee transported, by the presumptuous and malicious hand of that vncleane Spirit? It was not his power, it was thy patience that deserues our admiration: Neyther can this seeme ouer-strange to vs, when wee consider, that if Sathan be the head of wicked men, wicked men are the members of Sathan. What was Pilate, or the Iewes that persecuted thine innocence, but limmes of this Deuill? And why are wee then amazed, to see thee touched, and locally transported by the head, when we see thee yeelding thy selfe ouer, to be crucified by the members? If Sathan did the worse and greater, mediately by their hands, no maruell if hee doe the lesse and easier, immediately by his owne; yet neyther of them without thy voluntary dispensation. Hee could not haue looked at thee, without thee. And if the Sonne of God did thus suffer his owne holy and precious Body to bee carryed by Sathan; what wonder is it, if that Enemy haue sometimes power giuen him, ouer the sinfull bodies of the Adopted sonnes of God? It is not the strength of faith, that can secure vs from the outward violences of that euill one. This difference I finde betwixt his spirituall and bodily assaults: those are beaten backe by the shield of Faith, these admit not of such repulse. As the best man may bee lame, blinde, diseased, so through the permission of God, hee may bee bodily vexed by an old Man-slayer. Grace was neuer giuen vs for a Target against externall afflictions.

Mee thinkes, I see Christ hoysed vpon the highest battlements of the Temple; whose very roofe was an hundred and thirty Cubits high; and Sathan standing by him, with this speech in his mouth: Well then, since in the matter of nourishment thou wilt needs depend vpon thy Fathers prouidence, that hee can without meanes sustaine thee, take now further tryall of that Prouidence, in thy miraculous preseruation; Cast thy selfe downe from this height: Behold, thou art here in Ierusalem, the famous and holy Citie of the World; here thou art, on the top of the pinacle of that Temple, which is dedicated of thy Father, and, if thou bee God, to thy selfe; the eyes of all men are now fixt vpon thee, there cannot bee deuised a more ready way to spread thy glory, and to proclaime thy Deitie, than by casting thy selfe headlong to the Earth. All the World will say, there is more in thee, than a man; and for danger, there can be none; What can hurt him, that is the Sonne of God; and wherefore serues that glorious Guard of Angels, which haue by diuine Commission, taken vpon them the charge of thine humanity? since therefore in one act, thou mayest bee both safe, and celebrated, trust thy father, and those thy seruiceable spirits with thine assured preseruation, Cast thy selfe downe: And why didst thou not, O thou malignant spirit, endeuour to cast downe my Sauiour, by those same presumptuous hands that brought him vp, since the descent is more easie than the raysing vp? was it for that, it had not beene so great an aduantage to thee, that hee should fall by thy meanes, as by his owne? falling into sinne, was more than to fall from the pinacle; still thy care and suite is, to make vs Authors to our selues of euill, thou gainest nothing by our bodily hurt, if the soule bee safe: Or was it rather for thar, thou couldeſt not? I doubt not, but thy malice could as well haue ſerued, to haue offered this meaſure to himſelfe, as to his holy Apoſtle ſoone after, but hee that bounded thy power, tethers thee ſhorter; Thou couldeſt not, thou canſt not doe what thou wouldſt. He that would permit thee to carrie him vp, binds thy hands from caſting him downe: And woe were it for vs if thou wert not euer ſtinted.

Why did Satan carry vp Chriſt ſo high, but on purpoſe, that his fall might bee the more deadly; ſo deales hee ſtill with vs, he exalts vs, that wee may bee dangerouſly abaſed; Hee puffs them vp with ſwelling thoughts of their owne worthineſſe, that they may bee vile in the eyes of God, and fall into condemnation: It is the manner of God, to caſt downe, that hee may raiſe, to abaſe that hee may exalt; Contrarily Satan raiſes vp, that he may throw downe, and intends nothing but our deiection, in our aduancement.

Height of place giues opportunity of tentation: Thus buſie is that wicked one, in working againſt the members of Chriſt. If any of them bee in eminence aboue others, thoſe hee labours moſt to ruinate; They had need to ſtand faſt, that ſtand high; Both there is more danger of their falling, and more hurt in their fall.

He that had preſumed thus farre, to tempt the Lord of Life, would faine now dare him alſo to preſume vpon his Deitie, If thou bee the Sonne of God, caſt thy ſelfe downe. There is not a more tryed ſhaft in all his quiuer, than this; a perſwaſion to men, to beare themſelues too bold vpon the fauour of God; Thou art the Elect and Redeemed of GOD; ſinne, becauſe grace hath abounded; ſinne, that it may abound; Thou art ſafe enough, though thou offend, bee not too much an aduerſarie to thine owne liberty: Falſe ſpirit, it is no libertie to ſinne, but ſeruitude rather, there is libertie, but in the freedome from ſinne; Euery one of vs, that hath the hope of Sonnes, muſt purge himſelfe, euen as hee is pure, that hath redeemed vs: Wee are bought with a price, therefore muſt wee glorifie God in our bodie and ſpirits, for they are Gods; Our Sonne-ſhip teaches vs awe and obedience; and therefore, becauſe wee are Sonnes, wee will not caſt our ſelues downe into ſinne.

How idlely doe Satan and wicked men meaſure God, by the crooked line of their owne miſconceit: Ywis, Chriſt cannot bee the Sonne of God, vnleſſe he caſt himſelfe downe from the Pinacle; vnleſſe hee come downe from the Croſſe. God is not mercifull vnleſſe he honour them in all their deſires; not iuſt, vnleſſe hee take ſpeedie vengeance, where they require it; But when they haue ſpent their folly vpon theſe vaine imaginations, Chriſt is the Sonne of God, though hee ſtay on the toppe of the Temple, God will be mercifull, though wee miſ-cary, and iuſt though ſinners ſeeme lawleſſe. Neither will hee bee any other, than hee is: or meaſured by any rule but himſelfe.

But what is this I ſee, Satan himſelfe with a Bible vnder his arme, with a Text in his mouth, It is written, Hee ſhall giue his Angels charge ouer thee? How ſtill in that wicked One doth ſubtilty ſtriue with Preſumption? Who could not, but ouer-wonder at this, if hee did not conſider, that ſince the Deuill dare to touch the ſacred Body of Chriſt with his hand, hee may well touch the Scriptures of God with his tongue? Let no man henceforth maruell, to heare Heretikes or Hypocrites, quote Scriptures, when Satan himſelfe hath not ſpared to cite them; what are they the worſe for this, more than that holy Body, which is tranſported? Some haue beene poyſoned by their meates and drinkes, yet either theſe nouriſh vs, or nothing: It is not the Letter of the Scripture that can carry it, but the Senſe, if wee diuide theſe two, wee prophane and abuſe that word wee alledge. And wherefore doth this foule ſpirit vrge a Text, but for imitation, for preuention, and for ſucceſſe? Chriſt had alledged a Scripture vnto him, hee re-alledges Scripture vnto Chriſt: At leaſtwiſe, hee will counterfeit an imitation of the Sonne of God; Neither is it in this alone; what one act euer paſſed the Hand of God, which Satan did not apiſhly attempt to ſecond? If wee follow Chriſt in the outward action, with contrary intentions, wee follow Satan, in following Chriſt. Or, perhaps, Satan meant to make Christ hereby weary of this weapon; As wee see fashions, when they are taken vp of the Vnworthy, are cast off by the Great; It was, doubtlesse, one cause, why Christ afterward forbad the Deuill euen to confesse the Truth, because his mouth was a slander. But chiefly doth he this, for a better colour of his tentation: He gilds ouer this false metall with Scripture, that it may passe current: Euen now is Satan transformed into an Angell of light, and will seeme godly for a mischiefe: If Hypocrites make a fayre shew to deceiue with a glorious lustre of holinesse, wee see whence they borrowed it: How many thousand soules are betrayed by the abuse of that word, whose vse is soueraigne and sauing. No Deuill is so dangerous as the religeous Deuill. If good meate turne to the nourishment, not of nature, but of the disease, wee may not forbeare to feed, but indeauour to purge the body of those euill humours, which cause the stomach to worke against it selfe. O GOD, thou that hast giuen vs light, giue vs cleare and sound eyes, that we may take comfort of that light thou hast giuen vs: Thy Word is holy, make our hearts so, and then shall they finde that Word, not more true than cordiall; Let not this diuine Table of thine, be made a snare to our soules.

What can be a better act than to speake Scripture? It were a wonder if Satan should doe a good thing well; He cites Scripture then, but with mutilation, and distortion; it comes not out of his mouth, but maymed and peruerted: One peece is left, all misapplied: Those that wrest or mangle Scripture for their owne turne, it is easie to see from what Schoole they come. Let vs take the word from the Author, not from the Vsurper: Dauid would not doubt to eate that sheepe, which he pulled out of the mouth of the Beare or Lyon; (Hee shall giue his Angels charge ouer thee:) Oh comfortable assurance of our protection; Gods children neuer goe vnattended: Like vnto great Princes wee walke euer in the midst of our guard, though inuisible, yet true, carefull, powerfull; What creatures are so glorious as the Angels of heauen, yet their Maker hath set them to serue vs: Our adoption makes vs at once great and safe: Wee may be contemptible and ignomious in the eyes of the world, but the Angels of GOD obserue vs the while, and scorne not to waite vpon vs in our homeliest occasions: The Sunne, or the light may wee keepe out of our houses, the aire we cannot; much lesse these Spirits, that are more simple and immateriall: No wals, no bolts can seuer them from our sides: they accompany vs in dungeons, they goe with vs into our exile: How can we either feare danger; or complaine of solitarinesse, whiles wee haue so vnseparable, so glorious Companions?

Is our Sauiour distasted with Scripture, because Satan misse-layes it in his dish? Doth he not rather snatch this sword out of that impure hand, and beat Satan with the weapon which he abuseth: (It is written, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God:) The Scripture is one, as that God, whose it is: Where it carryes an appearance of difficultie or inconuenience, it needes no light to cleare it, but that which it hath in it selfe. All doubts that may arise from it, are fully answered by collation: It is true that God hath taken this care, and giuen this charge of his owne: he will haue them kept, not in their sinnes: they may trust him, they may not tempt him: hee meant to incourage their faith, not their presumption. To cast our selues vpon any immediate prouidence, when meanes faile not, is to disobey, in stead of beleeuing God; we may challenge God on his Word, wee may not straine him beyond it; wee may make account of what hee promised, we may not subiect his promises to vniust examinations: and where no need is, make triall of his Power, Iustice, Mercy, by deuises of our owne. All the Deuils in hell, could not elude the force of this diuine answer: and now Satan sees how vainely he tempteth Christ to tempt God.

Yet againe for all this, doe I see him setting vpon the Sonne of GOD; Satan is not foyled when he is resisted: neither diffidence, nor presumption can fasten vpon Christ, he shall be tryed with honour: As some expert Fencer that challenges at all weapons, so doth his great enemie; in vaine shall we plead our skill in some, if wee faile in any; It must be our wisedome to be prepared for all kind of assaults: As those that hold Townes and Forts doe, not onely defend themselues from incursions, but from the Cannon and the Pioner; still doth that subtill Serpent trauerse his ground for an aduantage: The Temple is not high enough for his next tentation; He therefore carries vp Christ to the top of an exceeding high mountaine: All enemies in pitcht fields striue for the benefit of the Hill, or Riuer, or Winde, or Sunne; That which his seruant Balac did by his instigation, himselfe doth now immediately, change places in hope of preuailing. If the obscure Countrie will not moue vs, he e tries what the Court can doe; if not our home, the Tauerne; if not the field, our closet: As no place is left free by his malice, so no place must be made preiudiciall by our careleſneſſe; and as we should alwayes watch ouer our selues, so then most, when the opportunitie caries cause of suspition.

Wherefore is Christ caried vp so high but for prospect? If the Kingdomes of the earth and their glorie were onely to be presented to his imagination; the valley would haue serued; If to the outward sense, no hill could suffice: Circular bodies though small, cannot bee seene at once. This show was made to both, diuers kingdomes lying round about Iudea were represented to the eie; the glory of them to the imagination: Satan meant the eye could tempt the fancy, no lesse then the fancy could tempt the will. How many thousand soules haue died of the wound of the eye; If we do not let in sinne at the window of the eye, or the doore of the eare, it cannot enter into our hearts.

If there be any pompe, maiestie, pleasure, brauery in the world, where should it be but in the Courts of Princes, whom God hath made his Images, his deputies on earth? There is soft rayment, sumptuous feasts, rich Iewels, honourable attendance, glorious triumphs, royall state, these Satan layes out to the faireſt show: But Oh, the craft of that old Serpent: Many a care attends greatneſſe: No Crowne is without thornes: High seats are neuer but vneasie; all those infinite discontentments which are the shadow of earthly Soueraigntie, he hides out of the way; nothing may bee seene, but what may both please and allure. Satan is still & euer like himselfe; If tentations might be but turnd about and showne on both sides, the kingdome of darkeneſſe would not be so populous. Now whensoeuer the Tempter sets vpon any poore soule, all sting of conscience, wrath, iudgement, torment is concealed, as if they were not; Nothing may appeare to the eye but pleasure, profit, and a seeming happineſſe in the enioying our desires; those other wofull obiects are reserued for the farewell of sinne; that our misery may be seene and felt at once; When we are once sure, Satan is a Tyrant, till then, he is a Parasite: There can be no safety, if we doe not view as well the backe as the face of tentations.

But oh presumption and impudence, that Hell it selfe may be asham'd of; The Diuell dares say to Christ, All these will I giue thee, if thou wilt fall downe and worship me: That beggerly spirit, that hath not an inch of earth, can offer the whole world to the maker, to the owner of it: The slaue of God, would be adored of his Creator: How can we hope he should be sparing of false boasts, and of vnreasonable promises vnto vs, when he dares offer kingdomes to him by whom Kings reigne?

Tentations on the right hand are most dangerous; how many that haue beene hardned with feare, haue melted with honor; There is no doubt of that soule that will not bite at the golden hooke.

False liers and vaine-glorious boasters see the top of their pedigree: If I may not rather say, that Satan doth borrow the vse of their tongues for a time; Whereas faithfull is he that hath promised, who will also doe it. Fidelity and truth is the issue of heauen.

If Idolatry were not a deare sinne to Satan; hee would not be so importunate to compasse it; It is miserable to see how he drawes the world insensibly into this sinne, which they professe to detest: Those that would rather hazard the furnace, then worship Gold in a statue, yet doe adore it in the stampe, and finde no fault with themselues. If our hearts be drawne to stoope vnto an ouer high respect of any creature, wee are Idolaters. O GOD, it is no maruell if thy iealousie be kindled at the

admiſſion of any of thine own workes, into a competition of honour with their Creatour.

Neuer did our Sauiour ſay, Auoide Satan, till now; It is a iuſt indignation, that is conceiued at the motion of a riualitie with God; Neither yet did Chriſt exerciſe his diuine power in this command, but by the neceſſary force of Scripture, driues away that impure Tempter; It is written, thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, & him onely ſhalt thou ſerue: The reſt of our Sauiours anſwers were more full and direct, then that they could admit of a replie, but this was ſo flat and abſolute, that it vtterly daunted the courage of Satan, and put him to a ſhamefull flight, and made him for the time, weary of his trade.

The way to be rid of the troubleſome ſolicitations of that wicked one, is continued reſiſtance. He that forcibly droue the tempter from himſelfe, takes him off from vs, and will not abide his aſſaults perpetuall: It is our exerciſe and triall, that he intends, not our confuſion.

AS the Sunne in his firſt riſing, drawes all eyes to it; So did this Sun of righteouſneſſe, when he firſt ſhone forth into the world; His miraculous cures drew Patients, his diuine doctrine drew Auditors, both together drew the admiring multitude by troopes after him. And why doe we not ſtill follow thee, O Sauiour, thorow deſerts and mountaines, ouer land and Seas, that we may be both healed, and taught. It was thy word, that when thou wert liſt vp, thou wouldeſt draw all men vnto thee: Behold, thou art liſt vp long ſince, both to the tree of ſhame, and to the throne of heauenly glory, Draw vs, and we ſhall runne after thee: Thy word is ſtill the ſame, though proclaimed by men, thy vertue is ſtill the ſame, though exerciſed vpon the ſpirits of men; Oh giue vs, to hunger after both, that by both our ſoules may be ſatisfied.

I ſee the people not onely following Chriſt, but preſſing vpon him; euen very vnmannerlineſſe findes here both excuſe and acceptation; they did not keepe their diſtances in an awe to the Maieſtie of the ſpeaker, whiles they were rauiſhed with the power of the ſpeech, yet did not our Sauiour checke their vnreuerent thronging, but rather incourages their forwardneſſe. Wee cannot offend thee, O GOD, with the importunitie of our deſires; It likes thee well, that the Kingdome of heauen ſhould ſuffer violence. Our ſlackneſſe doth euer diſpleaſe thee, neuer our vehemency.

The throng of Auditors forced Chriſt to leaue the ſhore, and to make Peters ſhip his pulpet: Neuer were there ſuch nets caſt out of that fiſher-boate before: whiles he was vpon the land, he healed the ſicke bodies by his touch; now that he was vpon the Sea, hee cured the ſicke ſoules by his doctrine; and is purpoſely ſeuered from the multitude, that he may vnite them to him. He that made both Sea and land, cauſeth both of them to conſpire to the opportunities of doing good.

Simon was buſie, waſhing his nets: Euen thoſe nets that caught no thing, muſt bee waſhed, no leſſe then if they had ſped well: The nights toyle doth not excuſe his daies worke: Little did Simon thinke of leauing thoſe nets, which hee ſo carefully waſhed, and now Chriſt interrupts him with the fauour and bleſſing of his gracious preſence: Labour in our calling (how homely ſoeuer) makes vs capable of diuine benediction. The honeſt fiſher-man, when hee ſaw the people flocke after Chriſt, and heard him ſpeake with ſuch power, could not but conceiue a generall and confuſe apprehenſion of of ſome excellent worth in ſuch a Teacher, and therefore is glad to honor his ſhip with ſuch a gueſt; and is firſt Chriſts hoſt by ſea, ere he is his Diſciple by land: An humble and ſeruiceable entertainement of a Prophet of God, was a good foundation of his future honour; He that would ſo eaſily lend Chriſt his hand, and his ſhippe, was likely ſoone after to beſtow himſelfe vpon his Sauiour.

Simon hath no ſooner done this ſeruice to Chriſt, then Chriſt is preparing for his reward; when the Sermon is ended, the ſhip-roome ſhall bee paid for abundantly; Neither ſhall the Hoſt expect any other pay-maſter then himſelfe: Lanch forth into the deepe, and let downe your Nets to make a draught: That ſhip which lent Chriſt an opportunity of catching men vpon the ſhore, ſhall be requited with a plentifull draught of fiſh in the deepe: It had beene as eaſie for our Sauiour, to haue brought the fiſh to Peters ſhip, cloſe to the ſhore, yet as chuſing rather to haue the ſhip carried to the ſhole of fiſh, he bids (Lanch forth into the deepe:) In his miracles, he loues euer to meete nature in her bounds; and when ſhe hath done her beſt, to ſupply the reſt by his ouer-ruling power; The ſame power therefore, that could haue cauſed th. fiſhes to leape vpon drie land, or to leaue themſelues forſaken of the waters, vpon the ſands of the Lake, will rather finde them in a place naturall to their abiding (Lanch out into the deepe.)

Rather in a deſire to gratifie and obey his gueſt, then to pleaſure himſelfe, will Simon beſtow one caſt of his net; Had Chriſt inioyned him an harder taske, hee had not refuſed; yet not without an allegation of the vnlikelihood of ſucceſſe, (Maſter we haue trauailed all night, and caught nothing; yet at thy word I will let down the Net.) The night was the fitteſt time for the hopes of their trade; not vniuſtly might Simon miſdoubt his ſpeed by day, when he had worne out the night in vnprofitable labor: Sometimes God croſſeth the faireſt of our expectations, and giues a bleſſing to thoſe times and meanes whereof we deſpayre. That paines cannot be caſt away, which wee reſolue to loſe for Chriſt. Oh God, how many doe I ſee caſting out their Nets in the great Lake of the world, which in the whole night of their life haue caught nothing: They conceiue miſchiefe and bring forth iniquitie; They hatch Cockatrices egges, and weaue the Spiders web; he that eateth of their egges dieth, and that which is trodden vpon, breaketh out into a Serpent; Their webs ſhall bee no garment, neither ſhall they couer themſelues with their labours.

O yee ſonnes of men how long will yee loue vanitie and follow after lyes? Yet if we haue thus vainely miſpent the time of our darkneſſe; Let vs at the command of Chriſt, caſt out our new-waſhen nets; our humble and penitent obedience, ſhall come home laden with bleſſings, (And when they had ſo done they incloſed a great multitude of fiſhes, ſo that their Net brake:) What a difference there is betwixt our owne voluntary acts, and thoſe that are done vpon command; not more in the grounds of them, then in the iſſue? thoſe are oft-times fruitleſſe, theſe euer ſucceſſefull: Neuer man threw out his Net at the word of his Sauiour, and drew it backe empty; who would not obey thee, O Chriſt, ſince thou doſt ſo bountifully requite our weakeſt ſeruices? It was not meere retribution that was intended in this euent, but inſtruction alſo: This act was not without a myſteric: He that ſhould bee made a fiſher of men ſhall in this draught foreſee his ſucceſſe; the kingdome of heauen is like a draw-net, caſt into the Sea, which when it is full, men draw to land: The very firſt draught that Peter made after the complement of his Apoſtleſhip, incloſed no leſſe then three thouſand ſoules. O powerfull Goſpell, that can fetch ſinfull men from out of the depthes of naturall corruption: Oh happie ſoules, that from the blinde and muddy cels of our wicked nature, are drawne forth to the glorious libertie of the ſonnes of God! Simons Net breakes with the ſtore; abundance is ſometimes no leſſe troubleſome than want; the Net ſhould haue held, if Chriſt had not meant to ouer-charge Simon both with bleſſing and admiration: How happily is that Net broken, whoſe rupture drawes the fiſher to Chriſt. Though the net brake, yet the fiſh eſcaped not: He that brought them thither to be taken, held them there till they were taken, (They beckned to their partners in the other ſhip, that they ſhould come and helpe them:) There are other ſhips in partnerſhip with Peter, hee doth not fiſh all the Lake alone: There cannot be a better improuement of ſociery, then to helpe vs gaine, to relieue vs in our profitable labours; to draw vp the ſpirituall draught into the veſſell of Chriſt, and his Church: wherefore hath God giuen vs partners, but that wee ſhould becken to them for their aide in our neceſſary occaſions? Neither doth Simon ſlacken his hand, becauſe he had aſſiſtants. What ſhall wee ſay to thoſe lazie fiſhers, who can ſet others to the Drag, whiles themſelues looke on at eaſe; caring onely to feede themſelues with the fiſh; not willing to wet their hands with the Net? What ſhall we ſay to this exceſſe of gaine? The Nets break, the ſhips ſinke with their burden: Oh happie complaint of too large a capture! O Sauiour, if thoſe Apoſtolicall veſſels of thy firſt rigging, were thus ouer-laide, ours flote and totter with a ballaſted lightnes: Thou, who art no leſſe preſent in theſe bottomes of ours, lade them with an equall fraight of conuerted ſoules, and let vs praiſe thee for thus ſinking.

Simon was a skilfull Fiſher, and knew well the depth of his trade, and now perceiuing more then Art or nature in this draught, he fals downe at the knees of Ieſus, ſaying, (Lord, goe from me, for I am a ſinfull man.) Himſelfe is caught in this Net: He doth not greedily fall vpon ſo vnexpected and profitable a booty, but he turnes his eies from the draught to himſelfe, from the act to the Author, acknowledging vilenеſſe in the one, in the other Maieſtie: (Goe from me Lord, for I am a ſinfull man.)

It had beene pitie the honeſt Fiſher-man ſhould haue beene taken at his Word: Oh Simon, thy Sauiour is come into thine owne ſhip to call thee, to call others by thee vnto bleſſednеſſe, and doeſt thou ſay, Lord goe from me? As if the patient ſhould ſay to the Phyſitian: Depart from me, for I am ſicke. It was the voice of aſtoniſhment, not of diſlike; the voice of humility, not of diſcontentment: yea, becauſe thou art a ſinfull man, therefore hath thy Sauiour need to come to thee, to ſtay with thee; and becauſe thou art humble in the acknowledgement of thy ſinfulneſſe, therefore Chriſt delights to abide with thee, and will call thee to abide with him: No man euer fared the worſe for abaſing himſelfe to his God: Chriſt hath left many a ſoule, for froward and vnkind vſage, neuer any for the diſparagement of it ſelfe, & intreaties of humility. Simon could not deuiſe how to hold Chriſt faſter, that by thus ſuing to him, to be gone, then by thus pleading his vnworthineſſe.

O my ſoule be not weary of complaining of thine owne wretchedneſſe, diſgrace thy ſelfe to him that knowes thy vileneſſe; be aſtoniſhed at thoſe mercies which haue ſhamed thine ill deſeruings: Thy Sauiour hath no power to goe away from a proſtrate heart: Hee that reſiſts the proud, heartens the lowly (Feare not, for I will make thee hence-forth a Fiſher of men.) Loe, this Humilitie is rewarded with an Apoſtleſhip: What had the Earth euer more glorious, then a Legacy from Heauen? Hee that bade Chriſt goe from him, ſhall haue the honour to goe firſt on this happy errand: This was a Trade that Simon had no skill of: it could not but be enough to him, that Chriſt ſaid, I will make thee; the miracle ſhewed him able to make good his word; he that hath power to command the Fiſhes to be taken, can eaſily inable the hands to take them.

What is this diuine Trade of ours then, but a ſpirituall Piſcation? The World is a Sea, Soules like fiſhes ſwim at libertie in this Deepe, the Nets of wholeſome Doctrine, draw vp ſome to the ſhore of Grace and Glory: How much skill, and toyle, and patience, is requiſite in this Art? Who is ſufficient for theſe things? This Sea, theſe Nets, the Fiſhers, the Fiſh, the Veſſels are all thine, O GOD; doe what thou wilt in vs, and by vs: Giue vs ability and grace to take, giue men will and grace to bee taken, and take thou glory by that which thou haſt giuen.

WAs this then thy firſt miracle, O Sauiour, that thou wroughtſt in Cana of Galile? And could there be a greater miracle then this, that hauing beene thirty yeares vpon earth, thou didſt no miracle till now? That thy diuinitie did hide it ſelfe thus long in fleſh; that ſo long thou wouldeſt lye obſcure in a corner of Galile; vnknowne to that world thou cameſt to redeeme? That ſo long thou wouldeſt ſtraine the patient expectation of thoſe, who euer ſince thy Starre, waited vpon the reuelation of a Meſſias? We ſilly wretches if wee haue but a dram of vertue, are ready to ſet it out to the beſt ſhew; thou who receiuedſt not the Spirit by meaſure, wouldſt content thy ſelfe with a willing obſcurity, and concealedſt that power that made the world, in the roofe of an humane breſt, in a cottage of Nazareth. O Sauiour, none of thy miracles is more worthy of aſtoniſhment, then thy not doing of miracles. What thou didſt in priuate, thy wiſedome thought fit for ſecrecy; but if thy bleſſed Mother had not beene acquainted with ſome domeſticall wonders, ſhee had not now expected a miracle abroad; The Starres are not ſeene by day; the Sunne it ſelfe is not ſeene by night: As it is no ſmall art to hide Art, ſo is it no ſmall glory to conceale glorie: Thy firſt publike miracle graceth a mariage: It is an ancient and laudable inſtitution that the Rights of matrimonie ſhould not want a ſolemne celebration; When are feaſts in ſeaſon, if not at the recouery of our loſt ribbe? If not at this mayne change of our eſtate, wherein the ioy of obtayning, meets with the hope of further comforts? The Sonne of the Virgin, and the Mother of that Sonne are both at a wedding: It was in all likelihood ſome of their kindred, to whoſe nuptiall feaſt they were inuited ſo far; yet was it more the honour of the act, then of the perſon, that Chriſt intended: He that made the firſt marriage in Paradiſe, beſtowes his firſt miracle vpon a Galilean marriage: He that was the Author of matrimonie and ſanctified it, doth by his holy preſence, honeſt the reſemblance of his eternall vnion with his Church: How boldly may we ſpit in the faces of all the impure Aduerſaries of wedlocke, when the Sonne of God pleaſes to honour it?

The glorious Bride-groome of the Church, knew well how ready men would bee to place ſhame, euen in the moſt lawfull coniunctions; and therefore his firſt worke ſhall be to countenance his own Ordinance. Happy is that wedding, where Chriſt is a gueſt; O Sauiour, thoſe that marry in thee, cannot marry without thee: There is no holy Marriage whereat thou art not (how euer inuiſible) yet truly preſent, by thy Spirit, by thy gracious benediction. Thou makeſt marriages in heauen, thou bleſſeſt them from heauen. Oh thou, that haſt betrothed vs to thy ſelfe in Truth and Righteouſneſſe, doe thou conſummate that happy marriage of ours in the higheſt heauens.

It was no rich or ſumptuous Bridall, to which Chriſt with his mother, and Diſciples vouchſafed to come, from the further parts of Galile: I finde him not at the magnificent feaſts or triumphs of the Great; the proud pompe of the World did not agree with the ſtate of a ſeruant: This poore needy Bride-groome wants drinke for his gueſts. The bleſſed Virgin (though a ſtranger to the houſe) out of a charitable compaſſion, and a friendly deſire, to maintaine the decencie of an Hoſpitall entertaynement, inquires into the wants of her Hoſt: pitties them, bemones them, where there was power of redreſſe, (When the wine failed, the mother of Ieſus ſaid vnto him, They haue no wine.) How well doth it beſeeme the eyes of piety and Chriſtian loue, to looke into the neceſſities of others? Shee that conceiued the God of mercies, both in her heart and in her wombe, doth not fixe her eyes vpon her owne owne teacher, but ſearcheth into the penurie of a poore Iſraelite, and feeles thoſe wants, whereof he complaines not: They are made for themſelues, whoſe thoughts are onely taken vp with their owne ſtore, or indigence.

There was wine enough for a meale, though not for a feaſt: and if there were not wine enough, there was enough water; yet the holy Virgin complaines of the want of wine, and is troubled with the very lacke of ſuperfluitie: The bountie of our God reaches not to our life onely, but to our contentment; neither hath hee thought good to allow vs onely the bread of ſufficiency, but ſometimes of pleaſure. One while that is but neceſſary, which ſome other time were ſuperfluous. It is a ſcrupulous iniuſtice to ſcant our ſelues, where God hath beene liberall.

To whom ſhould wee complaine of any want, but to the Maker and Giuer of all things? The bleſſed Virgin knew to whom ſhee ſued; Shee had good reaſon to know the diuine nature and power of her Sonne: Perhaps the Bride-groome was not ſo needy, but if not by his purſe, yet by his credit, hee might haue ſupplied that want, or, it were hard if ſome of the neighbour-gheſts (had they beene duely ſollicited) might not haue furniſhed him with ſo much wine, as might ſuffice for the laſt ſeruice of a dinner; but bleſſed Mary knew a nearer way, ſhee did not thinke beſt to lade at the ſhallow Channell, but runnes rather to the Well-head, where ſhee may dip, and fill the Firkins at once with eaſe. It may bee ſhee ſaw that the trayne of Chriſt (which vnbidden followed vnto that feaſt, and vnexpectedly added to the number of the gheſts) might helpe forward that defect, and therefore ſhee iuſtly ſollicites her Sonne IESVS for a ſupply. Whether wee want Bread, or Water, or Wine; neceſſaries or comforts, whither ſhould wee runne, O Sauiour, but to that infinite munificence of thine, which neither denyeth, nor vpbraideth any thing? Wee cannot want, wee cannot abound, but from thee; Giue vs what thou wilt, ſo thou giue vs contentment with what thou giueſt.

But what is this I heare? A ſharpe anſwer to the ſuite of a Mother? (Oh woman, what haue I to doe with thee?) He whoſe ſweet mildneſſe and mercy, neuer ſent away any ſuppliant diſcontented, doth he onely frowne vpon her that bare him? He that commands vs to honour Father and Mother; doth he diſdayne her whoſe fleſh hee tooke? God forbid: Loue and duetie doth not exempt Parents from due admonition. Shee ſollicited Chriſt as a Mother, he anſwers her as a Woman: If ſhee were the Mother of his fleſh, his Deitie was eternall: Shee might not ſo remember her ſelfe to be a Mother, that ſhee ſhould forget ſhe was a Woman; nor ſo looke vpon him as a Sonne, that ſhee ſhould not regard him as a God: He was ſo obedient to her as a Mother, that withall ſhe muſt obey him as her God; That part which he tooke from her ſhall obſerue her; Shee muſt obſerue that Nature which came from aboue, and made her both a Woman and a Mother. Matter of miracle concerned the Godhead onely? Supernaturall things were aboue the ſphere of fleſhly relation: If now the bleſſed Virgin wil be preſcribing, either time or forme vnto diuine acts, O Woman, What haue I to doe with thee, my houre is not come. In all bodily actions his ſtyle was, O Mother: In ſpirituall and heauenly, O Woman. Neither is it for vs in the holy affaires of God, to know any faces, yea, if we haue known Chriſt heretofore according to the fleſh, henceforth know wee him ſo no more.

O bleſſed Virgin, if in that heauenly glory wherein thou art, thou canſt take notice of theſe earthly things, with what indignation doeſt thou looke vpon the preſumptuous ſuperſtition of vaine men, whoſe ſuits make thee more than a ſolicitor of diuine fauours? Thy humanitie is not loſt in thy Motherhood, nor in thy Glory: The reſpects of Nature reach not ſo high as heauen; It is farre from thee to abide that honour which is ſtolne from thy Redeemer.

There is a marriage, whereto wee are inuited; yea, wherein wee are already intereſſed, not as the Gheſts onely, but as the Bride; in which there ſhall bee no want of the wine of gladneſſe: It is maruell, if in theſe earthly banquets there bee not ſome lacke: In thy presence, O Sauiour, there is fulnesse of ioy, and at thy right hand are pleasures for euermore. Blessed are they that are called to the marriage-supper of the Lambe.

Euen in that rough answer, doth the blessed Virgin descry cause of hope. If his houre were not yet come, it was therefore comming; when the expectation of the ghests, and the necessitie of the occasion had made fit roome for the miracle, it shall come forth and challenge their wonder. Faithfully therefore and obseruantly, doth she turne her speech from her Sonne to the Wayters, (Whatsoeuer hee saith vnto you, doe it.) How well doth it beseeme the Mother of Christ to agree with his Father in heauen, whose voice from heauen, said, This is my well beloued Sonne, heare him: Shee that said of her selfe. Be it vnto me according to thy Word; saies vnto others, Whatsoeuer he saith to you, doe it, This is the way to haue miracles wroughtin vs, obedience to his Word. The power of Christ did not stand vpon their officiousnesse; hee could haue wrought wonders in spite of them, but their peruerse refusall of his commands, might haue made them vncapable of the fauour of a miraculous action: He that can (when he will) conuince the obstinate, will not grace the disobedient. Hee that could worke without vs, or against vs, will not worke for vs, but by vs.

This very poore house was furnished with many and large vessels, for outward purification; As if sinne had dwelt vpon the skin, that superstitious people sought holinesse in frequent washings; Euen this rinsing fouled them, with the vncleannesse of a traditionall will-worship. It is the soule which needs scowring; and nothing can wash that, but the blood, which they desperately wished vpon themselues and their children; for guilt, not for expiation. Purge thou vs, O Lord, with hyssop, and we shall be cleane; wash vs, and we shall be whiter than snow.

The Wayters could not but thinke strange of so vnseasonable a command; (Fill the water-pots.) It is wine that we want, what doe we goe to fetch water? Doth this holy man meane thus to quench our feast, and coole our stomachs? If there bee no remedie, we could haue sought this supply vnbidden; yet so farre hath the charge of Christs Mother preuailed, that in steade of carrying flagons of wine to the table, they goe to fetch pailes-full of water, from the Cisternes. It is no pleading of vnlikelyhoods against the command of an Almightie power.

Hee that could haue created wine immediately in those vessels, will rather turne water into wine; In all the course of his miracles, I doe neuer finde him making ought of nothing, all his great workes are grounded vpon former existences, hee multiplied the bread, he changed the water, he restored the withered limmes, he raysed the dead; and still wrought vpon that which was; and did not make that which was not: What doth he in the ordinarie way of nature, but turne the watery iuyce that arises vp from the roote into wine; he will onely doe this now suddenly, and at once, which he doth vsually by sensible degrees. It is euer duely obserued by the Sonne of God, not to doe more miracle than he needs.

How liberall are the prouisions of Christ? If hee had turned but one of those vessels, it had beene a iust proofe of his power, and perhaps that quantitie had serued the present necessitie; now he furnisheth them with so much wine, as would haue serued an hundred and fiftie ghests for an intire feast; Euen the measure magnifies at once, both his power and mercy. The munificent hand of God regards not our need onely, but our honest affluence: It is our sinne and our shame, if wee turne his fauour into wantonnesse. There must be first a filling, ere there bee a drawing out: Thus, in our vessels, the first care must be of our receit; the next, of our expence: God would haue vs Cisternes, not Channels. Our Sauiour would not bee his owne taster, but hee sends the first draught to the Gouernour of the feast. Hee knew his owne power, they did not; Neither would hee beare witnesse of himselfe, but fetch it out of others mouthes; They that knew not the originall of that wine, yet prayled the taste; (Euery man at the beginning, doth set forth good wine, and when men haue well drunke, then that which is worse; but thou hast kept the good wine vntill now;) The ſame bounty that expreſſed it ſelfe in the quantitie of the Wine, ſhewes it ſelfe no leſſe in the excellence: Nothing can fall from that diuine hand not exquiſite: That liberalitie hated to prouide crab-wine for his gueſts. It was fit, that the miraculous effects of Chriſt, (which came from his immediate hand) ſhould bee more perfect, than the naturall. O bleſſed Sauiour, how delicate is that new Wine, which wee ſhall one day drinke with thee, in thy Fathers Kingdome. Thou ſhalt turne this water of our earthly affliction, into that Wine of gladneſſe, wherewith our ſoules ſhall be ſatiate for euer. Make haſte, O my Beloued, and bee thou like to a Roe, or to a yong Hart vpon the Mountaine of Spices.

EVen the bloudy trade of Warre yeelded worthy Clients to Chriſt: This Romane Captaine had learned to beleeue in that Ieſus, whom many Iewes deſpiſed: No Nation, no Trade, can ſhut out a good heart from God: If he were a Forreiner for birth; yet hee was a Domeſtick in heart; Hee could not change his bloud, hee could ouer-rule his affections: he loued that Nation, which was choſen of God, and if he were not of the Synagogue, yet hee built a Synagogue; where hee might not bee a Partie, hee would bee a Benefactor: Next to being good, is a fauouring of goodneſſe: We could not loue Religion, if wee vtterly want it. How many true Iewes were not ſo zealous? Either will, or ability lacked in them, whom duty more obliged; Good affections doe many times more than ſupply nature; Neither doth God regard whence, but what wee are: I doe not ſee this Centurion come to Chriſt, as the Iſraelitiſh Captaine came to Elias in Carmel, but with his Cap in his hand, with much ſuit, much ſubmiſſion, by others, by himſelfe; hee ſends firſt the Elders of the Iewes, whom hee might hope, that their Nation and place, might make gracious: then, leſt the imployment of others might argue neglect, he ſeconds them in perſon: Cold and fruitleſſe are the motions of friends, where wee doe wilfully ſhut vp out owne lips: Importunity cannot but ſpeed well in both. Could wee but ſpeake for our ſelues, as this Captaine did for his Seruant, what could wee poſſibly want? What maruell is it if God be not forward to giue, where we care not to aske, or aske, as if wee cared not to receiue? Shall wee yet call this a ſuit, or a complaint? I heare no one word of entreaty: The leſſe is ſaid, the more is concealed, it is enough to lay open his want: He knew well, that hee had to deale with ſo wiſe and mercifull a Phyſitian, as that the opening of the maladie was a crauing of cure: If our ſpirituall miſeries be but confeſſed, they cannot fayle of redreſſe.

Great variety of Suitors reſorted to Chriſt; One comes to him for a Sonne, another for a Daughter, a third for himſelfe: I ſee none come for his Seruant, but this one Centurion; Neither was he a better man then a Maſter: His Seruant is ſick; hee doth not driue him out of doores, but layes him at home; neither doth he ſtand gazing by his beds-ſide, but ſeekes forth; He ſeekes forth, not to Witches or Charmers, but to Chriſt; he ſeekes to Chriſt, not with a faſhionable relation, but with a vehement aggrauation of the diſeaſe. Had the Maſter beene ſicke, the faithfulleſt Seruant could haue done no more: He is vnworthy to be well ſerued, that will not ſometimes waite vpon his followers. Conceits of inferioritie, may not breed in vs a neglect of charitable offices; ſo muſt we looke downe vpon our Seruants, here on earth, as that we muſt ſtill looke vp to our Maſter, which is in Heauen.

But why didſt thou not, O Centurion, rather bring thy Seruant to Chriſt for cure, then ſue for him abſent? There was a Paralyticke, whom Faith and Charitie brought to our Sauiour, and let downe thorow the vncouered roofe, in his Bed: why was not thine ſo carryed, ſo preſented? Was it out of the ſtrength of thy faith, which which assured thee, thou needest not shew thy Seruant to him, that saw all things? One and the same grace, may yeeld contrarie effects; They because they beleeued, brought the Patient to Christ, thou broughtest not thine to him, because thou beleeuest; their act argued no lesse desire, thine more confidence; Thy labour was lesse, because thy faith was more: Oh, that I could come thus to my Sauiour, and make such mone to him for my selfe: Lord, my soule is sicke of vnbeliefe, sicke of selfe-loue, sicke of inordinate desires, I should not neede to say more; Thy mercie, O Sauiour, would not then stay by for my suit, but would preuent mee (as here) with a gracious ingagement, I will come and heale thee. I did not heare the Centurion say, Either come, or heale him; The one he meant, though he said not; the other, hee neither said nor meant: Christ ouer-giues, both his words and intentions; It is the manner of that diuine munificence, where hee meets with a faithfull Suitor, to giue more than is requested; to giue when hee is not requested. The very insinuations of our necessities are no lesse violent, than successefull: We thinke the measure of humane bountie runnes ouer, when we obtayne but what we aske with importunitie: that infinite goodnesse keepes within bounds, when it ouer-flowes the desires of our hearts.

As he said so hee did; The word of Christ either is his act, or concurres with it; Hee did not stand still when hee said, I will come, but hee went as hee spake. When the Ruler intreated him for his sonne (Come downe ere hee dye) our Sauiour stird not a foote: the Centurion did but complaine of the sicknesse of his Seruant, and Christ vnasked sayes, I will come and heale him. That hee might bee farre from so much as seeming to honour wealth, and despise meannesse, hee that came in the shape of a Seruant, would goe downe to the sicke Seruants pallet, would not goe to the Bed of the rich Rulers Sonne; It is the baasest motiue of respect, that ariseth meerely from outward greatnesse. Either more grace, or more need, may iustly challenge our fauourable regards no lesse than priuate Obligations.

Euen so, O Sauiour, that which thou offeredst to doe for the Centurions Seruant, hast thou done for vs; Wee were sicke vnto death: So farre had the dead palsie of sinne ouer-taken vs, that there was no life of grace left in vs: When thou wert not content to sit still in heauen, and say, I will cure them; but addedst also, I will come and cure them; Thy selfe came downe accordingly to this miserable World, and hast personally healed vs, So as now we shall not dye but liue, and declare thy workes, O Lord; And oh! that wee could enough prayse that loue and mercy, which hath so graciously abased thee, and could be but so low deiected before thee, as thou hast stooped low vnto vs; that wee could be but as lowly subiects of thy goodnesse, as we are vnworthy.

Oh admirable returne of Humilitie: Christ will goe downe to visite the sicke Seruant; the master of that Seruant sayes, Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldest come vnder my roofe: The Iewish Elders, that went before to mediate for him, could say, (He is worthy that thou shouldest doe this for him;) but the Centurion, when hee comes to speake for himselfe (I am not worthy.) They said, He was worthy of Christs miracle; Hee sayes he is vnworthy of Christs presence: There is great difference betwixt others valuations, and our owne: Sometimes the world vnder-rates him that findes reason to set an high price vpon himselfe: Sometimes againe, it ouer-values a man that knowes iust cause of his owne humiliation: If others mistake vs, this can bee no warrant for our errour: We cannot be wise, vnlesse we receiue the knowledge of our selues by direct beames, not by reflection, vnlesse wee haue learned to contemne vniust applauses; and scorning the flattery of the World, to frowne vpon our owne vilenesse, Lord, I am not worthy.

Many a one if he had bin in the Centurions coate, would haue thought well of it, A Captaine, a man of good ability and command, a founder of a Synagogue, a Patron of Religion: yet he ouer-lookes all these, and when hee casts his eye vpon the diuine worth of Christ, and his owne weakenesse, he sayes, I am not worthy: Alas Lord, I am a Gentile, an Alien, a man of blood; thou art holy, thou art omnipotent. True

Humilitie will teach vs to finde out the beſt of another, and the worſt piece of our ſelues: Pride contrarily ſhewes vs nothing, but matter of admiration in our ſelues, in others, of contempt. Whiles hee confeſt himſelfe vnworthy of any fauour; hee approued himſelfe worthy of all. Had not Chriſt beene before in his heart, he could not haue thought himſelfe vnworthy to entertayne that Gueſt within his houſe: Vnder the low roofe of an humble breſt doth God euer delight to dwell: The ſtate of his Palace may not be meaſured by the height, but by the depth: Brags and bold-faces doe oft-times carry it away with men, nothing preuayles with God, but our voluntary deiections.

It is fit the foundations ſhould be layd deepe, where the building is high. The Centurions Humility was not more low, then his faith was lofty; that reaches vp into Heauen, and in the face of humane weakeneſſe deſcryes Omnipotence: Onely ſay the word, and my Seruant ſhall be whole.

Had the Centurions roofe beene Heauen it ſelfe, it could not haue beene worthy to bee come vnder, of him, whoſe Word was Almighty, and who was the Almightie Word of his Father; Such is Chriſt confeſſed by him that ſayes, Onely ſay the word; none but a diuine Power is vnlimited; neither hath Faith any other bounds then God himſelfe. There needs no footing to remoue Mountaines, or Deuils, but a word; doe but ſay the word, O Sauiour, my ſinne ſhall be remitted; my ſoule ſhall bee healed, my body ſhall be raiſed from duſt; both ſoule and body ſhall be glorious.

Whereupon then was the ſteddie confidence of the good Centurion? Hee ſaw how powerfull his owne word was with thoſe, that were vnder his command, (though himſelfe were vnder the command of another) the force whereof extended euen to abſent performances; well therefore might he argue, that a free and vnbounded power might giue infallible commands, and that the moſt obſtinate Diſeaſe, muſt therefore needs yeeld to the becke of the God of nature: weakeneſſe may ſhew vs what is in ſtrength; By one drop of water wee may ſee what is in the mayne Ocean; I maruell not if the Centurion were kind to his Seruants, for they were dutifull to him; hee can but ſay Doe this, and it is done; theſe mutuall reſpects draw on each other; cheerefull and diligent ſeruice in the one, cals for a due and fauourable care in the other; they that neglect to pleaſe, cannot complaine to be neglected. Oh that I could bee but ſuch a Seruant to mine heauenly Maſter: Alas, euery of his commands, ſayes, Doe this, and I doe it not: Euery of his inhibitions ſayes, Doe it not, and I Doe it; Hee ſayes, goe from the World, I runne to it, hee ſayes, Come to mee, I runne from him: Woe is mee, this is not ſeruice, but enmity: How can I looke for fauour, whiles I returne rebellion; It is a gracious Maſter whom wee ſerue; there can be no duty of ours, that hee ſees not, that he acknowledges not, that hee crownes not; we could not but bee happy, if wee could be officious.

What can be more maruellous than to ſee Chriſt maruell? All maruelling ſuppoſes an ignorance going before, and a knowledge following ſome accident vnexpected: now who wrought this Faith in the Centurion, but hee that wondred at it? He knew well what he wrought, becauſe he wrought what he would; yet hee wondred at what he both wrought and knew, to teach vs, much more to admire that, which he at once knowes and holds admirable.

He wrought this faith as God, hee wondred at it as man: God wrought, and man admired: hee that was both, did both, to teach vs where to beſtow our wonder. I neuer finde Chriſt wondring at gold, or ſiluer, at the coſtly and curious workes of humane skill or induſtry: yea, when the Diſciples wondred at the magnificence of the Temple, he rebuked them rather. I finde him not wondring at the frame of heauen and earth, nor at the orderly diſpoſition of all creatures and euents; the familiaritie of theſe things intercepts the admiration: But when he ſees the grace or acts of faith, hee ſo approues them, that he is rauiſhed with wonder. Hee that reioyced in the view of his Creation, to ſee that of nothing he had made all things good, reioyces no leſſe in the reformation of his Creature, to ſee, that he had made good of euill: Behold thou art faire, my Loue, behold thou art faire, and there is no ſpot in thee: My Siſter, my ſpouſe, thou haſt wounded my heart, thou haſt wounded my heart with one of thine eyes.

Our Wealth, Beautie, Wit, Learning, Honour, may make vs accepted of men, but it is our Faith onely, that ſhall make God in loue with vs: And why are wee of any other ſaue Gods Dyet, to bee more affected with the leaſt meaſure of Grace in any man, then with all the outward glories of the World? There are great men whom we iuſtly pitty, we can admire none but the gracious.

Neither was that plant more worthy of wonder in it ſelfe, then that it grew in ſuch a ſoyle, with ſo little helpe of Raine and Sunne: The weakeneſſe of meanes, addes to the prayſe and acceptation of our proficiency: To doe good vpon a little is the commendation of thrift; it is ſmall thanke to bee full handed in a large eſtate: As contrarily, the ſtrength of meanes doubles the reuenge of our neglect: It is not more the ſhame of Iſrael, then the glory of the Centurion, that our Sauiour ſayes, I haue not found ſo great faith in Iſrael; Had Iſrael yeelded any equall faith, it could not haue beene vneſpied of thoſe All-ſeeing eyes; yet were their helpes ſo much greater, then their faith was leſſe; and God neuer giues more then hee requires: Where wee haue laid our Tillage, and Compoſt, and Seed, who would not looke for a Crop? but if the vncultured fallow yeeld more, how iuſtly is that vnanſwerable ground neere to a curſe?

Our Sauiour did not mutter this cenſorious teſtimony to himſelfe, not whiſper it to his Diſciples, but he turned him about to the people, and ſpake it in their eares, that he might at once worke their ſhame and emulation: In all other things, except ſpirituall, our ſelfe-loue makes vs impatient of equals, much leſſe can wee endure to be out-ſtripped by thoſe, who are our profeſſed inferiours. It is well if any thing can kindle in vs holy ambitions: Dull and baſe are the ſpirits of that man, that can abide to ſee another ouertake him in the way, and out-run him to heauen.

He that both wrought this faith, and wondred at it, doth now reward it, Goe thy wayes, and as thou haſt beleeued, ſo be it vnto thee; Neuer was any faith vnſeene of Chriſt, neuer was any ſeene without allowance, neuer was any allowed without remuneration: The meaſure of our receits in the matter of fauour, is the proportion of our beliefe; The infinite Mercy of God (which is euer like it ſelfe) followes but one rule in his gifts to vs, the faith that hee giues vs: Giue vs, O God, to beleeue, and be it to vs as thou wilt, it ſhall be to vs aboue that we will.

The Centurion ſues for his Seruant, and Chriſt ſayes, So bee it vnto thee; The Seruants health is the benefit of the Maſter; and the Maſters Faith is the health of the Seruant'; And if the Prayers of an earthly Maſter, preuayled ſo much with the Sonne of God, for the recouery of a Seruant, how ſhall the interceſſion of the Sonne of God, preuayle with his Father in Heauen, for vs that are his impotent Children and Seruants vpon Earth? What can wee want, O Sauiour, whiles thou ſueſt for vs? Hee that hath giuen thee for vs, can deny thee nothing for vs, can deny vs nothing for thee; In thee we are happy, and ſhall be glorious; To thee, O thou mighty Redeemer of Iſrael, with thine eternall Father, together with thy bleſſed Spirit, one God infinite, and incomprehenſible, be giuen all prayſe, Honour, and Glory, for euer and euer. Amen.

TO MY RIGHT VVORTHY AND VVORSHIPFVLL FRIEND MASTER IOHN GIFFORD of Lancraſſe in Deuon, Eſquire, All Grace and Peace.

SIR,

I hold it (as I ought) one of the rich mercies of God, that hee hath giuen mee fauour in ſome eyes which haue not ſeene mee, but none that I know, hath ſo much demerited mee, vnknowne, as your worthy Familie: Ere therefore you ſee my face, ſee my hand willingly profeſſing my thankefull obligations: Wherewith may it pleaſe you to accept of this parcell of thoughts, not vnlike thoſe fellowes of theirs, whom you haue entertained aboue their deſert. Theſe ſhall preſent vnto you our bountifull SAVIOVR, magnifying his mercies to men, in a ſweet varietie; healing the diſeaſed, raiſing the dead, caſting out the Deuill, calling in the Publican, and ſhall raiſe your heart to adore that infinite goodneſſe; Euery helpe to our deuotion deſerues to be precious; So much more, as the decrepit crepit age of the World declines to an heartlesse coldnesse of Pietie: That GOD, to whose honour these poore labours are meant, blesse them in your hands, and from them, to all Readers. To his protection I heartily commend you, and the right vertuous Gentlewoman, your worthy Wife, with all the pledges of your happy affection, as whom you haue deserued to be and officious Friend,

IOS. HALL.

The Widowes Sonne raiſed.

THE fauours of our beneficent Sauiour were at the leaſt contiguous. No ſooner hath he raiſed the Centurions ſeruant from his bed, then he raiſes the Widowes Sonne from his Beere.

The fruitfull clouds are not ordained to fall all in one field; Nain muſt partake of the bounty of Chriſt as well as Cana, or Capernaum: And if this Sunne were fixed in one Orbe, yet it diffuſeth heate, and light to all the world: It is not for any place to ingroſſe the meſſengers of the Goſpell, whoſe errand is vniuerſall: This immortall ſeed may not fall all in one furrow.

The little City of Nain ſtood vnder the hill of Hermon, neere vnto Tabor; but now it is watered with better dewes from aboue, the doctrine and miracles of a Sauiour.

Not for ſtate, but for the more euidence of the worke, is our Sauiour attended with a large traine; ſo entring into the gate of that walled City, as if hee meant to beſiege their faith by his power, and to take it; His prouidence hath ſo contriued his iourney, that hee meets with the ſad pompe of a funerall; A wofull widow attended with her weeping neighbours is following her onely ſonne to the graue: There was nothing in this ſpectacle that did not command compaſſion.

A young man in the flowre, in the ſtrength of his age ſwallowed vp by death: Our decrepit age both expects death, and ſollicites it; but vigorous youth, lookes ſtrangely vpon that grim ſergeant of God: Thoſe mellow apples that fall alone from the tree, we gather vp with contentment; wee chide to haue the vnripe vnſeaſonably beaten downe with cudgells.

But more, a young man, the onely ſonne, the onely childe of his mother: No condition can make it other then grieuous for a well natur'd mother to part with her owne bowels; yet ſurely ſtore is ſome mitigation of loſſe: Amongſt many children one may be more eaſily miſſed; for ſtill wee hope the ſuruiuing may ſupply the comforts of the dead: but when all our hopes and ioyes muſt either liue or die in one, the loſſe of that one admits of no conſolation.

When God would deſcribe the moſt paſſionate expreſſion of ſorrow that can fall into the miſerable, hee can but ſay, Oh daughter of my people gird thee with ſackcloth, and wallow thy ſelfe in the aſhes, make lamentation and bitter mourning, as for thine onely ſonne: Such was the loſſe, ſuch was the ſorrow of this diſconſolate mother; neither words, nor teares can ſuffice to diſcouer it.

Yet more, had ſhee beene ayded by the counſell and ſupportation of a louing yokefellow, this burden might haue ſeemed leſſe intollerable: A good husband may make amends for the loſſe of a ſonne; had the root beene left to her intire, ſhee might better haue ſpared the branch; now both are cut vp, all the ſtay of her life is gone; and ſhee ſeemes abandoned to a perfect miſery. And now when ſhee gaue her ſelfe vp for a forlorne mourner, past all capacity of redresse, the God of comfort meets her, pitties her, relieues her: Here was no sollicitor but his owne compassion: In other occasions he was sought, and sued to: The Centurion comes to him for a seruant, the Ruler for a sonne, Iairus for a daughter, the neighbours for the Paralytike; here hee seekes vp the patient, and offers the cure vnrequested: Whiles we haue to doe with the Father of mercies, our afflictions are the most powerfull suitors. No teares, no prayers can moue him so much as his owne commiseration. Oh God, none of our secret sorrowes, can be either hid from thine eyes, or kept from thine heart: and when wee are past all our hopes, all possibilities of helpe; then art thou neerest to vs for deliuerance.

Here was a conspiration of all parts to mercy. The heart had compassion, the mouth said, Weepe not, the feet went to the Beere, the hand touched the coffin, the power of the Deity raised the dead: What the heart felt was secret to it selfe, the tongue therefore expresses it in words of comfort, Weepe not; Alas what are words to so strong and iust passions? To bid her not to weepe that had lost her onely sonne, was to perswade her to be miserable, and not feele it: to feele, and not regard it: to regard, and yet to smother it: Concealement doth not remedy but aggrauate sorrow: That with the counsell of not weeping therefore, she might see cause of not weeping; his hand seconds his tongue: He arrests the Coffin, and frees the Prisoner; Young man I say vnto thee, arise: The Lord of life, and death, speakes with command; No finite power could haue said so without presumption, or with successe: That is the voice that shall one day call vp our vanished bodies from those elements, into which they are resolued, and raise them out of their dust: Neither sea, nor death, nor hell can offer to detain their dead, when he charges them to be deliuered: Incredulous nature, what doest thou shrinke at the possibilitie of a resurrection, when the God of nature vndertakes it? It is no more hard for that almighty Word which gaue being vnto all things, to say, Let them be repaired, then, Let them be made.

I doe not see our Sauiour stretching himselfe vpon the dead corps, as Elias, and Elisha, vpon the sonnes of the Sunamite, and Sareptan, nor kneeling downe, and praying by the Beere, as Peter did to Dorcas, but I heare him so speaking to the dead, as if he were aliue, and so speaking to the dead that by the word hee makes him aliue, I say vnto thee, arise; Death hath no power to bid that man lye still, whom the Sonne of God bids Arise. Immediatly he that was dead sate vp. So at the sound of the last trumpet by the power of the same voice, wee shall arise out of the dust, and stand vp glorious; this mortall shall put on immortalitie; this corruptible, incorruption: This body shall not be buried, but sowne; and at our day shall therefore spring vp with a plentifull increase of glory; How comfortlesse, how desperate should be our lying downe, if it were not for this assurance of rising? And now, behold, lest our weake faith should stagger at the assent to so great a difficultie, he hath already by what hee hath done, giuen vs tasts of what he will doe: The power that can raise one man, can raise a thousand, a million, a world: no power can raise one man, but that which is infinite; and that which is infinite admits of no limitation: Vnder the old Testament, God raised one by Elias, another by Elisha liuing, a third by Elisha dead: By the hand of the Mediator of the New Testament, hee raised here the sonne of the Widow, the daughter of Iairus, Lazarus, and, in attendance of his owne resurrection he made a gaole-deliuery of holy prisoners at Ierusalem. Hee raises the daughter of Iairus from her bed; this widowes sonne from his Coffin, Lazarus from his graue, the dead Saints of Ierusalem from their rottennes, that it might appeare no degree of death can hinder the efficacie of his ouer-ruling command: Hee that keepes the keyes of death cannot onely make way for himselfe through the common Hall, and outer-roomes, but through the inwardest and most reserued closets of darknesse.

Me thinks I see this young man who was thus miraculously awaked from his deadly sleepe, wiping and rubbing those eyes that had beene shut vp in death; and descending from the Beere, wrapping his winding sheet about his loynes, cast himselfe downe

in a passionate thankfulnesse, at the feet of his Almightie restorer; adoring that diuine power which had commanded his soule back again to her forsaken lodging; & though I heare not what he said, yet I dare say they were words of praise & wonder, which his returned soule first vttered; It was the mother whom our Sauior pitied in this act, not the sonne; (who now forced from his quiet rest must twice passe through the gates of death.) As for her sake therefore he was raised; so to her hands was he deliuered; that she might acknowledge that soule giuen to her, not to the possessor: Who cannot feele the amazement and extasie of ioy that was in this reuiued mother, when her son now salutes her from out of another world? And both receiues and giues gratulations of his new life? How suddenly were all the teares of that mournfull traine dryed vp with a ioyfull astonishment? How soone is that funerall banquet turned into a new Birth-day feast? What striuing was here to salute the late carkasse of their returned neighbour? What awfull and admiring lookes were cast vpon that Lord of life, who seeming homely, was approued omnipotent? How gladly did euery tongue celebrate both the worke and the author? A great Prophet is raised vp amongst vs, and God hath visited his people. A Prophet was the highest name they could finde for him, whom they saw like themselues in shape, aboue themselues in power: They were not yet acquainted with God manifested in the flesh: This miracle might well haue assured them of more then a Prophet; but hee that raised the dead man from the Beere, would not suddenly rayse these dead hearts from the graue of Infidelitie: they shall see reason enough to know that the Prophet who was raised vp to them, was the God that now visited them, and at last should doe as much for them, as he had done for the yong man, raise them from death to life, from dust to glory.

THe bounty of God so exceedeth mans, that there is a contrarietie in the exercise of it: We shut our hands because we opened them; God therefore opens his, because he hath opened them: Gods mercies are as comfortable in their issue, as in themselues; Seldome euer doe blessings goe alone; where our Sauiour supplyed the Bridegroomes wine, there he heales the Rulers sonne; Hee had not in all these coasts of Galilee done any miracle but here: To him that hath shall be giuen.

We doe not finde Christ oft attended with Nobilitie; here hee is; It was some great Peere, or some noted Courtier that was now a suitor to him for his dying sonne: Earthly greatnesse is no defence against afflictions: Wee men forbeare the mighty: Disease and death know no faces of Lords, or monarks: Could these be bribed, they would be too rich; why should we grudge not to be priuiledged, when wee see there is no spare of the greatest?

This noble Ruler, listens after Christs returne into Galile; The most eminent amongst men will be glad to hearken after Christ in their necessitie: Happy was it for him that his sonne was sicke; he had not else been acquainted with his Sauiour, his soule had continued sicke; of ignorance, and vnbeliefe: Why else doth our good God send vs pain, losses, opposition, but that he may be sought to? Are we afflicted, whither should we goe but to Cana, to seeke Christ? whither but to the Cana of heauen, where our water of sorrow is turned to the wine of gladnesse, to that omnipotent Physitian, who healeth all our infirmities; that we may once say, It is good for mee that I was afflicted.

It was about a dayes iourney from Capernaum to Cana; Thence hither did this Courtier come for the cure of his sonnes Feuer; What paines euen the greatest can be content to take for bodily health? No way is long, to labour tedious to the desirous:

Our ſoules are ſicke of a ſpirituall feuer, labouring vnder the cold fit of infidelitie, and the hot fit of ſelfe-loue; and we ſit ſtill at home, and ſee them languiſh vnto death.

This Ruler was neither faithleſſe, nor faithfull: Had he been quite faithleſſe, he had not taken ſuch paines to come to Chriſt. Had he been faithfull, hee had not made this ſuit to Chriſt, when he was come, Come downe and heale my ſonne, ere he die.

Come downe, as if Chriſt could not haue cured him abſent; Ere he die, as if that power could not haue raiſed him being dead; how much difference was here betwixt the Centurion, and the Ruler? That came for his ſeruant, this for his ſonne. This ſonne was not more aboue the ſeruant, then the faith which ſued for the ſeruant ſurpaſſed that which ſued for the ſonne; The one can ſay, Maſter come not vnder my roofe, for I am not worthy, onely ſpeake the word, and my ſeruant ſhall be whole; The other can ſay, Maſter, either come vnder my roofe, or my ſonne cannot be whole. Heale my ſonne, had been a good ſuit, for Chriſt is the onely Phyſitian for all diſeaſes; but, Come downe, and heale him, was to teach God how to worke.

It is good reaſon that he ſhould challenge the right of preſcribing to vs, who are euery way his owne: it is preſumption in vs to ſtint him vnto our formes: An expert workman cannot abide to be taught by a nouice; how much leſſe ſhall the all-wiſe God endure to bee directed by his creature. This is more then if the patient ſhould take vpon him to giue a Recipe to the Phyſitian: That God would giue vs grace is a beſeeming ſuit, but to ſay, Giue it me by proſperitie, is a ſawcy motiue.

As there is faithfulneſſe in deſiring the end, ſo modeſty and patience in referring the meanes to the author. In ſpirituall things God hath acquainted vs with the meanes whereby he will worke, euen his owne Sacred ordinances: Vpon theſe, becauſe they haue his owne promiſe, we may call abſolutely for a bleſſing: In all others, there is no reaſon that beggers ſhould be chooſers: He who doth whatſoeuer he will, muſt doe it how he will: It is for vs to receiue, not to appoint.

He who came to complaine of his ſons ſicknes, heares of his owne, Except ye ſee ſignes and wonders, ye will not beleeue. This noble man was (as is like) of Capernaum; There had Chriſt often preached; there was one of his chiefe reſidencies: Either this man had heard our Sauiour oft, or might haue done; yet becauſe Chriſts miracles came to him onely by heare-ſay (for as yet we finde none at all wrought where hee preached moſt) therefore the man beleeues not enough; but ſo ſpeakes to Chriſt as to ſome ordinarie Phyſitian, Come downe and heale: It was the common diſeaſe of the Iewes, incredulitie; which no receit could heale but wonders. A wicked and adulterous generation ſeekes ſignes. Had they not been wilfully graceleſſe, there was already proofe enough of the Meſſias: the miraculous conception and life of the fore-runner, Zacharies dumbneſſe, the atteſtation of Angels, the apparition of the Starre, the iourney of the Sages, the viſion of the Shepheards, the teſtimonies of Anna and Simeon, the propheſies fulfilled, the voice from heauen at his baptiſme, the diuine words that hee ſpake; and yet they muſt haue all made vp with miracles; which though he be not vnwilling to giue at his owne times, yet he thinkes much to be tied vnto, at theirs: Not to beleeue without ſignes, was a ſigne of ſtubborne hearts.

It was a foule fault, and a dangerous one, Ye will not beleeue: What is it that ſhall condemne the world but vnbeliefe? What can condemne vs without it? No ſin can condemne the repentant; Repentance is a fruit of faith, where true faith is then, there can be no condemnation: as there can be nothing but condemnation without it. How much more foule in a noble Capernaite, that had heard the Sermons of ſo diuine a Teacher? The greater light we haue, the more ſhame it is for vs to ſtumble.

Oh what ſhall become of vs, that reele and fall in the cleareſt Sunne-ſhine that euer looked forth vpon any Church? Be mercifull to our ſinnes, O God, and ſay any thing of vs, rather then, Ye will not beleeue.

Our Sauiour tels him of his vnbeliefe; hee feeles not himſelfe ſicke of that diſeaſe: All his mind is on his dying ſon; As eaſily do we complaine of bodily griefes, as we are hardly affected with ſpirituall. Oh the meekneſſe and mercy of this Lambe of God:

When wee would haue lookt that hee ſhould haue puniſhed this ſuitor for not beleeuing, hee condeſcends to him, that hee may beleeue : Goe thy way, thy ſonne liueth. If wee ſhould meaſure our hopes by our owne worthineſſe, there were no expectation of bleſſings, but if we ſhall meaſure them by his bountie, and compaſſion, there can bee no doubt of preuailing. As ſome tender mother that giues the breſt to her vnquiet childe, in ſtead of the rod; ſo deales heewith our peruerſneſſes.

How God differences men according to no other conditions, then of their faith. The Centurions ſeruant was ſicke, the Rulers ſonne; The Centurion doth not ſue vnto Chriſt to come; onely ſayes, My ſeruant is ſicke of a Palſie; Chriſt anſwers him, I will come, and heale him : The Ruler ſues vnto Chriſt that hee would come, and heale his ſonne, Chriſt will not goe; onely ſayes, Goe thy way, thy ſonne liues; Outward things carie no reſpect with God; The Image of that diuine Maieſtie ſhining inwardly in the graces of the ſoule, is that which wins loue from him in the meaneſt eſtate; The Centurions faith therefore could do more then the Rulers greatneſſe; and that faithfull mans ſeruant hath more regard then this great mans ſonne.

The Rulers requeſt was, Come and heale; Chriſts anſwer was, Goe thy way, thy ſonne liues; Our mercifull Sauiour meets thoſe in the end, whom hee croſſes in the way : How ſweetly doth he correct our prayers, and whiles he doth not giue vs what we aske, giues vs better then we asked.

Iuſtly doth he forbeare to go downe with this Ruler, leſt he ſhould confirme him in an opinion of meaſuring his power by conceits of locality, & diſtance; but he doth that in abſence, for which his preſence was required with a repulſe, Thy ſonne liueth; giuing a greater demonſtration of his omnipotencie then was craued; How oft doth hee not heare to our will; that hee may heare vs to our aduantage ? The choſen veſſell would be rid of tentations, he heares of a ſupply of grace; The ſicke man askes releaſe, receiues patience : life, and receiues glory : Let vs aske what we thinke beſt, let him giue what he knowes beſt.

With one word doth Chriſt heale two Patients, the ſonne, and the father, the ſons feuer, the fathers vnbeleefe; That operatiue word of our Sauiour was not without the intention of a triall; Had not the Ruler gone home ſatisfied with that intimation of his ſonnes life, and recouerie, neither of them had beene bleſſed with ſucceſſe : Now the newes of performance meets him one halfe of the way; and hee that beleeued ſomewhat ere he came, and more when he went, grew to more faith in the way; and when he came home, inlarged his faith to all the ſkirts of his familie; A weake faith may be true, but a true faith is growing : He that boaſts of a full ſtature in the firſt moment of his aſſent, may preſume, but doth not beleeue.

Great men cannot want clients, their example ſwaies ſome, their authoritie more; they cannot goe to either of the other worlds alone ; In vaine doe they pretend power ouer others, who labour not to draw their families vnto God.

The Dumbe Deuill eiected.

THat the Prince of our Peace might approue his perfect victories, whereſoeuer hee met with the Prince of darkneſſe hee foyled him, he eiected him; He found him in heauen, thence did hee throw him headlong; and verified his Prophet, I haue caſt thee out of mine holy mountaine; And if the Deuils left their firſt habitation, it was becauſe (being Deuills) they could not keepe it; Their eſtate indeed they might haue kept, and did not; their habitation they would haue kept, and might not; How art thou falne from heauen O Lucifer? He found him in the heart of man; (for in that closet of God did the euill spirit after his exile from heauen shrowd himselfe; Sin gaue him possession, which he kept with a willing violence) thence hee casts him by his word, and spirit; He found him tyrannizing in the bodies of some possessed men, and with power commands the vncleane spirits to depart.

This act is for no hand but his: When a strong man keepes possession, none but a stronger can remoue it: In voluntary things the strongest may yeeld to the weakest, Sampson to a Dalilah; but in violent, euer the mightiest caries it; A spirituall nature must needs be in ranke aboue a bodily; neither can any power be aboue a spirit, but the God of spirits.

No otherwise is it in the mentall possession, Where euer sinne is, there Satan is; As on the contrary, whosoeuer is borne of God, the seed of God remaines in him; That euill one not onely is, but rules in the sonnes of disobedience: in vaine shall wee try to eiect him, but by the diuine power of the Redeemer; For this cause the Sonne of God was manifested, that hee might destroy the workes of the Deuill; Doe we finde our selues haunted with the familiar Deuills of Pride, selfe-loue, sensuall desires, vnbeleefe? None but thou, O Son of the euerliuing God, can free our bosomes of these hellish guests; Oh cleanse thou mee from my secret sinnes, and keepe mee that presumptuous sinnes preuaile not ouer-me. O Sauiour, it is no Paradox to say that thou castest out more Deuils now, then thou diddest whiles thou wert vpon earth; It was thy word, When I am lifted vp, I will draw all men vnto me; Satan weighes downe at the feet, thou pullest at the head, yea at the heart; In euery conuersion which thou workest, there is a dispossession. Conuert mee, O Lord, and I shall be conuerted: I know thy meanes are now no other then ordinary; if we expect to be dispossessed by miracle, it would be a miracle, if euer wee were dispossessed; Oh let thy Gospell haue the perfect worke in me, so onely shall I bee deliuered from the powers of darkenesse.

Nothing can be said to be dumbe, but what naturally speakes; nothing can speake naturally, but what hath the instruments of speech; which because spirits want, they can no otherwise speake vocally, then as they take voices to themselues, in taking bodies: This deuill was not therefore dumbe in his nature, but in his effect: The man was dumbe by the operation of that deuill, which possessed him; and now the action is attributed to the spirit, which was subiectiuely in the man; It is not you that speake, saith our Sauiour, but the spirit of your Father that speaketh in you.

As it is in bodily diseases, that they doe not infect vs alike, some seize vpon the humors, others vpon the spirits; some assault the braine, others the heart, or lungs; so in bodily and spirituall possessions: In some the euill spirit takes away their senses, in some their limms, in some their inward faculties; like as spiritually they affect to moue vs vnto seuerall sinnes: One to lust, another to couetousnesse, or ambition, another to cruelty: and their names haue distinguished them according to these various effects: This was a dumbe Deuill, which yet had possessed not the tongue onely of this man, but his eare, not that onely, but (as it seemes) his eies too.

O subtle and tyrannous spirit, that obstructs all wayes to the soule: that keepes out all meanes of grace both from the doore, and windowes of the heart; yea that stops vp all passages whether of ingresse, or egresse: Of ingresse at the eye, or eare, of egresse at the mouth, that there might be no capacity of redresse.

What holy vse is there of our tongue but to praise our Maker, to confesse our sinnes, to informe our brethren? How rife is this Dumbe Deuill euery where, whiles hee stops the mouthes of Christians from these vsefull and necessary duties?

For what end hath man those two priuiledges aboue his fellow creatures, Reason, and Speech, but, that, as by the one he may conceiue of the great workes of his Maker, which the rest cannot, so by the other he may expresse what hee conceiues to the honor of the Creator, both of them, and himselfe; And why are all other creatures said to praise God, and bidden to praise him, but because they doe it by their apprehension, by the expression of man? If the heauens declare the glory of God, how doe they it but to the eies, and by the tongue of that man, for whom they were made? It is no small honor whereof the enuious spirit shall rob his Maker, if he can close vp the mouth of his onely rationall, and vocall creature, and turne the best of his workemanship into a dumbe Idoll, that hath a mouth, and speakes not; Lord open thou my lips, and my mouth shall shew forth thy praise.

Praise is not more necessary then complaint; praise of God, then complaint of our selues, whether to God, or men; The onely amends we can make to God, when we haue not had the grace to auoid sinne, is to confesse the sinne wee haue not auoided: This is the sponge that wipes out all the blots and bars of our liues; If wee confesse our sinnes, he is faithfull and iust to forgiue vs our sins, and to cleanse vs from all vnrighteousnesse.

That cunning man-slayor knowes there is no way to purge the sicke soule, but vpward, by casting out the vicious humor wherewith it is clogged; and therefore holds the lips close, that the heart may not disburden it selfe by so wholesome euacuation. When I kept silence, my bones consumed; For day and night thy hand O Lord, was heauy vpon me; my moisture is turned into the drought of Summer. O let me confesse against my selfe my wickednesse vnto thee; that thou maist forgiue the punishment of my sinne.

We haue a tongue for God, when wee praise him; for our selues, when we pray, and confesse; for our brethren, when we speake the truth for their information, which if we hold backe in vnrighteousnesse, we yeeld vnto that dumbe Deuill: where doe we not see that accursed spirit? Hee is on the Bench, when the mute, or partiall Iudge speakes not for truth, and innocence: He is in the pulpit, when the Prophets of God smother, or balue, or adulterate the message of their master: Hee is at the Barre, when irreligious Iurors dare lend an oath to feare, to hope, to gaine: Hee is in the market, when godlesse chapmen for their peny sell the truth, and their soule: Hee is in the common conuersation of men, when the tongue belies the heart, flatters the guilty, balketh reproofes euen in the foulest crimes; O thou, who only art stronger then that strong one, cast him out of the hearts, and mouthes of men; It is time for thee, Lord, to worke, for they haue destroyed thy Law.

That it might well appeare this impediment was not naturall; so soone, as the man is freed from the spirit, his tongue is free to his speech: The effects of spirits as they are wrought, so they cease at once. If the Sonne of God doe but remoue our spirituall possession, we shall presently breake forth into the praise of God, into the confession of our vilenesse, into the profession of truth.

But, what strange variety doe I see in the spectators of his miracle, some wondring, others censuring, a third sort tempting, a fourth applauding: There was neuer man or action, but was subiect to variety of constructions: What man could bee so holy, as he that was God? What act could be more worthy, then the dispossession of an euill spirit? yet this man, this act passeth these differences of interpretation: What can we doe to vndergoe but one opinion? If we giue almes, and fast, some will magnifie our charity, and deuotion, others will taxe our hypocrisie: If wee giue not, some will condemne our hard-heartednesse, others will allow our care of iustice: if wee preach plainly, to some it will sauour of a careleſse slubbering, to others of a mortified sincerity: Elaborately, some will tax our affectation, others will applaud our diligence in dressing the delicate viands of God: What marueil is it, if it bee thus with our imperfection, when it fared not otherwise with him that was purity, and righteousnesse it selfe? The austere fore-runner of Christ came neither eating nor drinking, they say, He hath a Deuill: The sonne of man came eating and drinking, they say, This man is a glutton, a friend of Publicans and sinners; and hereonto of his holy acts carries away at once wonder, censure, doubt, celebration. There is no way safe for a man but to square his actions by the right rule of iustice, of charitie; and then let the world haue leaue to spend their glosses at pleasure. It was an heroicall resolution of the chosen vessell, I passe very little to be iudged of you, or of mans day.

I maruell not if the people maruelled; for here were foure wonders in one; The blinde saw, the deafe heard, the dumbe spake, the demoniacke is deliuered; Wonder was due to so rare, and powerfull a worke, and, if not this, nothing; We can cast away admiration vpon the poore deuices, or actiuities of men, how much more vpon the extraordinary workes of omnipotency? Who so knowes the frame of Heauen and earth, shall not much be affected with the imperfect effects of fraile humanity; but shall with no lesse rauishment of soule acknowledge the miraculous workes of the same Almighty hand. Neither is the spirituall election worthy of any meaner intertainment; Raritie and difficultie are wont to cause wonder; There are many things which haue wonder in their worth, and leese it in their frequence; there are some which haue it in their strangenesse, and leese it in their facilitie; Both meet in this. To see men haunted, yea possessed with a dumbe Deuill is so frequent, that it is a iust wonder to finde a man free; but to finde the dumbe spirit cast out of a man, and to heare him praising God, confessing his sinnes, teaching others the sweet experiments of mercy, deserues iust admiration. If the Cynick sought in the market for a man amongst men, well may we seeke amongst men, for a conuert. Neither is the difficulty lesse then the rateneſſe: The strong man hath the possession, al passages are blockt vp, all helps barred, by the trechery of our nature; If any soule be rescued from these spirituall wickednesses, it is the praise of him that doth wonders alone.

But whom doe I see wondring? The multitude; The vnlearned beholders follow that act with wonder, which the learned Scribes entertaine with obloquy: God hath reuealed those things to babes, which he hath hid from the wise, and prudent. With what scorne did those great Rabbins speake of these sonnes of the earth, This people that knowes not the Law is accursed? Yet the mercie of God makes an aduantage of their simplicity; in that they are therefore lesse subiect to cauillation, and incredulitie; as contrarily, his iustice causes the proud knowledge of other to lie as a blocke in their way, to the ready assent vnto the diuine power of the Messias; Let the pride of glorious aduersaries disdaine the pouerty of the clients of the Gospell; it shall not repent vs to goe to heauen with the vulgar, whiles their great ones goe in state to perdition.

The multitude wondered; Who censured but Scribes, great Doctors of the Law, of the diuinity of the Iewes? What Scribes, but those of Ierusalem, the most eminent Academie of Iudea? These were the men, who out of their deepe reputed iudgement cast these foule aspersions vpon Christ. Great wits oft-times mis-lead both the owners and followers; How many shall once wish they had beene borne dullards, yea idiots, when they shall find their wit to haue barred them out of heauen? Where is the Scribe, where is the disputer of this world? Hath not God made the wisdome of the world foolishnesse? Say the world what it will, a dram of holinesse is worth a pound of wit; Let others censure with the Scribes, let me wonder with the multitude.

What could malice say worse, He casteth out Deuills through Beelzebub the Prince of Deuills? The Iewes well knew that the Gods of the heathen were no other then Deuills; Amongst whom, for that the Lord of Flies (so called, whether for the concourse of flies to the abundance of his sacrifices, or for his ayde implored against the infestation of those swarmes) was held the chiefe, therefore they stile him, The Prince of Deuills: There is a subordination of spirits, some hier in degree, some inferiour to others: Our Sauiour himselfe tells vs of the Deuill, and his Angels: Messengers are inferiour to those that send them: The seuen Diuells, that entered into the swept and garnished house, were worse then the former: Neither can Principalities, and Powers, and Gouernours, and Princes of the darkenesse of this World designe other then seuerall rankes of euill Angels; There can be no beeing, without some kinde of order, there can bee no order in paritie; If wee looke vp into heauen, there is The King of Gods,

The Lord of Lords; hier then the hieſt. If to the earth. There are Monarchs, Kings, Princes, Peeres, people: If wee looke downe to hell, There is the Prince of Deuils: They labour for confuſion that call for parity: What ſhould the Church doe with ſuch a forme, as is not exemplified in heauen, in earth, in hell?

One deuill (according to their ſuppoſition) may be vſed to caſt out another: How far the command of one ſpirit ouer another may extend, it is a ſecret of infernall ſtate, too deepe for the inquiry of men: The thing it ſelfe is apparent; vpon compact, and precontracted compoſition, one giues way to other for the common aduantage: As we ſee in the Common-wealth of Cheaters, and Cut-purſes; one doth the fact, another is feed to bring it out, and to procure reſtitution: both are of the trade, both conſpire to the fraud; the actor falls not out with the reuealer; but diuides with him that cunning ſpoile.

One malicious miſcreant ſets the Deuill on worke to the inflicting of diſeaſe, or death; another vpon agreement, for a further ſpirituall gaine, takes him off: There is a Deuill in both: And if there ſeeme more bodily fauour, there is no leſſe ſpirituall danger in the latter: In the one Satan wins the agent, the ſuitor in the other: It will bee no cauſe of diſcord in hell, that one deuill giues eaſe to the body which another tormented, that both may triumph in the gaine of a ſoule. O God, that any creature which beares thine Image, ſhould not abhorre to bee beholden to the powers of hell for aid, for aduiſe? Is it not becauſe there is not a God in Iſrael, that men goe to enquire of the God of Ekron? Can men be ſo ſottiſh to thinke that the vowed enemy of their ſoules can offer them a bait, without an hooke? What euill is there in the City which the Lord hath not done, what is there which he cannot as eaſily redreſſe: He wounds, he heales againe: And if hee will not, it is the Lord, let him doe what ſeemes good in his eyes: If he doe not deliuer vs, he will crowne our faithfulneſſe in a patient perſeuerance. The wounds of a God are better then the ſalues of Satan.

Was it poſſible that the wit of Enuy could deuiſe ſo hie a ſlander? Beelzebub was a God of the heathen; therefore herein they accuſe him for an Idolater: Beelzebub was a Deuill to the Iewes, therefore they accuſe him for a coniurer: Beelzebub was the chiefe of Deuils, therefore they accuſe him for an Archexorciſt, for the worſt kinde of Magician: Some profeſſors of this blacke Art, though their worke be deuilliſh, yet they pretend to doe it in the name of Ieſus, and will preſumptuouſly ſeeme to doe that by command, which is ſecretly tranſacted by agreement: the Scribes accuſe Chriſt of a direct compact with the Deuill, and ſuppoſe both a league and familiarity, which by the law of Moſes (in the very hand of a Saint) was no other then deadly; Yea ſo deepe doth this wound reach, that our Sauiour ſearching it to the bottome, findes no leſſe in it then the ſinne againſt the Holy Ghoſt; inferring hereupon that dreadfull ſentence of the irremiſſibleneſſe of that ſinne vnto death: And if this horrible crimination were caſt vpon thee, O Sauiour, in whom the Prince of this world found nothing, what wonder is it if wee thy ſinfull ſeruants bee branded on all ſides with euill tongues?

Yea (which is yet more) how plaine is it that theſe men forced their tongue to ſpeake this ſlander againſt their owne heart? Elſe, this blaſphemie had beene onely againſt the ſonne of man, not againſt the holy Ghoſt: but now, that the ſearcher of hearts findes it to be no leſſe then againſt the bleſſed Spirit of God, the ſpight muſt needs be obſtinate; their malice doth wilfully croſſe their conſcience. Enuie neuer regards how true, but how miſchieuous: So it may gall, or kill, it cares little, whether with truth, or falſhood: For vs, Bleſſed are we when men reuile vs, and ſay all manner of euill of vs, for the name of Chriſt; For them: What reward ſhall be giuen vnto thee, thou falſe tongue? Euen ſharpe arrowes with hot burning coles; Yea thoſe very coles of hell from which thou wert enkindled.

There was yet a third ſort that went a mid way betwixt wonder and cenſure: Theſe were not ſo malicious as to impute the miracle to a Satanicall operation, they confeſſe it good, but not enough; and therefore vrge Chriſt to a further proofe:

Though

Though thou hast astonst this dumbe Deuill, yet this is no sufficient argument of thy diuine power: We haue yet seene nothing from thee like those ancient miracles of the times our forefathers: Iosua caused the Sunne to stand still; Elias brought fire downe from heauen; Samuel astonisht the people with thunder and raine in the midst of harueſt; If thou wouldst command our beleefe, doe somewhat like to these: The casting out of a Deuill, shewes thee to haue some power ouer hell; shew vs now, that thou hast no lesse power ouer heauen. There is a kinde of vnreasonableneſſe in deſire, and inſatiableneſſe in infidelitie; it neuer knowes when it hath euidence enough: This which the Iewes ouer-looked, was a more irrefragable demonſtration of diuinity, then that which they deſired. A Deuill was more then a Meteor, or a parcell of an element, to caſt out a Deuill by command, more then to command fire from heauen: Infidelitie euer loues to be her owne caruer.

No ſonne can be more like a father, then theſe Iewes to their progenitors in the deſert, that there might be no feare of degenerating into good, they alſo of old tempted God in the Wilderneſſe: Firſt, they are weary of the Egyptian bondage, and are ready to fall out with God, and Moſes, for their ſtay in thoſe fornaces: By ten miraculous plagues they are freed, and going out of thoſe confines, the Egyptians follow them, the Sea is before them: Now they are more afflicted with their libertie, then their ſeruitude: The Sea yeelds way, the Egyptians are drowned, and now, that they are ſafe on the other ſhore, they tempt the prouidence of God for waters: The Rocke yeelds it them; then, no leſſe for bread and meat, God ſends them Manna, & Quailes: they cry out of the food of Angels; Their preſent enemies in the way are vanquiſhed, they whine at the men of meaſures, in the heart of Canaan: Nothing from God but mercy, nothing from them but temptations.

Their true brood both in nature and in ſinne had abundant proofes of the Meſſiah, if curing the blinde, lame, diſeaſed, deafe, dumbe, ejecting deuils, ouer-ruling the elements, raiſing the dead, could haue beene ſufficient; yet ſtill they muſt haue a ſigne from heauen, and ſhut vp in the ſtile of the Tempter, If thou bee the Chriſt. The gracious heart is credulous: Euen where it ſees not, it beleeues; and where it ſees but a little, it beleeues a great deale: Neither doth it preſume to preſcribe vnto God what and how he ſhall worke, but takes what it findes, and vnmoueably reſts in what it takes. Any miracle, no miracle ſerues enough for their aſſent, who haue built their faith vpon the Goſpell of the Lord Ieſus.

Matthew called.

THE number of the Apoſtles was not yet full; One roome is left void for a future occupant: who can but expect, that it is reſerued for ſome eminent perſon? and behold, Matthew the Publican is the man: Oh the ſtrange election of Chriſt: Thoſe other Diſciples, whoſe calling is recorded, were from the Fiſher-boate, this from the Tole-booth: They were vnlettered, this infamous: The condition was not in it ſelfe ſinnefull, but as the taxes which the Romans impoſed on Gods free people, were odious, ſo the Collectors, the Farmers of them abominable: Beſides, that it was hard to hold that ſeate without oppreſſion, without exaction: One that beſt knew it, branded it with poling, and ſycophancy: And now, behold a griping Publican called to the familie, to the Apoſtle-ſhip, to the Secretary-ſhip of God: Who can deſpayre in the conſcience of his vnworthineſſe, when he ſees this patterne of the free bounty of him that calleth vs? Merits doe not carry it in the gracious election of God, but his meere fauour. There ſate Matthew the Publican buſie in his Counting houſe, reckoning vp the ſums

of his Rentals; raking vp his arrerages, and wrangling for denied duties, & did so little thinke of a Sauiour, that he did not so much as look at his passage, but, Iesus, as he passed by, saw a man sitting at the receit of custome, named Matthew: As if this prospect had bin sudden and casuall, Iesus saw him in passing by; O Sauiour, before the world was, thou saweſt that man sitting there, thou saweſt thine owne passage, thou saweſt his call in thy passage; and now thou goeſt purposely that way, that thou mighteſt see and call: Nothing can be hid from that piercing eye, one glance whereof hath discerned a Disciple in the cloathes of a Publican: That habit, that shop of extortion cannot conceale from thee a vessell of election: In all formes thou knoweſt thine own; and in thine own time shalt fetch them out of the disguises of their foule sinnes, or vnfit conditions: What saweſt thou, O Sauiour, in that Publican, that might either allure thine eie, or not offend it? What but an hatefull trade, an euill eye, a gripple hand, bloody tables, heapes of spoyle? yet now thou saideſt, Follow me: Thou that saidſt once to Ieruſalem, Thy birth and natinitie is of the land of Canaan: Thy father was an Amorite, thy mother an Hittite: Thy nauell was not cut, neither wert thou waſhed in water, to ſupple thee, thou waſt not ſalted at all; thou waſt not ſwadled at all: None eye pitied thee, but thou waſt caſt out in the open fields, to the loathing of thy perſon, in the day that thou waſt borne: And when I paſſed by thee, and ſaw thee polluted in thine owne blood, I ſaid vnto thee, Liue, yea I ſaid vnto thee when thou waſt in thy blood, Liue: Now also, when thou passedſt by, and saweſt Matthew sitting at the receit of custome, saideſt to him, Follow me: The life of this Publican was so much worse, then the birth of that forlorne Amorite, as, Follow mee, was more then, Liue: What canst thou see in vs, O God, but vgly deformities, horrible sinnes, despicable miseries, yet doth it please thy mercy to say vnto vs, both, Liue, and, Follow me?

The iust man is the first accuser of himselfe; whom doe wee heare to blazon the shame of Matthew, but his owne mouth? Matthew the Euangelist tels vs of Matthew the Publican: His fellowes call him Leui, as willing to lay their finger vpon the spot of his vnpleasing profession; himselfe will not smoother, nor blanch it a whit, but publishes it to all the world in a thankefull recognition of the mercy that called him: as liking well that his baseneſſe should serue for a fit foile to set off the glorious lustre of his grace by whom he was elected: What matters it how vile we are, O God, so thy glory may arise in our abasement?

That word was enough, Follow mee; spoken by the same tongue, that said to the corps, at Nain, Yong man I say to thee, Arise: Hee that said, at first, Let there bee light, sayes now, Follow mee: That power sweetely inclines which could forcibly command: the force is not more vnreſiſtible, then the inclination: when the Sunne shines vpon the Isicles, can they chooſe but melt, and fall? When it lookes into a dungeon, can the place chooſe but be enlightned? Doe wee see the Iet drawing vp strawes to it, the Load-stone iron, and doe wee maruell if the omnipotent Sauiour, by the influence of his grace, attract the heart of a Publican? Hee aroſe and followed him. We are all naturally auerſe from thee, O God; doe thou but bid vs, Follow thee; draw vs by thy powerfull word, and we shall runne after thee. Alas, thou speakeſt, and wee sit still: thou speakeſt by thine outward Word to our eare, and we stirre not, speake thou by the secret and effectuall word of thy spirit, to our heart: The world cannot hold vs downe, Satan cannot stop our way, we shall ariſe and follow thee.

It was not a more busie then gainefull trade that Matthew abandoned to follow Christ into pouertie: and now hee caſt away his Counters, and strucke his Tallies, and crosſed his bookes, and contemned his heapes of cash in comparison of that better treasure, which he fore-saw lye open in that happy attendance. If any commoditie bee valued of vs too deare to bee parted with, for Christ, wee are more fit to bee Publicans, then Disciples: Our Sauiour inuites Matthew to a Discipleship; Matthew inuites him to a feast. The ioy of his call makes him beginne his abdication of the world, in a banquet.

in the gueſt: The new ſeruant bids his Maſter, the Publican his Sauiour, and is honoured with ſo bleſſed a preſence. I doe not finde where Ieſus was euer bidden to any table, and refuſed: If a Phariſee, if a Publican inuited him, he made not dainty to goe: Not for the pleaſure of the diſhes, what was that to him who began his worke in a whole Lent of dayes? But (as it was his meate and drinke to doe the will of his Father) for the benefit of ſo winning a conuerſation. If he ſate with ſinners, he conuerted them; If with conuerts, he confirmed and inſtructed them; If with the poore, hee fed them; If with the rich in ſubſtance, he made them richer in grace. At whoſe board did hee euer ſit, and left not his hoſt a gainer? The poore Bridegroome entertaines him, and hath his water-pots filled with Wine: Simon the Phariſee entertaines him, and hath his table honoured with the publique remiſſion of a penitent ſinner, with the heauenly doctrine of remiſſion: Zacheus entertaines him, ſaluation came that day to his houſe, with the Author of it; that preſence made the Publican a ſonne of Abraham; Matthew is recompenſed for his feaſt with an Apoſtleſhip: Martha, and Mary entertaine him, and beſides diuine inſtruction receiue their brother from the dead: O Sauiour, whether thou feaſt vs, or we feaſt thee, in both of them is bleſſedneſſe.

Where a Publican is the Feaſt-maſter, it is no maruell if the gueſts be Publicans, and ſinners; whether they came alone out of the hope of that mercy, which they ſaw their fellow had found; or whether Matthew inuited them to be partners of that plentifull grace, wherof hee had taſted, I inquire not: Publicans and ſinners will flocke together; the one, hatefull for their trade, the other for their vicious life. Common contempt hath wrought them to an vnanimitie, and ſends them to ſeeke mutuall comfort in that ſociety, which all others held loathſome and contagious. Moderate correction humbleth, and ſhameth the offender: whereas a cruell ſeueritie makes men deſperate; and driues them to thoſe courſes whereby they are more dangerouſly infected: How many haue gone into the priſon faultie, and returned flagitious? If Publicans were not ſinners, they were no whit beholden to their neighbours.

What a table full was here? The Sonne of God beſet with Publicans, and ſinners: O happy Publicans, and ſinners, that had found out their Sauiour: O mercifull Sauiour, that diſdained not Publicans and ſinners.

What ſinner can feare to kneele before thee, when he ſees Publicans and ſinners ſit with thee? Who can feare to be deſpiſed of thy meekenеſſe and mercy, which didſt not abhorre, to conuerſe with the outcaſts of men? Thou didſt not deſpiſe the Thiefe confeſſing vpon the Croſſe, nor the ſinner weeping vpon thy feete, nor the Canaanite crying to thee in the way, nor the bluſhing adultereſſe, nor the odious Publican, nor the forſwearing Diſciple, nor the perſecutor of Diſciples, nor thine owne executioners, how can wee bee vnwelcome to thee, if wee come with teares in our eyes, faith in our hearts, reſtitution in our hands? O Sauiour, our breſts are too oft ſhut vpon thee, thy boſome is euer open to vs; wee are as great ſinners as the conſorts of theſe Publicans, why ſhould wee deſpaire of a roome at thy Table?

The ſquint-eyd Phariſees looke-a-croſſe at all the actions of Chriſt; where they ſhould haue admired his mercy, they cauill at his holineſſe; They ſaid to his Diſciples; why eateth your Maſter with Publicans, and ſinners? They durſt not ſay thus to the Maſter, whoſe anſwer (they knew) would ſoone haue conuinced them: This winde (they hoped) might ſhake the weake faith of the Diſciples: They ſpeake where they may bee moſt likely to hurt: All the crue of Satanicall inſtruments haue learnt this craft of their old Tutor in Paradiſe: We cannot reuerence that man, whom we thinke vnholy; Chriſt had loſt the hearts of his followers, if they had entertained the leaſt ſuſpition of his impurity; which the murmure of theſe enuious Phariſees would faine inſinuate: He cannot be worthy to be followed that is vncleane; He cannot but bee vncleane that eateth with Publicans and ſinners: Proud and fooliſh Phariſees, ye faſt whiles Chriſt eateth; ye faſt in your houſes, whiles Chriſt eateth in other mens; ye faſt with your owne, whiles Chriſt feaſts with ſinners: but if ye faſt in pride, whiles Chriſt eates

in humilitie: if ye fast at home, for merit, or popularitie, whiles Christ feasts with sinners for compassion, for edification, for conuersion, your fast is vncleane, his feast is holy, ye shall haue your portion with hypocrites, when those Publicans and sinners shall be glorious.

When these censurers thought the Disciples had offended, they speake not to them but to their Master, Why doe thy Disciples that which is not lawfull? now, when they thought Christ offended, they speake not to him, but to the Disciples: Thus, like true make-bates they goe about to make a breach in the family of Christ, by setting off the one from the other: The quicke eye of our Sauiour hath soone espied the packe of their fraud, and therefore hee takes the words out of the mouthes of his Disciples, into his owne: They had spoke of Christ to the Disciples; Christ answers for the Disciples concerning himselfe, The whole neede not the Physitian but the sicke. According to the two qualities of pride, scorne and ouer-weening, these insolent Pharisees ouer-rated their owne holinesse, contemned the noted vnholinesse of others: As if themselues were not tainted with secret sinnes, as if others could not be cleansed by repentance; The searcher of hearts meets with their arrogance, and findes those iusticiaries sinnefull, those sinners iust: The spirituall Physician findes the sicknesse of those sinners wholesome, the health of those Pharisees desperate: that, wholesome, because it cals for the helpe of the Physitian, this, desperate, because it needs not. Euery soule is sicke; those most that feele it not: Those that feele it, complaine; those that complaine, haue cure; those that feele it not, shall finde themselues dying ere they can wish to recouer. Oh blessed Physitian, by whose stripes we are haaled, by whose death we liue, happy are they that are vnder thy hands, sicke, as of sinne, so of sorrow for sinne; it is as vnpossible they should dye, as it is vnpossible for thee to want either skill, or power, or mercy: Sinne hath made vs sicke vnto death, make thou vs but as sicke of our sinnes, we are as safe, as thou art gracious.

Christ among the Gergesens; or Legion, and the Gadarene Herd.

I Doe not any where finde so furious a Demoniacke, as amongst the Gergesens: Satan is most tyrannous, where he is obeyed most. Christ no sooner sailed ouer the lake, then hee was met with two possessed Gadarenes: The extreme rage of the one harh drowned the mention of the other: Yet in the midst of all that cruelty of the euill spirit, there was sometimes a remission, if not an intermission, of vexation: If, oft-times Satan caught him, then, sometimes, in the same violence, he caught him not. It was no thanke to that malignant one, who as hee was indefatigable in his executions, so vnmeasurable in his malice; but to the mercifull ouer-ruling of God, who in a gracious respect to the weakenesse of his poore creatures, limits the spightfull attempts of that immortall enemy; and takes off this Mastiue, whiles wee may take breath: He who in his iustice giues way to some onsets of Satan, in his mercy restraines them: so regarding our deseruings, that withal he regards our strength: If way should be giuen to that malicious spirit, we could not subsist: no violent thing can endure; & if Satan might haue his will, we should no moment be free; He can be no more weary of doing euill to vs, then God is of doing good: Are wee therefore preserued from the malignitie of these powers of darkenesse, Blessed be our strong helper that hath not giuen vs ouer to be a prey vnto their teeth: Or if some scope haue been giuen to that enuious one, to afflict vs, hath it beene with fauourable limitations, it is thine onely mercy, O God, that hath chained and muzled muzled vp this band-dog, so as that he may scratch vs with his pawes, but cannot pierce vs with his fangs. Farre, farre is this from our deserts, who had too well merited a iust abdication from thy fauour, and protection, and an interminable seisure by Satan, both in soule and body.

Neither doe I here see more matter of thankes to our God, for our immunity from the externall iniuries of Satan, then occasion of serious inquirie into his power ouer vs, for the spirituall. I see some that thinke themselues safe from this ghostly tyranny, because they sometimes finde themselues in good moods, free from the suggestions of grosse sinnes, much more from the commission: Vaine men that feede themselues with so false and friuolous comforts; will they not see Satan, through the iust permission of God, the same to the soule, in mentall possessions, that he is to the body, in corporall? The worst demoniack hath his lightsome respites; not euer tortured, not euer furious, betwixt whiles hee might looke soberly, talke sensibly, moue regularly: It is a wofull comfort that wee sinne not alwayes: There is no Master so barbarous as to require of his Slaue a perpetuall vnintermitted toile; yet, though hee sometimes eate, sleepe, rest, hee is a vassall still: If that wicked one haue drawne vs to a customarie perpetration of euill, and haue wrought vs to a frequent iteration of the same sinne, this is gage enough for our seruitude, matter enough for his tyrannie, and insultation: He that would be our tormenter alwayes, cares onely to be sometimes our Tempter.

The possessed is bound, as with the inuisible fetters of Satan, so with the materiall chaines of the inhabitants; What can bodily force preuaile against a spirit? Yet they indeuour this restraint of the man, whether out of charity, or iustice: Charity, that he might not hurt himselfe; Iustice, that he might not hurt others: None doe so much befriend the Demoniacke as those that binde him: Neither may the spiritually possessed be otherwise handled; for though this act of the enemie be plausible, and, to appearance, pleasant, yet there is more danger in this deare, and smiling tyranny: Two sorts of chaines are fit for outragious sinners; Good lawes, vnpartiall executions; That they may not hurt, that they may not be hurt to eternall death.

These iron chaines are no sooner fast, then broken: There was more then an humane power in this disruption: It is not hard to conceiue the vtmost of nature, in this kinde of actions: Sampson doth not breake the cords, and ropes, like a theed of towe, but God by Sampson: The man doth not breake these chaines, but the spirit. How strong is the arme of these euill angels, how farre transcending the ordinarie course of nature? They are not called Powers for nothing; what flesh and blood could but tremble at the palpable inequalitie of this match, if herein the mercifull protection of our God did not the rather magnifie it selfe, that so much strength, met with so much malice, hath not preuailed against vs: In spight of both, we are in safe hands: Hee that so easily brake the iron fetters, can neuer breake the adamantine chaine of our faith: In vaine doe the chafing billowes of hell beate vpon that Rocke; wheron wee are built: And though these brittle chaines of earthly metall bee easily broken by him, yet the sure tempered chaine of Gods eternall Decree, hee can neuer breake, that almighty Arbiter of Heauen, and Earth, and Hell, hath chained him vp in the bottomlesse pit, and hath so restrained his malice, that (but, for our good) wee cannot be tempted; wee cannot bee foyled, but for a glorious victory.

Alas, it is no otherwise with the spiritually possessed: The chaines of restraint are commonly broken by the fury of wickednesse: What are the respects of ciuilitie, feare of God, feare of men, wholesome lawes, carefull executions to the desperately licentious, but as cobwebs to an harnet? Let these wilde Demoniacks know, that GOD hath prouided chaines for them, that will hold, euen euerlasting chaines vnder darknesse; these are such as must hold the Deuils themselues (their masters) vnto the iudgement of the great Day, how much more those impotent vassals? Oh that men would suffer themselues to be bound to their good behauiour, by the sweet, and easie recogrecognizances of their dutie to their God, and the care of their owne soules, that so they might rather be bound vp in the bundle of life.

It was not for rest, that these chaines were torne off, but for more motion: This prisoner runnes away from his friends, hee cannot runne away from his Iaylor: Hee is now carryed into the Wildernesse; Not by meere externall force, but by internall impulsion; Caried by the same power that vnbound him, for the opportunitie of his Tyranny, for the horrour of the place, for the affamishment of his body, for the auoydance of all meanes of resistance. Solitary Deserts are the delights of Satan; It is an vnwise zeale that moues vs to doe that to our selues, in an opinion of merit and holinesse, which the Deuill wishes to doe to vs for a punishment, and conueniencie of tentation. The euill Spirit is for solitarinesse; God is for societie: Hee dwels in the assembly of his Saints, yea, there he hath a delight to dwell: Why should not wee account it our happinesse that we may haue leaue to dwell, where the author of all happinesse loues to dwell?

There cannot be any misery incident into vs, whereof our gracious Redeemer is not both conscious, and sensible; without any intreaty therefore of the miserable Demoniack, or suit of any friend; the God of spirits takes pitie of his distresse; and from no motion but his owne, commands the euill Spirit to come out of the man: O admirable president of mercy, preuenting our requests, exceeding our thoughts, forcing fauours vpon our impotence; doing that for vs, which we should, and yet cannot desire. If men vpon our instant solicitations would giue vs their best ayde, it were a iust praise of their bounty: but it well became thee, O God of mercy, to goe without force, to giue without suit: And doe we thinke thy goodnesse is impayred by thy glory? If thou wert thus commiseratiue vpon earth, art thou lesse in heauen? How dost thou now take notice of all our complaints, of all our infirmities? How doth thine infinite pitty take order to redresse them? What euill can befall vs, which thou knowest not, feelest not, releeuest not? How safe are wee that haue such a Guardian, such a Mediator in heauen?

Not long before, had our Sauiour commanded the windes, and waters, and they could not but obey him: now, he speakes in the same language to the euill Spirit; he intreats not, he perswades not, hee commands. Command argues superioritie; Hee onely is infinitely stronger then the strong one in possession: Else, where powers are matcht, though with some inequalitie, they tugge for the victory; and without a resistance yeeld nothing. There are no fewer sorts of dealing with Satan, then with men: Some haue dealt with him by suit, as the old Satanian hereticks, and the present Indian Sauages, sacrificing to him, that hee hurt not: Others by couenant, conditioning their seruice vpon his assistance, as Witches and Magicians: Others, by insinuation of implicite compact, as Charmers, and Figure-casters: Others by adiuration, as the sonnes of Scena, and moderne Exorcists, vnwarrantably charging him by an higher name then their owne: None euer offered to deale with Satan by a direct and primary command, but the God of Spirits; the great Archangell, when the strife was about the body of Moses, commanded not, but imprecated rather, The Lord rebuke thee, Satan: It is onely the God that made this Spirit an Angell of light, that can command him, now that hee hath made himselfe the Prince of darknesse. If any created power dare to vsurpe a word of command, he laughs at their presumption; and knows them his vassalls, whom hee dissembles to feare as his Lords. It is thou onely, O Sauiour, at whose becke those stubborne Principalities of hell yeeld, and tremble: no wicked man can be so much a slaue to Satan, as Satan is to thee; the interposition of thy grace may defeat that dominion of Satan: thy rule is absolute, and capable of no lett. What need wee to feare, whiles we are vnder so omnipotent a Commander? The waues of the deepe rage horribly, yet the Lord is stronger then they: Let those Principalities and Powers doe their worst: Those mighty aduersaries are vnder the command of him, who loued vs so well as to bleed for vs: What can wee now doubt of? His power, or his will? How can wee professe him a God, and doubt of his power? How can wee profeſſe him a Sauiour, and doubt of his will? Hee, both, can, and will command thoſe infernall powers: we are no leſſe ſafe, then they are malicious.

The Deuill ſaw Ieſus by the eyes of the Demoniack; For the ſame ſaw, that ſpake; but it was the ill ſpirit, that ſaid, I beſeech thee torment mee not: It was ſore againſt his will that hee ſaw ſo dreadfull an obiect: The ouer-ruling power of Chriſt dragged the foule ſpirit into his preſence. Guiltineſſe would faine keepe out of ſight: The limmes of ſo wofull an head ſhall once call on the Hils, and Rocks to hide them from the face of the Lambe, ſuch Lyon-like terrour is in that milde face, when it lookes vpon wickedneſſe: Neither ſhall it bee one day the leaſt part of the torment of the damned, to ſee the moſt louely ſpectacle that heauen can afford: Hee from whom they fled in his offers of grace, ſhall be ſo much more terrible, as hee was, and is more gracious: I maruell not therefore that the Deuill, when hee ſaw Ieſus, cryed out; I could maruell that hee fell downe, that hee worſhipped him: That which the proud ſpirit would haue had Chriſt to haue done to him, in his great Duell, the ſame he now doth vnto Chriſt, fearfully, ſeruilely, forcedly: Who ſhall henceforth bragge of the externall homage hee performes to the Sonne of God, when hee ſees Satan himſelfe fall downe and worſhip? What comfort can there be in that, which is common to vs with Deuils; who as they beleeue, and tremble, ſo they tremble, and worſhip? The outward bowings is the body of the action, the diſpoſition of the ſoule is the ſoule of it; therein lyes the difference from the counterfeit ſtoopings of wicked men, and ſpirits: The religious heart ſerue the Lord in feare, and reioyces in him with trembling. What it doth is in way of ſeruice; In ſeruice to his Lord, whoſe ſoueraignty is his comfort and protection; In the feare of a ſon, not of a ſlaue; In feare tempered with ioy; In a ioy but allayed with trembling; whereas the proſtration of wicked men, and deuils, is onely an act of forme, or of force; as to their Iudge, as to their tormentor, not as to their Lord; in meere ſeruilitie, not in reuerence, in an vncomfortable dulneſſe, without all delight: in a perfect horror, without capacitie of ioy: Theſe worſhip without thankes, becauſe they fall downe without the true affections of worſhip.

Who ſo maruels to ſee the Deuill vpon his knees, would much more maruell to heare what came from his mouth, Ieſu the ſonne of the moſt high God; A confeſſion, which if we ſhould heare without the name of the Author, we ſhould aske, from what Saint it came. Behold the ſame name giuen to Chriſt by the Deuill, which was formerly giuen him by the Angell, Thou ſhalt call his name Ieſus; That awfull name, whereat euery knee ſhall bow, in heauen, in earth, and vnder the earth, is called vpon, by this proſtrate Deuill: and leaſt that ſhould not import enough, (ſince others haue beene honoured by this name in Type,) he addes for full diſtinction, The Sonne of the moſt High God: The good Syrophenecian, and blind Bartemeus could ſay, The Sonne of Dauid: It was well to acknowledge the true deſcent of his pedigree, according to the fleſh: but this infernall ſpirit lookes aloft, and fetcheth his line out of the higheſt heauens. The Sonne of the moſt high God: The famous confeſſion of the prime Apoſtle (which honoured him with a new name to immortalitie,) was no other then, Thou art the Chriſt, the Sonne of the liuing God; and what other doe I heare from the lips of a fiend? None more diuine words could fall from the higheſt Saint: Nothing hinders but that the verieſt miſcreant on earth, yea the fouleſt Deuill in Hell may ſpeake holily: It is no paſſing of iudgement vpon looſe ſentences: So Peter ſhould haue been caſt for a Satan, in denying, forſwearing, curſing; and the Deuill ſhould haue beene ſet vp for a Saint, in confeſſing, Ieſus the Sonne of the moſt high God: Fond hypocrite, that pleaſeſt thy ſelfe, in talking well, heare this Deuil; and when thou canſt ſpeake better then he, looke to fare better; but in the meane time know, that a ſmooth tongue, and a foule heart, caries away double iudgements.

beleeued what he confessed, Iesus the Sonne of the most high God. To the confusion of those semi-Christians, that haue either held doubtfully, or ignorantly mis-knowne, or blasphemously denied what the very Deuils haue professed. How little can a bare speculation auaile vs in these cases of Diuinity? So farre this Deuill hath attained, to no ease, no comfort. Knowledge alone doth but puffe vp; it is our loue that edifies: If there be not a sense of our sure interest in this Iesus, a power to apply his merits, and obedience, we are no whit the safer, no whit the better; onely wee are so much the wiser, to vnderstand who shall condemne vs.

This piece of the clause was spoken like a Saint, Iesus the Sonne of the most high God: the other piece like a Deuill, What haue I to doe with thee? If the disclamation were vniuersall, the latter words would impugne the former: for whiles hee confesses Iesus to be the Sonne of the most high God, he withall confesses his owne inexitable subiection. Wherefore would he beseech, if he were not obnoxious; He cannot, he dare not say, What hast thou to doe with me? but, What haue I to doe with thee? Others indeed I haue vexed, thee I feare, in respect then of any violence, of any personall prouocation, What haue I to doe with thee? And dost thou aske, O thou euill spirit, what hast thou to doe with Christ, whiles thou vexest a seruant of Christ? Hast thou thy name from knowledge, and yet so mistakest him whom thou confessest, as if nothing could bee done to him, but what immediately concernes his owne person? Heare that great, and iust Iudge sentencing vpon his dreadfull Tribunall: In as much as thou didst it vnto one of these little ones, thou didst it vnto me: It is an idle misprision to seuer the sense of an iniury done to any of the members, from the head.

He that had humility enough to kneele to the Son of God, hath boldnesse enough to expostulate, Art thou come to torment vs before our time? Whether it were, that Satan, who vseth to enioy the torment of sinners, whose musicke it is to heare our shrieks, and gnashings, held it no small piece of his torment, to be restrained in the exercise of his tyrannie: Or, whether the very presence of Christ were his racke: For, the guilty spirit, proiecteth terrible things, and cannot behold the Iudge, or the executioner without a renouation of horror: Or, whether that (as himselfe professeth) he were now in a fearfull expectation of being commanded downe into the deepe, for a further degree of actuall torment, which he thus deprecates.

There are tortures appointed to the very spirituall natures of euill Angels: Men that are led by sense, haue easily granted the body subiect to torment, who yet, haue not so readily conceiued this incident to a spirituall substance: The holy Ghost hath not thought it fit to acquaint vs with the particular manner of these inuisible acts, rather willing that wee should herein feare, then enquire; but as all matters of faith, though they cannot bee proued by reason (for that they are in a higher sphere) yet afford an answer able to stop the mouth of all reason, that dares barke against them, (since truth cannot be opposite to it selfe) so, this of the sufferings of spirits: There is therefore both an intentionall torment incident to spirits, and a reall: For, as in blessednesse the good spirits find themselues ioyned vnto the chiefe good; and hereupon feele a perfect loue of God, and vnspeakable ioy in him, and rest in themselues, so contrarily, the euill spirits perceiue themselues eternally excluded from the presence of God, and see themselues setled in a wofull darknesse; and from the sense of this separation arises an horrour not to be expressed, not to be conceiued: How many men haue we knowne to torment themselues with their owne thoughts? There needs no other gibbet then that, which their troubled spirit hath erected in their owne heart: and if some paines begin at the body, and from thence afflict the soule in a copartnership of griefe, yet others arise immediately from the soule, and draw the body into a participation of misery: Why may wee not therefore conceiue meere and separate spirits capable of such an inward excruciation?

Besides which, I heare the Iudge of men and Angels say, Goe yee cursed into euerlasting fire, prepared for the Deuill, and his Angels, I heare the Prophet say, Tophet is prepared of old; If with feare, and without curiositie wee may looke vpon thoſe flames: Why may we not attribute a ſpirituall nature to that more then naturall fire? In the end of the world, the elements ſhall be diſſolued by fire: and if the pure quinteſſentiall matter of the skie, and the element of fire it ſelfe, ſhall be diſſolued by fire, then that laſt fire ſhall be of another nature, then that which it conſumeth: what hinders then but that the omnipotent God hath from eternitie created a fire of another nature proportionable euen to ſpirituall eſſences? Or why may wee not diſtinguiſh of fire, as it is it ſelfe, a bodily creature, and, as it is an inſtrument of Gods iuſtice, ſo working, not by any materiall vertue, or power of it owne, but by a certain height of ſupernaturall efficacie, to which it is exalted by the omnipotence of that ſupreme and righteous Iudge? Or laſtly, why may wee not conceiue that though ſpirits haue nothing materiall in their nature, which that fire ſhould worke vpon, yet by the iudgement of the almightie Arbiter of the world, iuſtly willing their torment, they may be made moſt ſenſible of paine, and, by the obedible ſubmiſſion of their created nature, wrought vpon immediately by their appointed tortures: Beſides, the very horrour, which ariſeth from the place, whereto they are euerlaſtingly confined: For if the incorporeall ſpirits of liuing men may bee held in a lothed or painfull body, and conceiue ſorrow to bee ſo impriſoned: Why may wee not as eaſily yeeld that the euill ſpirits of Angels, or men, may be held in thoſe direfull flames, and much more abhorre therein to continue for euer? Tremble rather, O my ſoule, at the thought of this wofull condition of the euill Angels; who, for one onely act of Apoſtaſie from God, are thus perpetually tormented, whereas we ſinfull wretches multiply many, and preſumptuous offences againſt the Maieſtie of our God: And withall admire, and magnifie that infinite mercy to the miſerable generation of man; which, after this holy ſeueritie of iuſtice to the reuolted Angels, ſo graciouſly forbeares our hainous iniquities, and both ſuffers vs to be free for the time, from theſe helliſh torments, and giues vs opportunitie of a perfect freedome from them for euer: Praiſe the Lord, O my ſoule, and all that is within me, praiſe his holy Name, who forgiueth all thy ſinnes, and healeth all thine infirmities: Who redeemeth thy life from deſtruction, and crowneth thee with mercy and compaſſions.

There is no time wherein the euill ſpirits are not tormented: there is a time wherein they expect to be tormented yet more: Art thou come to torment vs before our time? They knew that the laſt Aſſiſes are the prefixed terme of their full execution; which they alſo vnderſtood to be not yet come: For though they knew not when the Day of Iudgement ſhould be; (a point concealed from the glorious Angels of heauen) yet they knew when it ſhould not be; and therefore they ſay, Before the time. Euen the very euill ſpirits confeſſe, and fearfully attend a ſet day of vniuerſall Seſſions; They beleeue leſſe then Deuils, that either doubt of, or deny that day of finall retribution.

Oh the wonderfull mercy of our God, that both to wicked men, and ſpirits, reſpites the vtmoſt of their torment: He might vpon the firſt inſtant of the fall of Angels, haue inflicted on them the higheſt extremitie of his vengeance: Hee might vpon the firſt ſinnes of our youth (yea of our nature) haue ſwept vs away, and giuen vs our portion in that fierie lake; he ſtayes a time for both: Though, with this difference of mercy to vs men, that here, not onely is a delay, but, may be, an vtter preuention of puniſhment, which to the euill ſpirits is altogether impoſſible; They doe ſuffer, they muſt ſuffer; and though they haue now deſerued to ſuffer all they muſt, yet they muſt once ſuffer more then they doe.

Yet ſo doth this euill ſpirit expoſtulate, that he ſues, I beſeech thee torment mee not. The world is well changed, ſince Satans firſt onſet vpon Chriſt: Then, he could ſay, If thou be the Sonne of God; now, Ieſus, the Sonne of the moſt high God; then, All theſe will I giue thee if thou wilt fall downe, and worſhip me; now, I beſeech thee torment mee not: The ſame power, when hee liſts, can change the note of the Tempter, to vs; How happy are wee that haue ſuch a Redeemer as can command the Deuils to their chaines? Oh conſider this ye lawleſſe ſinners, that haue ſaid, Let vs breake his his bonds, and cast his cords from vs: How euer the Almighty suffers you, for a iudgement to haue fre scope to euill, and ye can now impotently resist the reuealed will of your Creator, yet the time shall come, when yee shall see the very masters, whom ye haue serued, (the powers of darknesse) vnable to auoid the reuenges of God; How much lesse shall man striue with his Maker; man, whose breath is in his nostrils, whose house is clay, whose foundation is the dust?

Nature teaches euery creature to wish a freedome from paine: the fouleſt spirits cannot but loue themselues; and this loue must needs produce a deprecation of euill: Yet, what a thing is this, to heare the deuill at his prayers: I beseech thee torment me not: Deuotion is not guilty of this, but feare: There is no grace in the suit of Deuils, but nature; no respect of glory to their Creator, but their owne ease; They cannot pray against sinne, but against torment for sinne. What newes is it now, to heare the prophanest mouth, in extremitie, imploring the Sacred Name of God, when the Deuils doe so? The worst of all creatures hates punishment, and can say, Lead me not into paine, onely the good heart can say, Lead mee not into temptation: If wee can as heartily pray against sinne, for the auoiding of displeasure, as against punishment, when wee haue displeased, there is true grace in the soule: Indeed, if wee could feruently pray against sinne, we should not need to pray against punishment; which is no other then the inseparable shadow of that bodie; but if we haue not laboured against our sins, in vaine doe wee pray against punishment; God must be iust; and the wages of sinne is death.

It pleased our holy Sauiour, not onely to let fall words of command vpon this spirit, but to interchange some speeches with him: All Christs actions are not for example: It was the errour of our Grand-mother to hold chat with Satan: That God, who knowes the craft of that old Serpent, and our weake simplicitie, hath charged vs not to enquire of an euill spirit: surely, if the Disciples returning to Iacobs Well, wondred to see Christ talke with a woman, well may wee wonder to see him talking with an vncleane Spirit: Let it be no presumption, O Sauiour, to aske vpon what grounds thou didst this, wherein wee may not follow thee: Wee know, that sinne was excepted in thy conformitie of thy selfe to vs; wee know there was no guile found in thy mouth, no possibilitie of taint in thy nature, in thine actions: Neither is it hard to conceiue how the same thing may bee done by thee without sinne, which wee cannot but sinne in doing. There is a vast difference in the intention, in the Agent; For, on the one side, thou didst not aske the name of the spirit, as one that knew not, and would learne by inquiring; but, that by the confession of that mischiefe, which thou pleasedst to suffer, the grace of the cure might bee the more conspicuous, the more glorious; so, on the other, God and man might doe that safely, which meere man cannot doe, without danger; thou mightest touch the leprosie, and not be legally vncleane, because thou touchedst it to heale it, didst not touch it with possibility of infection; So mightest thou, who by reason of the perfection of thy diuine nature, wert vncapable of any staine, by the interlocution with Satan, safely conferre with him, whom corrupt man, pre-disposed to the danger of such a parle, may not meddle with, without sinne, because not without perill: It is for none but God to hold discourse with Satan: Our surest way is to haue as little to doe with that euill one, as wee may; and if hee shall offer to maintaine conference with vs by his secret tentations, to turne our speech vnto our God, with the Archangell, The Lord rebuke thee Satan.

It was the presupposition of him that knew it, that not only men but spirits haue names: This then he askes; not out of an ignorance, or curiositie; nothing could bee hid from him who calleth the starres, and all the hosts of heauen by their names; but, out of a iust respect to the glory of the miracle hee was working, whereto the notice of the name would not a little auaile: For, if without inquirie, or confession, our Sauiour had ejected this euill spirit, it had passed for the single dispossession of one onely Deuill, whereas now, it appeares there was a combination and hellish cham-champertie in these powers of darknesse, which were all forced to vaile vnto that almighty command.

Before, the Deuill had spoken singularly of himselfe, What haue I to doe with thee; and, I beseech thee torment me not: Our Sauiour yet knowing that there was a multitude of Deuils lurking in that breſt, who dissembled their presence, wrests it out of the Spirit by this interrogation, What is thy name? Now can those wicked ones no longer hide themselues: He that asked the question, forced the answer, My name is Legion. The author of discord hath borrowed a name of warre; from that military order of discipline (by which the Iewes were subdued) doth the Deuill fetch his denomination: They were many, yet they say, My name, not, Our name; though many, they speake as one, they act as one, in this possession: There is a maruellous accordance euen betwixt euill spirits; that Kingdome is not diuided, for then it could not stand; I wonder not that wicked men doe so conspire in euill, that there is such vnanimitie in the broachers, and abettors of errours, when I see those Deuils, which are many in substance, are one in name, action, habitation: Who can bragge too much of vnitie, when it is incident into wicked spirits? All the praise of concord is in the subiect; if that be holy, the consent is Angelicall, if sinfull, deuillish.

What a fearefull aduantage haue our spirituall enemies against vs? If armed troopes come against single straglers, what hope is there of life, of victory? How much doth it concerne vs to band our hearts together, in a communion of Saints? Our enemies come vpon vs like a torrent: Oh let not vs runne asunder like drops in the dust: All our vnited forces will bee little enough, to make head against this league of destruction.

Legion imports Order, number, conflict. Order, in that there is a distinction of regiment, a subordination of Officers: Though in hell there be confusion of faces, yet not confusion of degrees; Number, Those that haue reckoned a Legion at the lowest, haue counted it six thousand: others, haue more then doubled it, though here it is not strict, but figurative, yet the letter of it implyes multitude: How fearefull is the consideration of the number of Apostate Angels? And if a Legion can attend one man, how many must we needs thinke are they, who, all the world ouer, are at hand, to the punishment of the wicked, the exercise of the good, the tentation of both? It cannot be hoped there can be any place, or time, wherein we may be secure from the onsets of these enemies: Be sure, ye lewd men, ye shall want no furtherance to euill, no torment for euill: Be sure, yee godly, yee shall not want combatants to try your strength, and skill: Awaken your courages to resist, and stirre vp your hearts, make sure the meanes of your safety: There are more with vs then against vs: The God of heauen is with vs, if we be with him: and our Angels behold the face of God: If euery deuill were a Legion, wee are safe: Though we walke through the valley of the shadow of death, we shall feare no euill: Thou, O Lord, shalt stretch forth thine hand against the wrath of our enemies, and thy right hand shall saue vs.

Conflict: All this number is not for sight, for rest; but for motion, for action; Neither was there euer houre, since the first blow giuen to our first Parents, wherein there was so much as a truce betwixt these aduersaries. As therefore strong frontier Townes, when there is a peace concluded on both parts, breake vp their garison, open their gates, neglect their Bulwarkes: but, when they heare of the enemy mustering his forces, in great and vnequall numbers, then they double their guard; keepe Sentinell, repaire their Sconces; so must we, vpon the certaine knowledge of our numerous, and deadly enemies, in continuall aray against vs, addresse our selues alwayes to a wary and strong resistance. I doe not obserue the most to thinke of this ghostly hostilitie, Either they doe not find there are tentations, or those tentations hurtfull; they see no worse then themselues: and if they feele motions of euill, arising in them, they impute it to fancy, or vnreasonable appetite; to no power, but natures; and, those motions they follow, without sensible hurt; neither see they what harme it is to sinne: Is it any maruell that carnall eyes cannot discerne spirituall obiects? That the world who is the friend, the vassall of Satan, is in no warre with him? Elisha's seruant, when his eyes were opened, saw troops of spirituall souldiers, which before hee discerned not: If the eyes of our soules be once enlightened by supernaturall knowledge, and the cleare beames of faith, wee shall as plainely descry the inuisible powers of wickednesse, as now our bodily eyes see heauen, and earth. They are, though we see them not; we cannot be safe from them, if we doe not acknowledge, not oppose them.

The Deuils are now become great sutors to Christ: That hee would not command them into the deepe; that hee would permit their entrance into the swine. What is this deepe but hell? both for the vtter separation from the face of God; and for the impossibility of passage to the region of rest and glory? The very euill spirits, then, feare, and expect a further degree of torment; they know themselues reserued in those chaines of darknesse for the iudgement of the great day: There is the same wages due to their sinnes, and to ours; neither are the wages paid till the worke bee done; they tempting men to sinne, must needes sinne grieuously in tempting, as with vs men those that mislead into sinne, offend more then the actors; not till the vpshot therefore of their wickednesse shall they receiue the full measure of their condemnation: This day, this deepe they tremble at: what shall I say of those men that feare it not? It is hard for men to beleeue their owne vnbeliefe: If they were perswaded of this fiery dungeon, this bottomlesse deepe, wherin euery sinne shall receiue an horrible portion with the damned, durst they stretch forth their hands to wickednesse? No man will put his hand into a fiery crucible to fetch gold thence, because hee knowes is will burne him: Did wee as truely beleeue the euerlasting burning of that infernall fire, we durst not offer to fetch pleasures, or profits, out of the midst of those flames.

This degree of torment they grant in Christs power to command, they knew his power vnresistible, had hee therefore but said, Backe to hell whence yee came, they could no more haue staid vpon earth, then they can now climbe into heauen. O the wonderfull dispensation of the Almighty, who though hee could command all the euill spirits downe to their dungeons in an instant; so as they should haue no more opportunity of temptation, yet thinkes fit to retaine them vpon earth: It is not out of weaknesse, or improuidence of that diuine hand, that wicked spirits tyrannize here vpon earth, but out of the most wise, and most holy ordination of God, who knowes how to turne euill into good; how to fetch good out of euill; and by the worst instruments to bring about his most iust decrees: Oh that wee could adore that awfull, and infinite power, and cheerefully cast our selues vpon that prouidence, which keepes the Keyes euen of hell it selfe, and either lets out, or returnes the Deuils to their places.

Their other suit hath some maruell in mouing it, more in the grant; That they might bee suffered to enter into the Herd of Swine. It was their ambition of some mischiefe, that brought forth this desire: that since they might not vexe the body of man, they might yet afflict men in their goods: The malice of these enuious spirits reacheth from vs, to ours: It is sore against their wills, if wee be not euery way miserable: if the Swine were legally vncleane for the vse of the table, yet they were naturally good: Had not Satan knowne them vsefull for man, he had neuer desired their ruine: But as Fencers will seeme to fetch a blow at the legge, when they intend it at the head, so doth this Deuill; whiles he driues at the Swine, hee aimes at the soules of these Gadarens: by this meanes, he hoped well (and his hope was not vaine) to worke in these Gergesens a discontentment at Christ, an vnwillingnesse to entertaine him, a desire of his absence; hee meant to turne them into Swine, by the losse of their Swine: It was not the rafters, or stones of the house of Iobs children, that he bore the grudge to, but to the owners; nor to the liues of the children so much, as the soule of their father: There is no affliction wherein he doth not strike at the heart; which, whiles it holds free, all other dammages are light; but a wounded spirit (whether with sinne or ſorrow) who can beare? Whatcuer becomes of goods, or limmes, happy are we if(like wiſe ſouldiers)we guard the vital parts; whiles the ſoule is kept ſound from impatience, from diſtruſt, our enemy may afflict vs, he cannot hurt vs.

They ſue for a ſufferance; not daring other then to grant, that without the permiſſion of Chriſt, they could not hurt a very ſwine: If it be fearefull to thinke how great things euill ſpirits can doe with permiſſion: it is comfortable to thinke how nothing they can doe without permiſſion: Wee know they want not malice to deſtroy the whole frame of Gods worke; but of all, man; of all men, Chriſtians: but if without leaue they cannot ſet vpon an hogge, what can they doe to the liuing Images of their Creator? They cannot offer vs ſo much as a ſuggeſtion, without the permiſſion of our Sauiour: And can he that would giue his owne moſt precious blood for vs, to ſaue vs from euill, wilfully giue vs ouer to euill?

It is no newes that wicked ſpirits wiſh to doe miſchiefe, it is newes that they are allowed it: if the owner of all things ſhould ſtand vpon his abſolute command, who can challenge him for what hee thinkes fit to doe with his creature? The firſt Foſe of the Aſſe is commanded, vnder the law, to haue his necke broken, what is that to vs? The creatures doe that they were made for, if they may ſerue any way to the glory of their Maker: But, ſeldome euer doth GOD leaue his actions vnfurniſhed with ſuch reaſons, as our weakeneſſe may reach vnto. There were ſects amongſt theſe Iewes that denied ſpirits, they could not bee more euidently, more powerfully conuinced then by this euent: Now ſhall the Gadarens ſee from what a multitude of deuils they were deliuered; and how eaſie it had beene for the ſame power to haue allowed theſe ſpirits to ſeize vpon their perſons, as well as their Swine: Neither did GOD this without a iuſt purpoſe of their caſtigation: His iudgements are righteous, where they are moſt ſecret; Though we cannot accuſe theſe inhabitants of ought, yet hee could; and thought good thus to mulct them: And if they had not wanted grace to acknowledge it, it was no ſmall fauour of GOD, that hee would puniſh them in their Swine, for that, which hee might haue auenged vpon their bodies, and ſoules: Our goods are futtheſt off vs: If but in theſe wee ſmart, wee muſt confeſſe to finde mercy.

Sometimes it pleaſeth GOD to grant the ſuits of wicked men, and ſpirits, in no fauour to the ſuitors: He grants an ill ſuit, and withholds a good: He grants an ill ſuit in iudgement, and holds backe a good one, in mercy: The Iſraelites aske meate; hee giues Quailes to their mouthes, and leanneſſe to their ſoules: The choſen veſſell wiſhes Satan taken off, and heares onely, My grace is ſufficient for thee: Wee may not euermore meaſure fauour by condeſcent: Theſe Deuills doubtleſſe receiue more puniſhment for that harmefull act, wherein they are heard. If wee aske what is either vnfit to receiue, or vnlawfull to begge, it is a great fauour of our GOD to be denied.

Thoſe ſpirits which would goe into the Swine by permiſſion, goe out of the man by command; they had ſtayed long, and are ejected ſuddenly: The immediate works of GOD are perfect in an inſtant, and doe not require the ayde of time for their maturation.

No ſooner are they caſt out of the man, then they are in the Swine: They will leeſe no time, but paſſe without intermiſſion from one miſchiefe to another: If they hold it a paine not to be doing of euill, Why is it not our delight to bee euer doing good? The impetuouſneſſe was no leſſe then the ſpeede, The Herd was caried with violence from a ſteepe-downe place into the lake, and was choaked. It is no ſmall force that could doe this; but if the Swine had beene ſo many mountaines, theſe ſpirits, vpon GODS permiſſion, had thus tranſported them: How eaſily can they carie thoſe ſoules (which are vnder their power,) to deſtruction? Vncleane beaſts that wallow in the mire of ſenſualitie, brutiſh drunkards, transforming themſelues by exceſſe, euen they are the Swine, whom the Legion caries headlong to the pit of perdition.

The wicked spirits haue their wish; The Swine are choked in the waues; What ease is this to them? Good God; that there should bee any creature that seekes contentment in destroying, in tormenting the good creatures of their Maker! This is the diet of hell: Those fiends feed vpon spight towards man, so much more, as he doth more resemble his Creator: Towards all other liuing substances, so much more as they may be more vsefull to man.

The Swine ran downe violently, what maruell is it if their Keepers fled; that miraculous worke which should haue drawne them to Christ, driues them from him: They run with the newes: the country comes in with clamour: The whole multitude of the country about, besought him to depart: The multitude is a beast of many-heads; euery head hath a seuerall mouth, and euery mouth with a seuerall tongue, and euery tongue a seuerall accent: Euery head hath a seuerall braine, and euery braine thoughts of their owne; so as it is hard to find a multitude, without some diuision: At least seldome euer hath a good motion found a perfect accordance; it is not so infrequent for a multitude to conspire in euill: Generalitie of assent is no warrant for any act: Common errour caries away many, who inquire not into the reason of ought, but the practise: The way to hell is a beaten road through the many feet that tread it; when vice grows into fashion, singularitie is a vertue.

There was not a Gadarene found, that either dehorted their fellowes, or opposed the motion: it is a signe of people giuen vp to iudgment, when no man makes head against proiects of euill. Alas, what can one strong man doe against a whole throng of wickednesse? Yet this good comes of an vnpreuailing resistance, that God forbeares to plague, where he finds but a sprinkling of faith: happy are they, who (like vnto the celestiall bodies, which being caried about, with the sway of the highest sphere, yet creepe on their owne wayes) keepe on the courses of their owne holinesse, against the swinge of common corruptions: They shall both deliuer their owne soules, and helpe to withhold iudgement from others.

The Gadarenes sue to Christ for his departure: It is too much fauour to attribute this to their modesty, as if they held themselues vnworthy of so diuine a guest: Why then did they fall vpon this suit in a time of their losse? Why did they not taxe themselues, and intimate a secret desire of that, which they durst not begge? It it too much rigour to attribute it to the loue of their hogges, and an anger at their losse: then, they had not intreated, but expelled him; It was their feare that moued this harsh suit: A seruile feare of danger to their persons, to their goods: Lest he that could so absolutely command the Deuils, should haue set these tormentors vpon them: Lest their other Demoniacks should bee dispossessed with like losse. I cannot blame these Gadarens that they feared: This power was worthy of trembling at; Their feare was vniust; They should haue argued, This man hath power ouer men, beasts, deuils, it is good hauing him to our friend; his presence is our safety and protection: Now they contrarily misinferre, Thus powerfull is he, it is good he were further off; What miserable and pernicious misconstructions doe men make of God, of diuine attributes, and actions? God is omnipotent, able to take infinite vengeance of sinne, Oh that he were not; He is prouident, I may bee careless; Hee is mercifull, I may sinne; Hee is holy, Let him depart from me, for I am a sinfull man: How witty sophisters are naturall men to deceiue their owne soules, to rob themselues of a God? Oh Sauiour, how worthy are they to want thee, that wish to be rid of thee? Thou hast iust cause to bee weary of vs, euen whiles we sue to hold thee: but when once our wretched vnthankfulnesse growes weary of thee, who can pitie vs to bee punished with thy departure? Who can say it is other then righteous, that thou shouldest regest one day vpon vs, Depart from me yee wicked.
